framers of the Government. Without warrant from the people, and in reckless disregard of the paramount interests of the country, they have renewed the assault and are seeking to strike it down and to degrade it to the condition of the basest metals as mere merchandise, notwithstanding all the prophecies of evil which they indulged as to the effect of remonetization, have been falsified by actual results.

They predicted that silver remonetization would drive gold away from the country. Well, what if it had? Gold is proverbially a selfish and timid coin. It always seeks its hiding-place in times of peril and trial, while silver, bold and generous, comes to the front when it is needed. But the prophecy that gold would take the wings of the morning and fly away has not been fulfilled.

There were in the country in round numbers $230,000,000 of gold when the silver-coinage act of 1878 was passed. There are now in round numbers $630,000,000 of gold in the country, in the face of the prediction that the coinage of silver would banish gold, and in the face of the preposterous declaration which is sometimes heard that it is even now doing its fearful work of driving away the yellow metal—gold. How it perverts men's reason and sways their judgment and contradicts the palpable evidence of their own senses, suggesting the language of the great poet of nature:

> This yellow slave
> Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd;
> Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,
> And give them title, knee, and approbation,
> With senators on the bench.

[Applause.]

Again, it was said that the silver-coinage act would destroy the credit of the Government. The reverse has been the result. Simultaneously with the passage of the law its credit improved, and its securities were more sought than ever by capitalists for safe investment, upon better terms than ever before.

It should be stated to the credit of the law of 1878 that it rendered resumption possible. If the fund mongers had been permitted to demand gold exclusively for greenbacks, resumption would have been a failure, and the Government would have been discredited.

Again it was predicted that the standard silver dollar would not enter into circulation. It was resurrected, so to speak, with a brand upon it. The distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] says that the act upon its face "was an impeachment of free coinage." I will accept the word. Silver coinage was "impeached" and condemned, too, without a crime. It had performed all its functions faithfully, and was stricken down in the midst of its usefulness. Hitherto it had stood upon an equal footing with gold. Now it is divested of its function as a unit of value, and its coinage is limited as a sign of its unfitness for the uses of money. It was confided to the keeping of unfriendly administrators, who advertised that it was not good enough for the favored, untaxed classes whose capital consists of United States bonds.

The national banks took the cue and disparaged it. The clearing-houses discredited it. Wall street, the great money center, raised the hue and cry against it, and it was echoed by the Bondholding Directory and their pensioned organs throughout all the land, but without avail. It possessed the confidence of the honest, toiling masses. They did not depreciate nor discount it. They took it for what it was worth, for what the Government had stamped it—100 cents. They bore it up by their generous confidence and loyal support. It entered rapidly into circulation. Money which was intrinsically valuable became more plentiful. The country became more prosperous. Agriculture and its handmaid, commerce, revived. Manufacturing, mining, and railroad building received a new impetus, especially in my own lately desolated section, the South, whose mountains and valleys are resounding with the whir and hum of machinery and the thunder of the iron-horse. What greater evidence could be given of the wisdom of a measure than that it has imparted new life to all the agencies of industry and prosperity?

It is preposterous to argue, in the face of results like these, that the coinage of silver should be discontinued. Nevertheless it is done, and upon the following grounds, in addition to others that have already been reviewed:

First. That it is impracticable to continue the two metals side by side as equal legal tenders.

Second. That the demonetization of silver by England, Germany, and lesser European powers necessitates the adoption of a similar policy by the United States.

Third. That to continue the use of the two metals, and thus give to the debtor class the option to pay in that which happens to be commercially cheaper, is unjust to the creditor class.

The first argument is abundantly answered by the experience of our own and other countries in which the two metals have been in constant and simultaneous use. France is a noteworthy example that the maintenance of the two metals is practicable and beneficial. She circulates in round numbers nine hundred and fifty millions of gold and five hundred and fifty millions of silver with great advantage to the industrial condition of the country. And thus is demonstrated the practicability of using both metals as money, and the evidence is conclusive that neither will drive the other away if the Government in its strength determines to sustain both.

As to the argument founded upon the policy of England and Germany, it seems not to have been remembered by those who employ it that they are both creditor nations and are following their self-interest in urging a policy which will appreciate gold.

England demonetized silver in 1816; and the discovery has been but recently made that this country should follow her example.

Germany demonetized silver in 1872, after she had filled her coffers with a war-indemnity fund of $1,250,000,000 of gold. She then believed that it would be her true policy to appreciate the value of gold and to depreciate the value of silver. But it seems to have been overlooked that in adhering to the policy of these countries we will separate ourselves from the large majority of nations that use gold and silver, or silver only. The following table will throw a flood of light upon this subject:

SILVER STANDARD.

Countries.	Population.	Countries.	Population.
Russia	76,000,000	Peru	3,400,000
Austria	36,000,000	China	400,000,000
Egypt	4,500,000	British India	237,144,456
Mexico	8,000,000
Central America	2,600,000	Total	768,944,456
Ecuador	1,300,000

DOUBLE STANDARD.

Greece	1,400,000	France	36,000,000
Roumania	4,000,000	Belgium	5,000,000
Colombia	2,900,000	Switzerland	2,700,000
Venezuela	1,900,000	Italy	26,800,000
Chilli	1,600,000	Spain	16,400,000
Uruguay	400,000	United States	50,000,000
Paraguay	1,200,000
Japan	33,000,000	Total	187,300,000
Holland	3,700,000

GOLD STANDARD.

Great Britain	32,000,000	Norway	1,780,000
Canada, Cape of Good Hope, and Australian colonies	7,000,000	Sweden	4,300,000
Germany	42,000,000	Total	87,080,000

The desirability of a uniform monetary system among the commercial countries is unquestioned. To this end repeated efforts have been made. Notably in 1878 and 1882. In the International Monetary Conferences of those years the United States was represented by its ablest statesmen and economists of both the political parties. They were all failures. Nothing better could have been expected. The conditions of each country are different, and it is reasonable that each would follow its own interest. It is the prerogative of every government to coin its own money, and to regulate the value thereof. A matter so purely of internal administration can not be regulated by international agreement. The United States must have a policy of its own, which she can not with justice to herself subordinate to the interest, dictation, or caprice of any other power.

In arguing that the silver coinage law operates unjustly upon the creditor class, and especially the holders of United States bonds, the gold monometallists are inconsistent. In one breath they assert that the United States bonds are not payable in silver, and in another they declare that it should be demonetized in order to take away the option to pay in the cheaper money. If the bonds are not payable in silver, then no injury can result to that class of creditors by retaining its legal-tender property. But, in truth, the law constitutes both gold and silver egal tender for all debts due from one individual to another and for every obligation which the Government owes. The contract between the Government and the bondholders, who instigated the crusade against silver, makes the bonds payable in coin. Coin means gold and silver, and the bonds are dischargeable in either. The act of March, 1869, entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," is conclusive of this fact. It says:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all just obligations to the public creditors, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the laws by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver. But none of said interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity unless at such time United States notes shall be convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin. And the United States also solemnly pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin.

Approved March 18, 1869.

And here is what is written upon the face of all the bonds. I will take for example the 4 per cent. bonds:

This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1907, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of October, January, April, and July in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

This is the contract. It says that the bonds shall be paid in "coin," meaning gold and silver.

Again, in January, 1878, both Houses of Congress passed the following resolution, which was introduced in the Senate by Hon. Stanley Matthews, who is now an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States:

That all the bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

The resolutions passed the Senate by a vote of 42 to 20, and the House by a vote of 189 to 79. It is conclusive that the contract between the Government and the bondholders makes the bonds payable in either coin at the option of the Government. And yet, in the face of a law so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, could not err therein, its administrators have arbitrarily assumed that the bonds are payable only with gold, and with gold only they have been paying them, principal and interest. By this reckless disregard of the law and favoritism to a privileged class the people who pay the taxes for the support of the Government have been defrauded.

The opposers of the coinage of silver are not agreed among themselves as to the proper remedy for the evils which they assert it is producing. Some propose to suspend its coinage temporarily, thinking, no doubt, that it will be a long stride toward permanent demonetization. The London Economist, an influential organ of British opinion, says that the argument that its temporary suspension will force England and Germany into bimetallism is without foundation; that the effect will be directly the reverse; that it will be accepted as an admission on the part of the United States that bimetallism is a failure. The proposition is a shrewd invention of the demonetizers, who believe if the backward step is once taken it will never be retraced.

Others propose to add more bullion to the silver dollar, in order, as they assert, to equalize its value with the gold dollar. A difficulty in the way of this proposition springs out of the nature of contracts, which make the existing silver dollar a fixture.

The public debt of the United States in round numbers is $1,500,000,000, to say nothing of the billions of State, county, municipal, and private indebtedness. Assume that the silver dollar is worth but 80 cents, and add 20 cents to it, and the national debt will be increased $300,000,000. To that extent the tax-payers would be robbed.

It was said by Alexander Hamilton that "in fixing a money standard a government can not depreciate the existing measure of contracts to the injury of creditors, nor appreciate them to the detriment of debtors." If the commercial values of the two metals must be equalized, let the gold dollar be decreased. Gold has gone up. Silver has not gone down. It has the same purchasing power that it always had, notwithstanding its unfriendly treatment by the constituted authorities of the land.

Mr. BLAND. It has a greater purchasing power than ever before.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will accept the statement of my friend from Missouri. There is no man whose knowledge of this subject is superior to his.

Even if a new relation was established between the two metals, there is no certainty that it would be permanent, or that the nations that had discarded silver would restore it to its monetary functions.

I apprehend that while the addition of more grains to the dollar would unsettle values, defraud the debtor class, discredit the silver coin already in circulation, and throw the currency into disorder, it would not produce a permanent equation in the commercial value of the two metals. History shows that there have been constant fluctuation in their values. In Greece, centuries before the Christian era, the relation of gold to silver was 1 to 10. In the palmy days of Rome, when her eagles flew where they listed, the relation was 1 to 18. In England it was 1 to 15½. In France and the Latin countries it is 1 to 15. In Mexico and the Central American States it is 1 to 16. In the Asiatic countries the relations are varied, but in no instance is the difference so wide. In the United States, during the first half century of the Government, under the law framed by its founders, it was 1 to 15. It is now 1 to 16. And finally the American dollar of 412½ grains standard silver, is the equal in weight and fineness to the dollar coined by any other nation on the globe.

Mr. Speaker, I will support the bill which aims to bring back the Government to the position from which it departed prior to 1873—the coinage of both metals on equal conditions. Nature has adapted them both to the uses of money, and mankind in every age and clime, with unerring instinct, has obeyed her law. As money, they have been the contemporary of all ages. They were the metallic money of the American colonies; and when the Union was formed they became the money of the Constitution, as that instrument and the statutes founded upon it attest. The framers of the law of 1792 designed that no preference should be given to either metal. The country rested content with the plan of the fathers, until the Bondholding Directory and other interested classes conspired to overthrow it. To the opinion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY], that "gold is king," I will oppose the testimony of the ages, and the example of our fathers, all expressed in the incontrovertible statement of an eminent writer upon monetary science, before whose researches the learning of that distinguished gentleman will pale its ineffectual fires, that "the history of all ages, and that science whose inevitable laws human society strictly observes, though no pen has formulated them, prove that gold and silver are equally good. Mankind has ever used both, and will ever use both, despite local and temporary exceptions." Gold may be crowned king by the plutocracy and privileged classes of Europe, but in this country of free thought, free speech, and free action, public opinion, like a thunderbolt, will shiver its scepter to atoms. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, availing myself of the latitude allowed for debate in Committee of the Whole, I desire to occupy a few minutes in presenting a matter of great importance to some of my constituents. It is to be supposed that the process of making wire is understood by the members of this House. The iron is rolled into small round rods. These rods are known as "wire rods." They are then drawn through gauges successively smaller in diameter until the size of wire required is reached. It will be readily seen that while to the wire-drawer these rods are "raw material," to the owner of a rolling-mill they are "finished product." Upon these rods the import duty levied up to the year 1883 was 1½ cents per pound.

The act of 1883 reimposed the duty, but reduced in a paragraph worded as follows:

Round iron, in coils or rods less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter, and bars or shapes of rolled iron, not specifically enumerated or provided for in the act, at 1.2 cents per pound.

But this last act contains another provision—a provision which in that act appears, I believe, upon the statute-books of the United States for the first time. It reads as follows:

Iron or steel rivet, screw, nail, and fence-wire rods, round, in coils and loops, not lighter than No. 5 wire-gauge valued at 3½ cents per pound, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

This last provision was inserted, I am informed, at the request of certain manufacturers of barbed-wire fencing, and against the earnest efforts of both producers and consumers of wire rod in my own section. The effect of this new provision was instantaneous and disastrous. As will be seen, the two provisions are practically the same. All the articles enumerated at the higher rate could be imported, under the second provision, at the lower rate, and instead of paying a duty of one and two-tenths of a cent per pound, pay the lower duty of only six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

By this great reduction in the rate it became cheaper to import wire rods than to make them here. Our own mills could not stand the competition, and were compelled to close. Hundreds of men in my own city were thrown out of employment and left with no provision for the future, save the small savings that years of the hardest toil and severest economy had enabled them to lay by for the necessities of declining age. The years have passed, the importations continue, the savings are long since exhausted, and strong men to-day turn away as their children ask for bread, because they have no bread to give. They are willing and anxious to work, but "no man hath hired them."

In the year ending June 30, 1884, there were imported into this country under this last provision 192,633,204 pounds of wire rods, at a value of $3,382,335.22, and for the year succeeding 146,111,277 pounds, at a value of $2,481,632.16, while for the seven months ending December 31, 1885, this importation was 141,300,665 pounds, valued at $1,915,872. Sir, we hear much about overproduction and underconsumption. In my judgment our great trouble is not these, but overimportation. Here, in two years and seven months, of this one article alone we have imported 480,545,146 pounds, every pound of which could have been produced here and afforded employment for our own people. And it will be noticed that the importation for the last seven months was nearly as large as for the whole of the preceding year.

Knowing how many of my constituents were suffering from this competition, I appeared some time ago before the Committee on Ways and Means and called the attention of the committee to this trouble. On that occasion Mr. Daniel Haggerty, of Trenton, N. J., a very intelligent wire-worker in one of our mills, accompanied me and made a most earnest plea for his fellow-workmen. I can not do better than to read as a part of my remarks a portion of his clear and straightforward statement. He said:

In our city there is another industry besides pottery, and that is the wire-rod industry. As Judge Buchanan stated, the tariff of 1883 was an injustice. The passage of that bill has been the means of throwing from two hundred to three hundred men out of employment altogether, men that were employed steadily previous to the passage of this bill in 1883, and those that have continued to work in the rolling-mill department and any other department have been working from two to three days a week, and their wages have been reduced from 20 to 30 per cent. These men that have been thrown out of employment consider that it is an injustice; perhaps it was overlooked by Congress. The bill they know was passed in haste, and they did not know of it until they read it in the newspapers and observed that the bill had been passed in the House, and they hope you will give them some relief in the revision of the tariff at this time. They request a section inserted in the Morrison tariff bill on page 8, line 116, between the words "act" and "one," "an iron or steel rivet screw nail, and fence-wire rods in coils and loops not lighter than No. 5, wire-gauge." Now, this is about the size of the wire that is being imported; in some cases it is an inferior grade. The consumer may think if the goods are cheap and made into rope it is a good article, and it has legislation in its favor.

On the other hand, this manufacturer in a foreign country, we knowing of the character of the material in it—to a certain extent it may be tested, and it may not be perhaps—I say perhaps, because I can not prove it, that the manufacturer stands in with the agent that tests it. * * * The consequence was these men were thrown out of employment. Is that fair? And that has not only been done in Trenton, but in other places where wire-rod industries exist. I have not any statistics to present, believing that the best argument was the argument that these men have been thrown out of employment and the wages reduced.

Other interests were struggling for recognition, and our suggestions remained unheeded. Finding that the bill upon which we hoped to attach our proposition as an amendment was not likely to be reported, I embraced the opportunity the rules afford to offer, March 22 last, in the House, a separate bill upon the subject. This bill reads as follows:

A bill correcting an error in the act entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxes, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provision in "Schedule C, Metals" of section number 2502, title 33, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," and which provision reads as follows, to wit: "Iron or steel rivet, screw, nail, and fence-wire rods, round, in coils and loops, not lighter than number 5 wire-gauge, valued at 3½ cents or less per pound, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound," be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and that the provision in said section which reads as follows, to wit: "Round iron, in coils or rods, less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter, and bars or shapes of rolled iron, not specifically enumerated or provided for in this act, one and two-tenths of 1 cent per pound," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "Round iron, in coils or rods, less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter; iron or steel rivet, screw, nail, and fence-wire rods, round, in coils and loops, not lighter than number 5 wire-gauge; and bars or shapes of rolled iron, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, one and two-tenths of 1 cent per pound;" and that from and after the passage of this act the duties to be assessed and collected upon all imports embraced within the terms of said provision, as so amended, shall be assessed and collected at said last-named rate, and not otherwise.

That bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and there "sleeps the sleep of the righteous." It is not reported, and efforts to have it reported are so far fruitless. Political platforms are poor provender for American workmen. Free trade may be a beautiful theory to please the Yale or Harvard student, but actual experience of the effects of this one example of lowering duties has brought no pleasure to these cheerless homes. These barbed-wire manufacturers, protected by their United States letters patent on their inventions, secure their material lower, and sell their goods no lower, relatively, than before, while American workmen go unemployed. In the name of honest labor I demand that this error be corrected, and that at once.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, it has been officially stated to the American Congress that the further coinage of silver at the rate of about $2,000,000 per month would prove disastrous to our country and result in driving out our gold, contracting our currency, and precipitating upon our people all the evils of a debased coinage. The remedy proposed for the threatened evil is a suspension of the silver coinage in order to keep it from driving out the gold. It is said that our persistence in the coinage of silver will be to make this country the "dumping ground" for all the silver in the world, to our financial destruction.

These statements are sufficiently alarming if made by one even not in authority, but coming from the Executive in the discharge of his constitutional duty from time to time to communicate to Congress his views upon great questions affecting the prosperity of the people and the state of the Union, they bear the stamp of official authority and make it incumbent on every one to weigh them well and see if they come up to the requisite "standard of weight and fineness" to warrant us in giving them currency by Congressional action.

It will be perceived that the statements indulge more in prophecy than history. They do not recount evils that have already happened so much as predict those that are to come. "We have but one lamp by which our feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience." Let us turn on this malign prophecy this light, and see whether anything in the monetary history of this or any other country affords a reasonable ground for such apprehensions.

We find that in France the circulation of silver is $14 per capita of population. In Holland the circulation of silver is $11.60 per capita. This rate is maintained in actual circulation in those countries side by side with a gold circulation in France of $22.37 per capita and in Holland with at least an equal amount of gold with that of our own people. The peoples of these two countries are as prosperous, business is as good, as in any European country; nay, they are more thrifty than in any other.

Why is it that the evils threatened here have not occurred there? They are nearer the circle of the monometallic maelstrom, and if our metals are to "part company," why is it that their gold is not swept away from them into its vortex and their finances deranged and business interests injured? The French bimetallic system has been in existence for eighty years and more and that of Holland perhaps as long.

France has paid or is paying Germany the greatest war exaction in history—paying it in gold—and yet our minister to that court says that "France could not be induced to change her present rates of 15½ to 1 between silver and gold for ours of 16 to 1, nor would she permit even a restricted coinage of silver." France has a population of, say, 40,000,000, in round numbers, and has one-eighteenth of our territory. Belgium has at this time at least $9.21 legal-tender silver per capita of population circulating side by side with $11.13 per capita of gold. The United States has of silver only $3.80 per capita for our 56,000,000 of population. It is, then, difficult to see from these data where our danger lies.

But is it true that gold is leaving France and other European states? In the last ten years the imports of gold into France has amounted to $646,737,000; exports of gold to $371,618,000; excess of imports over exports $275,119,000. In other words, there has been gained by France in gold importation from other countries $275,119,000 up to 1884, and this sum was increased last year to $290,000,000. And, singular as it may seem, the largest gain in any one year was in the year of 1876, during which year silver fell to 46½ pence in London, to that date the lowest of low prices. The same thing is true of Holland, which has not lost her gold, although circulating silver to the amount of $13.41 per capita. So also with Belgium. Spain, in the five years ending with 1884, coined $64,487,375 in gold, and has suffered no drain of that coin. Italy acquired eighty millions of gold up to 1882, when she resumed specie payments. Germany, theorists and doctrinaires to the contrary notwithstanding, is as practically a bimetallic country as the United States. The Imperial Bank of Germany had on hand on the 28th January of this year in its vaults $75,000,000 in thalers, legal-tender silver. This notwithstanding her attempt at draining France of her gold by her exaction of millions of that metal. Von Deschend, the head of that bank, says:

The administration of the Imperial Bank has been obliged to confine the redemption in gold of notes to the main bank. * * * Our condition is in so far better, as a great amount of the old silver has in the mean while been sold and foreign countries can only make payments to us in gold, and for the reason that the Imperial Bank still has the right to redeem its notes with thalers. That it has made no use of this right, but redeemed all its notes in gold, does not alter this. Foreign countries know we are not lawfully compelled to redeem in gold only, and can not count on us with certainty should they need gold.

But it may be said that peculiar causes not operative here have promoted the efflux of gold from bimetallic to monometallic countries in Europe, and that the threatened evil will ensue here, these examples to the contrary notwithstanding. What is the history of our own country since the Bland act? The amount of gold coin and bullion estimated to be in this country on the 1st July, 1878, was $247,428,570; the amount of gold coin and bullion in the United States July 1, 1885, is officially reported to be $609,021,730. In the seven years beginning with the 30th of June, 1878, three months after the coinage of standard silver dollars commenced, the imports and exports of gold were as follows:

Imports, gold	$288,076,812
Exports, gold	104,550,401
Gain of gold from 1879 to 1885, inclusive	183,526,411

During six of these seven fiscal years there was a net import of gold amounting to $201,759,071, and a net export of gold in only one year, 1884, of $18,250,440, which exportation, as has been alleged without contradiction, was "less than the addition made to our gold from domestic mines after supplying the consumption in the arts."

We have up to date in this present year imported more gold than we have exported.

The total net export of silver for the same seven years was $60,172,185. It was going out, while gold, as before shown, was coming in.

Another fact seems to be indisputable; that is, that we have less of silver per capita of population, and that there is no redundancy of that coinage with our people, and that the continued coinage of silver at the present rate for the next five years would not add more than $2.50 per head to the money of the country, making the total per head of $6.50, being $7.50 per head less than the French and $5.10 less than the Netherlands are now carrying without detriment to any interest.

If France should reduce her currency to the basis the people of the United States would have should we stop the coinage of silver, it would result in a contraction of her currency which would bring financial wreck upon that people, as shown by the following table, prepared for me by Mr. Jordan, editor of the Mining Journal at New York, to whom I am indebted for much statistical and other information in this speech:

	Present circulation in France.		Reduced to basis of circulation in United States.
	Amount.	Per capita.	Amount.	Per capita.
Gold	$850,000,000	$22 37	$361,000,000	$9 50
Full-tender silver	540,000,000	14 20½	144,400,000	3 80
Subsidiary silver	52,000,000	1 39½	49,400,000	1 30
Total specie	1,443,000,000	37 97	554,800,000	14 60
Notes of Bank of France, January 9	582,500,000	15 32	524,000,000	13 79
Total paper and specie	2,025,500,000	52 29	1,078,800,000	28 39

That is to say, to place the French people upon a monetary regimen at this time about the same as that which would exist in the United States were Congress to stop the further coinage of silver, they would have to part with—

Gold	$489,000,000
Silver	395,600,000
Subsidiary silver	3,600,000
Coin contraction	888,200,000

Holland, to reduce her volume of currency to a parity per head with that sought to be imposed upon us, would have to expel from her confines $8.30 per head of her silver and call in and cancel $5.70 per head of her paper money, making an aggregate reduction of her money of fully 40 per cent. Belgium, likewise, would have to contract her specie currency 34⅞ per cent. The Australian colonies of monometallic England would be stripped of 40 per cent. of their coins on this theory. The conclusion then would seem inevitable, that not only is it unfounded that a further coinage of silver would drive out our gold, but that we have less per capita now of silver than any nation of Western Europe, and to reduce them to our proposed condition would contract their circulating media to the suffocation of those peoples and the destruction of their material prosperity.

But it is said that our dollar is a short-weight dollar and a dishonest coin that swindles labor of 20 per cent. of its wage, being only worth less than 85 per cent. of the gold "unit of value."

Until 1873, it is an undoubted fact that silver for twenty years had commanded a premium over gold. In that year two events occurred which will long be remembered by the world. In our country silver was covertly demonetized by some "devilish cantrap slight," and the coinage of silver dollars prohibited in an American Congress, without that Congress being aware of it, in a bill professedly to regulate the operations of the Mint. The other event was the demonetization of silver by Bismarck, since which year of disaster prices have steadily declined and markets touched the lowest level of prices ever reached since record of prices began.

Terrible as has been the career of this man of blood and iron, this crowning act of imperial selfishness has entailed hard times with their remorseless grasp upon the world. Austria defeated, Schleswig and Holstein subjugated, France dismembered, Poles expatriated, and the American hog excluded, are some of the achievements which now glitter on his breast. But when he remorsely struck down the standard of values of ten-twelfths of the people of the world, it was the master-stroke of a "heart devoid of social order and fatally bent on mischief." He did it though, boldly and openly. It was done here in the dark, when nobody was aware. England being the creditor nation of the world, with that far-sighted and supreme thrift that has ever characterized her policy, had seventy years before levied tribute upon the debtor nations by requiring payment of debts to her in gold. Thus, by striking down one of the money metals the value of the other is enhanced, and the creditor receives more than he is entitled to.

Since 1873 the price of everything has diminished. Bullion silver ver depreciated in value from its disuse as money; the purchasing power of gold rose in proportion to the reduction of prices and wages. Falling prices mean that the purchasing power of gold is rising. The production of gold has also declined; its consumption in the arts has increased. Thus the gold standard of value has grown scarcer and more valuable. The amount of gold possible to be used as money is diminishing year by year, and there will be no relief possible from the business depression that has bankrupted commerce and manufactures, starved labor, and distressed the poor. Contraction, resulting from demonetizing our metal, forecloses mortgages, and renders onerous public debts, those fixed charges upon property and labor. Upon private indebtedness it piles municipal, county, State, and national debts like Ossa on Pelion, mountain-high.

It seems to be taken for granted that both metals must be used as money in every country, and it is said there is no way out of the difficulty except by international agreement to restore bimetallism; a sort of monetary treaty, by which we may be permitted to give relief to our internal empire and to our colossal national and interstate interests in the Union; that it would be "audacious" for us to maintain our present silver coinage or make it free, for the relief of our people, without arranging terms of a monetary agreement with Europe.

Where, in all history, is the example or precedent for such a treaty? During the thousands of years in which the precious metals have performed the functions of money for the world there has been no international regulation of the subject, much less the coercion of one country to have its business and its values regulated by the standard adopted by another. Who is authorized to legislate for the world? Each nation acts for itself, and in the ages that have flown one has had one metal, another the other metal, while a third has had both. Their circulation as between nations has always been at their bullion and not their coinage value. England demonetized gold three-quarters of a century ago, and although we traded most with her of all the world, the difference between our metallic standards was not considered in any way to our disadvantage, nor did it occur to our fathers that we must be a monometallic nation because England was, to keep our gold from flowing into British coffers.

This international common ratio between silver and gold is an invention of the enemy. It is a ruse de guerre, as wily as the stratagem of a savage, to induce us to surrender the whole fight; and, besides, if that is the remedy, can not we adopt the ratio of 15½ to 1 and reduce the value of our dollar to that of Europe? For it is persistently ignored by all who denounce our silver dollar of 412½ grains that it contains 3 per cent. more silver than is given in at least $950,000,000 of legal-tender silver in Europe and $1,125,000,000 in British India.

In order to demonstrate how utterly dishonest the denunciation of our dollar as a short-weight dollar is, I invite attention to the following table, showing the full legal-tender silver circulation of the leading commercial states of the world, and the value which the same weight of silver would have if coined at the ratio to gold which silver has in our own standard dollar:

Country.	Legal value.	Valued as in U. S. standard dollars.
France	$537,000,000	$520,567,800
Germany	109,480,000	106,100,000
Austria-Hungary	75,000,000	72,700,000
Netherlands	57,000,000	55,250,000
Belgium	53,000,000	51,378,200
Italy	38,000,000	36,837,200
Spain	40,000,000	38,800,000
Switzerland	10,000,000	9,694,000
Turkey	35,400,000	34,310,000
	954,880,000	925,637,000

RECAPITULATION.

European legal-tender silver circulation	$954,880,000
Value of same at ratio to gold of silver standard dollars	925,637,200
Excess of European valuation of silver over that of standard lars	29,242,800

That is to say, if the 412½ grains of silver in the United States standard dollar were coined at the rate at which silver is coined and circulated concurrently with gold in Europe to the extent of $950,000,000, it would be worth more than 103 cents. Now while this is so with the silver circulation of the leading European states, so also the silver circulation of the British Empire, $1,125,000,000, if valued at the ratio to gold that silver has in our standard dollar, would only be worth $1,095,550,000.

Consequently silver now circulates in Europe and British India to the amount of two thousand millions of dollars at a valuation which would make the 412½ grains of the metal in our dollar worth above 103 cents for each one of them. On the 20th January, 1886, there was held in silver, as part of the specie reserve of European banks, as follows:

	Silver.	Value.*
Bank of France	$216,200,000	$229,545,000
Imperial Bank of Germany	75,810,000	85,490,000
Austro-Hungary Bank	65,200,000	34,540,000
Netherlands Bank	40,025,000	19,995,000
	$397,235,000	$369,570,000

*Worth at valuation of United States.

Which is more than 3 per cent. greater at a legal-tender valuation with gold than the value given to silver in our standard dollar.

Until very recently as much as 75 per cent. of the specie reserve of the Imperial Bank of Germany was of silver, valued concurrently with gold in the aggregate $3,348,750 higher than the same weight of silver would have if coined into standard dollars. It is easy, therefore, to see that the dishonesty is not in the dollar, but in the talk about it. The dollar of silver buys as much for our people among our people as the gold dollar, and is worth more in Europe in gold than the silver coin.

If we should cease to coin silver it would leave us with $550,000,000 in gold and $230,000,000 in silver for a population of 56,000,000. The population increases annually on an average of 1,500,000. We would have to look to the gold coinage to supply the deficit of $28,000,000 per annum now coined of silver. A brief review of the situation will show that we could not get the gold to supply the place of the silver.

By all authorities our mines do not yield thirty millions a year, and there is an annual consumption of about thirteen and a half millions a year in the industrial arts.

The total product of the gold mines of the world is estimated to be between ninety-five and eighty-five millions per annum. A mean between the two estimates is ninety millions. This constitutes every dollar yearly added to the world's supply of gold.

Of this, as before stated—

The United States consumes in the arts yearly	$13,500,000
Asia, in other purposes than for money	20,000,000
France and England	30,000,000
Total	63,500,000

To this must be added the amount diverted from coinage by the other nations of the world, whatever it may be, and it will be seen that the available gold for future coinage of the world will be totally inadequate to supply the metallic basis of money throughout the commercial world. At least seventy millions is the annual consumption of the ninety millions annual yield of gold for purposes other than coinage in Asia, the United States, France, and England. This, it will be seen, would leave only twenty millions for the coin supply of the world, when we will need ourselves twenty-eight millions to take the place of our silver. We could not get more, if we secured the whole available product of our own mines not consumed in the arts, than $16,500,000.

In other words, there would be a scarcity of money in our country, already far behind every commercial nation of Europe in the amount of circulation per capita of population.

For the United States to join the other nations in the demonetization of silver means a dearth of specie money in the world. In those years of dearth pharaoh would buy up the birthright of men. Shylock when he whetted his knife for the pound of flesh was simply demonetizing the silver ducats in which his bond was payable. His heart was not more pitiless nor his purpose more cruel than those who deliberately swept away the measure of values of ten-twelfths of the human race.

But it is said that our persistence in the coinage of silver will result in "dumping" all that depreciated metal on us. It is hard to see how this can be when we produce more silver than we consume in coinage and the arts, and Europe has no stock of silver except its silver coinage, on which, as shown, silver is rated at 3 per cent. higher than it is in our dollar and is worth 20 per cent. more there than here.

When pork-hogs are imported to Cincinnati, steers to Texas, wheat and Indian corn to the West, cotton to Mississippi, sour mash to Kentucky, and corn whisky to Robertson County, Tennessee, and when coals are carried to Newcastle, then you may look for the world's silver to be dumped upon us. We have more of all these, silver included, than we can use, and how are we to be made to take what we do not want and want to get rid of?

Still gentlemen insist on the "dumping" theory. Like the valiant hero who—

> Was in the doleful dumps,
> And when his legs were shot away
> He fought upon his stumps,

the last argument is that the way to bimetallism for us is to stop the coinage of silver. The argument is strange in the light of the facts. Silver was at a premium until demonetized. It then sunk below gold because it was demonetized. This was retarded by our coinage act; in fact, demonetization itself was brought to a halt by the passage of the Bland bill. And to restore it you want to demonetize again. The closing of the Mint of the United States against silver will lower its price, widen the breach between it and gold, break down the confidence of the world in it as a measure of values, and render its restoration impossible. In other words, by striking down the value of silver we will restore its value is the reductio ad absurdum. But we are told we are remediless unless England and Germany see proper to release us from our bondage, and we must coerce them by bringing contraction, further depression of prices, commercial and industrial distress.

This atrocious suggestion is to enfold the people of the world in the coils of the constrictor of avarice to be suffocated and crushed. It would render intolerable the burden of debt and destroy production. When the wolf bleats like the lamb and the lion eats straw like the ox you may expect these powers to release their hold upon the labor of mankind. The obvious and only road to bimetallism is to sustain the value of silver by coining it ourselves, reforming our tax system, which takes a surplus from our people and shuts out foreign commerce, and then reach out for the Asiatic and South American trade, where silver is current. It is in our power to control this question by maintaining silver in its rank and place in our own great country as one of the money metals of the world. We control an empire of our own. Our States are of more importance to our national policy than the states of Europe. Let our interstate commerce be regarded and valued at its true weight in the solution of this great question. Our citizens will stand by their Government in its fight against the crowned robbers who are seeking to impoverish mankind. The prophecy of coming disaster by the maintenance of silver coinage has been spoken so often in the last few years that it has ceased to alarm. The panic will not come for another year! Nobody will scare at the coinage of 50 cents a head of our population in silver. The horrid picture of financial wreck fades out in the light of facts, although "the painter played the spider and hath woven a golden mesh to entrap the hearts of men faster than gnats in cobwebs."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, suppose Congress were to authorize unlimited coinage of standard silver dollars, what would be the immediate result? There would be a large addition to our silver circulation; there would be a large profit in bringing silver bullion to the Mint.

The market value of 371.25 grains of fine silver is about equal to that of 18.6 grains of fine gold. But when it has been coined into a silver dollar exchangeable in the market for a gold dollar its value is equal to that of 23.22 grains of fine gold. The profit of coining silver bullion, therefore, so long as the silver dollar and the gold dollar are interchangeable in the market, would be 4.62 grains of fine gold for each silver dollar coined. This profit now goes into the United States Treasury under our present system of limited coinage.

It is true that the whole of this profit could not be realized by everyone who bought silver bullion to send it to the Mint. The law of unlimited coinage would, by the creation of a new and highly profitable use for silver bullion, raise its gold price in this country and Europe. But bullion brokers would compete for silver bullion, after the creation of a new and extra-profitable use, chiefly for the purpose of putting it to the new use, or for the purpose of selling it to some one else who would use it in the same way. Moreover, every bullion broker would understand that the profit of coining silver bullion would decline whenever the silver dollar ceased to be exchangeable in the market for a gold dollar. He would, therefore, understand that the sooner he got his bullion coined into silver dollars the safer he would be. So long as the newly created use for silver bullion continued to be more profitable than other uses, so long as the circulating value of the silver dollar continued to be higher than the worth of 371.25 grains of silver for uses other than American coinage, I believe that silver bullion would flow to the American Mint and be coined into dollars.

Would foreign silver coin also come to the Mint? Some gentlemen say no. It would be excluded, they say, by the laws of trade. French and German silver coin has a value as coin above the value of the bullion contained in it. This additional coinage value would be lost if it were converted into bullion. Bullion it would be and bullion only if shipped from France or Germany to the United States. But as silver bullion in the United States could under a law of unlimited coinage be converted without cost into standard silver dollars, the loss on the whole transaction involved in converting French 5-franc pieces into American silver dollars exchangeable in the market with American gold dollars would be simply the difference between the coinage price of silver in France and the coinage price of silver in the United States. According to the French or German ratio of 1 to 15½ the silver equivalent of a gold dollar would be 359.91 grains of fine silver. According to the American ratio of 1 to 16 it would be 371.25 grains. The difference of 11.34 grains would represent the loss on each dollar's worth of French coin. It would be a loss of about 3 per cent.

Now, it is true that no French or German bullion broker would voluntarily incur the loss of 3 per cent. But the French or German Governments might, if they were anxious, as many persons suppose they are, to part with a portion of their silver circulation and replace it with gold. It would not be a commercial transaction undertaken for the profit of the transaction itself. It would be a measure of state policy. A government in dealing with its currency often takes a step involving an immediate loss for the sake of an ulterior benefit either to the government or to the nation. For instance, it melts down abraded coins for recoinage in order to maintain the standard of weight in its metallic circulation. The transaction is ultimately beneficial to the nation, but it involves an immediate loss to the government.

I shall try to show hereafter that during the last eighteen years Germany and France have shown a disposition to secure a gold currency like that of England. Each has endeavored to obtain it at the expense of the other. Each would be glad to sell to the other silver coin in exchange for gold. Till international bimetallism, or something like it, is established, Germany as well as France would willingly sell silver for American gold. Each would be the more ready to do so because of the belief that the stock of American gold was likely to be secured by the rival country. Each would be influenced by the belief that the opening of the American Mint to silver would for a short time furnish the best opportunity for the sale of European silver that would be offered during the next generation.

The coining price of silver in the American Mint under a law of free coinage would be 1.16\frac{4}{11}$ per ounce $\frac{9}{10}$ fine. This is equivalent to 58.9*d.* sterling per English standard ounce .925 fine, by which sales of silver bullion are usually reckoned in Europe. A law of unlimited coinage would for a time fix the price of silver bullion at about 58.9*d.* sterling per English standard ounce, less the cost of transportation to the American Mint, which would amount to about one-half of 1 per cent. on a shipment of 1,000,000 francs.

Mr. BLAND. Then, in order that there should be that profit, the gentleman admits that free coinage would restore silver to a par with gold at our ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. It would for a time, but——

Mr. BLAND. That is all.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The gentleman does not object to my answering with the limitation which is in my mind.

Mr. BLAND. Not at all. I only wanted to remark that such a thing could not occur except by reason of free coinage putting silver at a par with gold. I contend it will do that.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I believe that free coinage, by the prospect which the foreign bullion-owner would have of bringing his foreign bullion to the American Mint and converting it into silver dollars, would for a time give a high gold price to silver bullion in Europe. This would be conditioned on the possibility not merely of transporting the bullion to the United States Mint and converting it into silver dollars, but also on the possibility of converting those silver dollars into American gold dollars and exporting them. It is the possibility of converting foreign silver into American gold and sending the American gold abroad that would for a time fix the gold price of silver in Europe at nearly 58.9 pence per ounce. The question is whether this price would induce France or Germany to sell silver coin in exchange for American gold.

An answer to this question may be gathered from the following table, showing the prices and amounts of sales of silver withdrawn from circulation by Germany from 1873 to 1879. I take this table from the exhibit presented by Baron von Thielmann to the monetary conference of 1881, reducing the marks to dollars at the rate of four marks to the dollar:

Years.	Price.*	Proceeds of sale.
	Pence.
1873	59 5/8	$2,324,170 69
1874	58 1/2	15,283,917 57
1875	57 1/2	4,552,112 27
1876	52 1/2	23,484,120 59
1877	54 7/16	57,606,059 63
1878	52 9/16	31,550,963 02
1879 to end of May	50	6,983,604 47
Total	53 13/16	141,784,998 25

* Per English standard ounce.

If Germany has sold this large amount of silver at the average price of 53 13/16 pence sterling, can we be sure that Germany and France and other nations of Europe will not sell their silver for American gold if the open American mint fixes the price at 58.9 pence sterling less the cost of transportation?

It is a question to be carefully considered by those advocates of unlimited silver coinage who believe, as one of them recently declared, that if foreign silver coin were likely to be exchanged for American gold the argument against unlimited silver coinage would be conclusive.

How long would a law of unlimited silver coinage continue to give to European nations this opportunity to sell silver coin for American gold at 58.9 pence sterling per English standard ounce, less the cost of transportation? So long as the silver dollar continued to be exchangeable in the American market for a gold dollar; in other words, so long as gold remained in circulation. After the gold had disappeared the silver dollar would begin to depreciate by the continued addition to the volume of circulation, and the profit of coining silver bullion would diminish. It would still be great enough to bring bullion to the Mint till the circulation value of the silver dollar had sunk to the value of 371.25 grains of fine silver for uses other than American coinage. We should then be on the silver level.

I have spoken of this exchange of American gold for foreign silver as though it would be a methodical commercial transaction, the foreign silver coming here for sale and the gold going abroad to pay for it as fast as the silver came in. But the process would be accelerated by a disposition to withdraw gold from circulation in anticipation of the effect of the free-coinage act. The gold would not all be hoarded. Some of it would be exported on cable orders to purchase silver. The sudden withdrawal of gold would be contraction. The silver and paper dollars left in circulation would not thereby become depreciated. On the contrary, they might be appreciated for a time. The prices of goods measured in such silver and paper dollars might sink even below the gold level, especially if the fear of change which perplexes merchants as well as monarchs were to cause a contraction of credit. This, however, would widen the margin of profit in sending bullion to the mint. In other words, it would narrow the margin of loss in selling foreign coin as bullion. Foreign silver coin imported as bullion would be paid for partly in gold and partly in American goods bought at panic prices. The transaction as a whole might be profitable even to the foreign government; that is, the foreign government might for a short time sell its coin as bullion without any loss whatever.

Thus the vacuum caused by an outflow of gold would be filled by an inflow of silver. Contraction would cease and expansion would begin. It would go on, for all that appears, till the purchasing power of the American silver dollar had sunk to the present market value of 371.25 grains of fine silver bullion. Whether silver bullion would sink to a still lower level in consequence of the rejection of a large amount of silver from the French and German circulation, just as it is supposed to have declined in 1876 in consequence of a similar policy adopted by the German Government, is a question worth considering which I have not time to discuss.

If it be true that European governments would take advantage of a law of unlimited silver coinage in this country to strengthen their gold reserves, it follows that the silver mining industry of the United States would not receive much benefit from such a law. Those high grade mines which are ready to put bullion on the market would sell it at a higher price. A mine of lower grade ore which can not be profitably worked at the present price of bullion, might become profitable if the prices of bullion were to advance, but almost as soon as it could be developed and put in working order its opportunity to sell its bullion at a profit might have passed away by the decline in the purchasing power of the silver dollars into which its bullion could be coined.

Therefore it has been suggested that the Mint should not be opened to European silver coin, but only to silver bullion produced in American mines. The difficulty and expense of enforcing such a law would be considerable. If it could be enforced it would undoubtedly diminish the danger of unlimited coinage.

It might not prevent depreciation, but it would retard it. It would also retard, without altogether preventing, the outflow of our gold coin. If the increase of our circulation were accompanied by a corresponding increase in population and commerce depreciation would not follow, prices would not rise. This, however, would hardly satisfy those who demand more silver as a means of raising prices or as a means of relieving debtors. If, on the other hand, the circulation increased faster than population and commerce, then prices would rise here as compared with prices abroad. This would stimulate imports of foreign goods. The balance of trade would turn and our gold would gradually go abroad. The silver-mining industry would flourish at the expense of other American industries.

One other probable effect would be that a diversion into the United States Mint of the silver bullion which now goes abroad would diminish the supply of silver bullion in Europe and so raise its price that Germany or France would be induced to sell coin for export to India. It is not in the interest of this country, nor is it in the permanent interest of our silver-mining industry, to raise the price of silver bullion in Europe until European governments have agreed upon a method or a ratio at which there shall be substantially free coinage of silver everywhere.

I should not take pains to show that unlimited silver coinage would cause depreciation if all advocates of unlimited coinage reasoned as many of them do, for the argument of many of them concedes depreciation and proclaims it as a national blessing, because, as they say, it would lighten the burden of existing debts. They advocate depreciation as a remedy for appreciation. They say gold has risen more than silver has fallen. I do not discuss that question now. Gold may have risen somewhat and silver fallen somewhat. They certainly stand on widely different levels now. All I wish to make clear is that unlimited coinage of silver means a rapid descent from one level to the other.

The fall is as great whether we fall from the ground into a pit 20 feet deep, or fall to the ground from a bank 20 feet high, or fall from a bank 10 feet high into a pit 10 feet deep. It is 20 feet every time.

There would be a serious decline in the value of money. That means a more than corresponding rise in the prices of commodities, for rising prices acquire a momentum and continue to rise for some time after the force which originally caused the rise has ceased to act. The expansion of the currency begets an expansion of credit. When this has spent its force the natural and inevitable reaction comes. The question is whether a general and decided rise in prices due to a decline in the value of money to the silver-bullion level would be a national blessing or a national evil. I believe it would be a national evil.

Many suppose that it would equalize the conditions of life by taking from the rich and giving to the poor. I believe it would have the opposite effect. It would make some rich men richer and nearly all poor men poorer.

How would it affect the wage-earner? Would it better his condition? Manifestly not, unless wage-earners now out of work would find employment, or unless the wages of men now employed would rise faster than the cost of living. How is it with the price of labor? Does it rise as fast as other prices? It never does. It always lags behind. Laboring men and women and salaried employés may be properly described by a certain popular phrase which we have heard used in this debate. They are "possessors of a fixed income," because they find it harder than any other class to enlarge their income by raising the price of their commodity—that is, their labor—to meet a rise in the cost of living.

Compare, for instance, the laboring man with the laboring man's grocer. How long does it take a retail grocer to raise the price of sugar? A word to his salesman and the thing is done. And how soon does the grocer learn that the time has come to raise his prices? He reads it in the daily market reports, by which the intelligence of every cause that is operating in the money centers of the country is radiated to every board of trade, to every bank parlor, to every wholesale and retail shop in the country. The business man reads the market report and acts on it instantly. He must do so in order to succeed. If the wholesale price of sugar has gone up a cent a pound, the retail grocer adds the amount to the price which he charges to his customers. He also adds thereto his reasonable or unreasonable profit thereon.

Can the laboring man do likewise? When he starts for his work in the morning, can he examine a daily price-current of labor to ascertain what price he shall charge his customer for the commodity of his day's labor, which he must bring to market on that day or lose it forever?

It is impossible. He can not act on wages alone. He must combine with his fellow-workmen, and combination takes time. First, he must be sure that the higher prices which he pays for the necessaries of life are due to a general and permanent cause. It must be general and appear to be permanent in order to overcome the inertia of a large number of individuals, so that they can act in concert.

No man cares to strike for higher wages till he is sure of being supported by his fellow-workmen. He can not be sure of their support if they suspect that the cause of their distress is temporary. By the time a concerted demand has been made and acceded to and wages have been fixed at a higher level, the cost of living has gone steadily on to a higher level still, and the wage-earner, with his higher nominal income, is in reality poorer than before.

Nor is it true, as has been intimated in the course of this debate, that a general rise of prices, due to a decline in the value of money, causes a larger demand for labor. History proves the contrary. It proves that when prices are rising rapidly capital is withdrawn from the employment of labor in the creation of wealth, to speculate on the rising prices of commodities already created.

That a general rise of prices is usually attended by distress among the laboring poor has been noticed by many observers.

Walker, in The Wages Question, alludes to the difficulty which the laborer experiences in adjusting his demands upon his employer to rapid and violent changes in the currency cost of living, and the still greater difficulty which he finds in the contest with the retail dealer from whom he obtains the necessaries of life. He shows, too, how the consumer loses his reckoning when the decline in the value of money forces him away from the landmarks of customary prices. "He learns to pay without dispute whatever the shop-keeper may demand, for he has no means of determining the justice of the demand. It is this temper which enables the retail dealer to gather his largest profits and work his worst extortions." "This it was, over and above the proper effects of currency inflation, which allowed retail prices to be carried up to such an unprecedented height in the United States during the war of secession, and to be kept up by combinations of dealers long after whatever reasons had existed for the advance ceased. The extravagant profits thus realized had not, as is well known, the effect to invite true competition tending to reduce prices, but merely served to allow the multiplication of shops and stands at every corner and to support an army of middlemen."

Professor Cairnes and John Stuart Mill have also noticed this effect of a general rise in prices.

Therefore the apparent and temporary prosperity attending a decline in the value of money is a redistribution rather than an increase in national wealth, and in this redistribution the chief losers are salaried employés and the laboring poor.

Historical illustrations are not far to seek.

Macaulay, describing the depreciation of the silver currency in England at the close of the seventeenth century, states that in the midst of the general distress the bankers accumulated immense fortunes.

Thiers says that the chief losers by the assignats of the French revolution were the wage-earners. "Lastly, the working people," he says, "always obliged to offer their services and to give them to any one who will accept them, not knowing how to act in concert to obtain a twofold or threefold increase of wages in proportion to the depreciation of the assignats, were paid only part of what was necessary to obtain in exchange such things as they needed."

Alison, speaking of the same period, says:

The people in the midst of the horrors of famine were exasperated at the sight of fortunes made out of the miseries which they endured.

Noah Webster, speaking of our Revolutionary currency, says:

The first visible effect of an augmentation of the currency and the consequent fluctuation of value was a host of jockeys who followed a species of itinerant commerce and subsisted upon the ignorance and honesty of the country people, or, in other words, upon the difference in the value of the currency in different places. Perhaps we may safely estimate that twenty thousand men in America left honest callings and applied themselves to this knavish traffic. A sudden augmentation of currency flattered people with the prospect of accumulating property without labor.

Arthur Young gives an actual case of a laborer living near Bury, in Suffolk. In 1799 he got 5s. a week, and could buy therewith a certain specified amount of the necessaries of life. In 1801, after a general rise in prices, his wages were 9s. a week, but he could not buy as much as before, though he now got an allowance from the parish rates in addition to his wages.

A writer in the Quarterly Review says that never in the history of Portugal was there a period of greater national distress arising from poverty than at the time when the gold mines of Africa and the tribute of Morocco poured a vast treasure into the kingdom.

It was thus in Spain—

He continues—

when ships came laden with silver and gold from Mexico and Peru. The fact was distinctly seen and the cause distinctly stated by a contemporary writer. All the necessaries of life advanced in price. The burden fell upon the poor.

Tooke, in his History of Prices, shows by repeated instances that a general rise of prices brings distress upon the laboring population.

According to all experience—

Says he—

whether within modern observation or recorded by history it may be laid down as an established maxim that labor is the last of the objects of exchange to rise in consequence of dearth or depreciation, and that conversely the price of labor is the last to fall in consequence of increased abundance of commodities or of increased value of money.

When the French war indemnity fund was poured into Germany at the close of the war of 1871, prices advanced and speculation bloomed, but the condition of the laboring population was not improved though wages were doubled. "The deposits in the savings banks did not increase," says a French writer. "The house of the mechanic and laborer was no better furnished, and his family were no better lodged and no happier; so that when the day of panic arrived the mechanic, after all his increase of wages, found himself as poor as before."

Mr. BLAND. If that is true, why is it that in all history, especially in our own history, during periods of low prices and hard times we have labor troubles and labor riots, and never when prices are high and times good.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. During a general rise of prices many men are under a delusion and believe that they are better off than they really are. But I deny that times of rising prices are good times for laboring men.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is not a delusion for a man to conclude that he is well off when he is working at good wages and is able to pay his debts.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. My answer is to refer the gentleman to what the writers on this subject have established. I do not care to speculate on the question. If the gentleman will answer what has been said by Mr. Walker on the wages question and by other authors on prices, he will spend his time more profitably than by putting questions to me.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have read the writings of Mr. Walker, and I know very well the teachings of the school to which he belongs; but I do not accept everything he says as true.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Nor do I accept everything that any man says as true.

Mr. SYMES. Except members of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Excepting members of this House, of course.

Mr. McCOMAS. Not on matters of opinion.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The historical citations which I have read tell the same story over and over again. A general rise in the prices of commodities injures the wage-earner in two ways: first, the cost of his living rises faster than his wages rise; secondly, the profits of retail trade and the temptation to speculate on rising prices withdraws capital from the employment of labor.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. One other question. Why was it that during the period of "inflation"—during the war period and just after the war—the people of the United States were out of debt?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I think they were getting into debt.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The fact is established by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury in 1865, in which it is stated "the people of the United States are now comparatively out of debt." And so they were. Everybody had money in bank. Since that people have got into debt. Their money has been taken away from them.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I must hurry on with what I proposed to say; and in reply to the gentleman from Iowa I will only remark that I have not gone into that question. I do not think it necessary for me to explain all the financial phenomena that occurred from 1860 to 1865 or 1873. I believe, however, that all the financial phenomena that have occurred in this country from the time of the discovery of gold in California have been greatly complicated with events of a different character, so that I doubt whether they afford a normal guide for the establishment of any financial theory. For instance, in the period immediately following the outbreak of the war we had an extraordinary expansion of currency, and also an extraordinary convulsion in the industrial world because of the destruction of property by the operation of the war and the withdrawal of so many men from the various productive occupations. To resume· The prosperity, therefore, which is foretold as a consequence of unlimited silver coinage would not be real; it would not be an increase of national wealth. It would be simply a spoliation of the wage-earner, effected in the first instance by the retail dealer, who in his turn would be forced to share his plunder with the jobber, the wholesale dealer, and the money-lender.

It is claimed that a decline in the value of money would benefit the debtor class. Some debtors doubtless would be gainers, those, namely, whose debts were incurred before the decline was foreseen by the lender, and are payable after the decline has taken place. They could pay their debts in cheaper dollars than were in contemplation of the parties when the loan was made and the rate of interest agreed on.

A law of unlimited silver coinage will not help those who have occasion to borrow money after the law is enacted or its enactment is foreseen. They will have to pay a rate of interest high enough to insure the lender not merely against the loss which he can calculate but also against the loss which he can not calculate but merely apprehends. Are not such borrowers members of the debtor class within the view of legislation? Is it worth while to lessen their chances of making an advantageous bargain with a money-lender merely to give to existing debtors an advantage which they did not bargain for when their rate of interest was fixed?

If the rate of interest on a Western farm mortgage is now 10 per cent., as we have heard in this debate, how high will it be on a new loan or on a renewal of an old loan if the money-lender knows beforehand that the debt will be paid in cheaper dollars? The amount of private and corporate indebtedness now existing in this country is enormous, it is true. It will be so for many years to come. New loans will be made and old loans will be extended. The annual interest on this indebtedness is a great sum, but it is small compared with the amount yearly paid in wages. We can lighten this burden of interest in one of two ways. We can depreciate the money in which the interest is paid, or we can assure capital against appreciation, and so enable new loans to be made at lower rates of interest as fast as existing loans fall due.

The first method benefits existing debtors at the expense of wage-earners and consumers generally. The second method benefits the community at large by increasing the effectiveness of capital and labor in the production of wealth. Even the benefit conferred on existing debtors by a depreciation of the currency is a questionable one. A debtor is usually something besides a debtor. He does not make his living by being in debt. He may be wage-earner as well as debtor. Depreciation of the currency might injure him as much in his character as wage-earner as it would benefit him in his character as debtor.

Such, according to my view, would be the results of unlimited silver coinage. Contraction first, followed by expansion. First paralysis of commercial credit; then the fever of speculation. To wage-earners it means shrinkage of income by the rise in the cost of living; to merchants, manufacturers, and bankers, a brief prosperity which vanishes when the bubble of expansion breaks; to existing debtors, a questionable advantge which they did not bargain for; to the borrowing class, the burden of a higher rate of interest; to the speculator, a larger chance of profit in every wave of confidence or alarm that sweeps through Wall street; to the high-grade silver mines, a temporary increase of dividends; to the low-grade mines, a promise of dividends broken almost as soon as made; to France and Germany, assurance of a larger gold reserve; to silver bullion, first a sudden rise, then a rapid and, it may be, a permanent decline. It means the indefinite postponement of the only satisfactory settlement of the silver question. If France and Germany shall succeed in supplying themselves with a gold currency like that of England, there will be less reason than there is to-day to hope for the establishment of an international gold and silver union, which is the desire of the great majority of reasonable men.

As to limited coingage of silver under the law of 1878, it has been supported by some and opposed by others because it is supposed to be a step in the direction of unlimited coinage. If we leave the prospect of unlimited coinage altogether out of view, and consider limited coinage on its own merits, I think it will be found that all the arguments in its favor and some of the arguments against it have been much overstated.

Suppose a case. Suppose limited coinage goes on under the law of 1878 for five years till we have coined one hundred and forty million of silver dollars in addition to the present stock. Let us assume that we can carry this additional amount of silver in our circulation without causing depreciation, and that at the end of five years gold coin will circulate freely in the American market. If we assume this we must also assume that the purchasing power of every American dollar, gold, silver, or paper, will be the value of 23.22 grains of fine gold in the markets of the world. Gold can not freely circulate here at a value materially different from that at which it circulates in Europe.

Would our currency be better or worse in the case supposed than it would be at the end of the same five years if we were to suspend silver coinage to-day?

Would it lighten the burdens of existing debts? How so, if gold still circulated? Would not every debtor for every dollar nominated in his bond be forced to pay the international value of 23.22 grains of fine gold? Would it reduce the international value of gold? Only in so far as it would add to the world's stock of metallic money.

The gentleman from Ohio said recently that if we were to abolish the silver money of the world, the gold money of the world, having more work to do, would be enormously increased in value. It would be the same whether we destroy the silver, leaving the gold to do the work of gold and silver, or whether we melt all the gold and silver into a compound metal and then destroy about one-half of the compound metal coins.

The mass—

Says he—is the same in either case, and it is the mass of the whole and not the way it is coined that determines the value of the whole and of each piece.

When the gentleman from Ohio says this he evidently supposes that the ultimate result of suspension of silver coinage in this country would be to destroy silver money. I do not understand how he comes to think so, but I agree that if that were to happen it would greatly increase the value of gold by diminishing the world's supply of money. But by the same reasoning the coinage of one hundred and forty million of silver dollars during the next five years will not diminish the value of gold except in so far as it increases the world's stock of gold and silver money. To what extent will it do this? An addition of $140,000,000 to a total stock of $7,000,000,000 would be an addition of 2 per cent.—that is, two-fifths of 1 per cent. in each of the five years.

But the coinage of $140,000,000 of silver in this country would not add that amount to the world's stock of money. If we did not coin it some of it would be coined in India, or else by supplying a demand in the arts in India and Europe would prevent the withdrawal of silver coin from circulation to satisfy the same demand. Is it not clear that, leaving out of view for the present the supposed ultimate effects of one policy or another, the direct and immediate effect of a continuance of limited silver coinage could only be to reduce in a slight degree the value of gold in this country by reducing in the same slight degree the value of gold throughout the world? Whatever evil there may be in silver coinage we bear alone; the good it does, if any, we share with all the world; and yet some advocates of silver coinage call it an American policy, and ask in a tone of superior scorn, "What have we to do with abroad?"

Will this additional silver coinage cause a corresponding permanent addition to the number of undepreciated dollars circulating in the United States? In other words, will it give us a greater share of the world's stock of money? That can not be done, either by coining more silver or coining more gold or issuing more paper. The value of the total amount of money which this country can keep in circulation is fixed by a law higher than any that Congress can enact.

In a letter from John Adams to the Count de Vergennes, written in 1780, the law is thus stated:

The amount of ordinary commerce, external or internal, of a society may be computed at a fixed sum. A certain sum of money is necessary to circulate among the society in order to carry on their business. You may emit paper or any other currency within this rule and it will not depreciate. After you exceed this rule it will depreciate and no power or act of legislation hitherto invented can prevent it. In the case of paper, if you go on emitting forever the whole mass will be worth no more than that which was emitted within the rule.

This principle I consider to be as sound to-day as it appeared to John Adams one hundred and six years ago. If we now have in circulation $1,600,000,000, each worth 23.22 grains of fine gold, it is not because Congress has so ordained. It is because the amount of our commerce, external and internal, requires that amount to circulate in order to carry on our business. Congress may indeed by wise or unwise legislation strengthen or impair commercial credit, or in some other way increase or diminish the external or internal commerce of this country. But so long as that remains what it is, and the business habits of our people are unchanged, the real value of our total circulation will remain what it is.

If we need more money year by year as our commerce increases we may supply the additional demand partly by coining silver and partly by coining gold mined in this country or imported from abroad. If we supply the entire demand by coining silver gold will not flow in and the product of our gold mines will be exported. If we coin no silver gold will flow in more abundantly.

Do gentlemen say that gold can not flow out so long as the balance of trade is in our favor? True enough! But expansion of the currency will reverse the balance of trade. It will raise prices here compared with prices abroad. That will check exports and stimulate imports. The surplus of imported goods will be paid for in exported gold. The same result will follow whether we coin more silver, or issue more paper, or coin the product of newly discovered gold mines.

Germany appeared to ignore this law in 1876. The German Government was in haste to secure a gold currency. A large amount of gold coin was issued from the mint before room had been made for it in the circulation—that is, before the internal and external commerce of Germany required the additional amount. What was the consequence? The new gold coin began immediately to be exported. By April, 1876, three months after the emperor had declared the establishment of the gold standard, 37,000,000 francs had crossed the Belgian frontier and been melted down and recoined into Belgian Leopolds d'or. So says Edward Suess, in Die Zukunft des Goldes, published at Vienna in 1877.

I have said that Germany appeared to ignore this law of money. It may be that Germany ignored the possibility that the French mint would be closed against silver. Had the French mint remained open the gold price of silver bullion would have stood at nearly 60 pence per ounce. Germany could have rapidly withdrawn silver and might have secured and maintained a gold currency. France would have had a currency of silver. The trouble was not so much that Germany desired to sell as that France refused to buy.

I believe, therefore, that the effect of coining one hundred and forty million of silver dollars during the next five years will be simply to change the proportion between our silver coinage and our gold coinage. The total value of our entire circulation will hardly be affected. The question is whether American industry will be more benefited by increasing the proportion of gold or increasing the proportion of silver in our metallic circulation.

Leave out of view the question of convenience in the size or weight of the coins as they actually circulate among the people. It is a comparatively insignificant question. Ten dollars in gold is easier to handle than ten silver dollars; one silver dollar is infinitely preferable to a gold dollar. Coin of either metal is less popular in this country than paper currency redeemable in coin.

Leave out of view the saving in expense effected by the excessive seigniorage on silver. That is a gain to the Treasury. It hardly benefits American industry. The real question is whether under existing circumstances a currency stronger in gold or a currency stronger in silver would do more in the next five years toward the creation of national wealth by the co-operation of capital and labor.

That capitalists generally are opposed to silver coinage has been stated so many times in the course of this debate that it may be assumed to be a fact. It has also been repeatedly stated, with more or less extravagance of language, that capitalists in their view of the coinage question are influenced by a selfish regard for their own interests. This, also, may be assumed to be a fact.

It has also been assumed, rather than stated, that capitalists generally, or an influential class of capitalists, have a selfish interest in opposing silver coinage in order to effect a rise in the value of money. Let us analyze this assumption.

The capitalist who would gain by a rise in the value of money can not be a merchant. How can a merchant gain by a decline in the prices of goods? Nor can he be a manufacturer. A manufacturer is an employer of labor. A rise in the value of money gives to labor a larger share in the product of industry. The price of the product sinks faster than the price of the labor by which it is produced. The manufacturer, to get even with his employés, must reduce wages.

Indeed, it may be said of labor and capital in their relation to each other that if we regard their temporary interests only it is labor and not capital that desires a rise in the value of money, since this gives labor an advantage till wages are reduced; while it is capital and not labor which desires a depreciation of the currency, since this gives capital an advantage until wages are raised. It is said that a strike for higher wages generally succeeds, while a strike to prevent a reduction of wages generally fails. If that is true, it shows that labor rarely strikes for higher wages till it is entitled to them; and that capital rarely reduces wages till it is entitled to the reduction.

In short, a general rise or general decline in money wages is a readjustment to new conditions, and as the readjustment frequently entails serious loss on both parties, the permanent interests of labor and capital alike would be best served by a steady currency that neither rises nor falls. Let me here say in parenthesis that in one department of the North Chicago Rolling Mills there prevailed for a series of years a plan of regulating wages on a sliding scale, by which wages rose and fell month by month with the monthly rise and fall of the market price of the product. Such a plan can not be applied to wages generally, and therefore manufacturers generally have reason to dread rather than desire a rise in the value of money.

But if neither merchants nor manufacturers can gain by a rise in the value of money, how can bankers gain? The main business of a banker is to use the deposits of merchants and manufacturers in discounting the commercial paper of other merchants and manufacturers. When they thrive he thrives; when their business is dull his business is dull. This is true without regard to the fact that bank shareholders are frequently themselves manufacturers or merchants.

It is true that banks are also bondholders, but their interest as such is slight. If I am interested as bondholder to the extent of $4,000,000, and at the same time am interested as merchant or manufacturer to the extent of $50,000,000, how can it be claimed that on the whole I am interested in a rise in the value of money and in a decline in the prices of goods? That is about the situation of all the national banks of Chicago, taken together at the present time. In the Chicago Inter Ocean of March 8 there is a statement of the condition of these banks at the close of business on March 1.

Following are the totals:

Loans	$50,779,418
Bonds deposited with United States Treasurer	1,024,500
United States bonds on hand	1,208,050
Unspecified bonds on hand	1,850,717
Cash and exchanges	31,047,619
Real estate and office fixtures	684,297
Deposits	69,557,599
Capital and surplus	15,406,600
Undivided profits	996,368
Circulation	694,790

I have assumed that these national banks are interested as bondholders to the extent of $4,000,000, that being about the total amount of all their bonds. Their bondholding interest is not as great as that. Against $1,024,500 of bonds deposited with the Treasurer they have $694,790 of circulation, a part of which they can lend to merchants and manufacturers. As to the $3,058,767 of bonds on hand they are not kept as a permanent investment, but as an available fund to be turned into cash as occasion arises. I have also assumed that these national banks are interested as merchants and manufacturers to the extent of $50,000,000, that being the amount of their loans on March 1. The amount which they could safely lend in a favorable state of the market would be greater than that, as an examination of the table will show.

The capitalist, therefore, who has an interest in causing a rise in the value of money can not be either merchant, manufacturer, or banker. He must be a bondholder proper. Not one who uses his bonds as collateral to borrow money for business or speculative purposes. Not one whose fortune is invested in bonds temporarily till something better offers. He must be one whose fortune is permanently invested in bonds in order that he may live on the 3 or 4 per cent. interest of the investment.

How much of a class does he make in this country? It is utterly insignificant in numbers and influence. The money-kings of this country are not bondholders proper. They are the great merchants, the great manufacturers, the great bankers, the great railway shareholders, the great bonanza mine-owners. They are not interested in doubling the value of money.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Still Vanderbilt stored away a very large bundle in Government bonds.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Fifty million dollars. Not a very large proportion of his aggregate wealth. Is there any man here who, if his wealth were $50,000 or $5,000,000, would invest the bulk of it in Government bonds? Men make such investments as a mere accessory to their other investments—a fund that can be converted into cash at any moment. Any man who would invest the bulk of his property in long-time Government bonds must be a man of very luxurious, unenterprising, un-American turn of mind. There are only a few such men in this country, and they have no influence on financial opinion.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman must admit that the banks control the bulk of the bonds.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not know whether the national banks control the bulk of the bonds or not; but the gentleman, from his point of view, is bound to show as a matter of fact that a national bank, taking into consideration its deposits, its loans, its capital, and its surplus, and setting off against these the very limited amount of Government bonds which it may have, is somehow interested in the rise in the value of money.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I can give the gentleman an instance.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have only fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then I will not take up the gentleman's time.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I was about to refer to a statement of the gentleman himself. When the silver question was under discussion a week or two ago, my colleague from Illinois declared that a severe contraction of the currency would injure all classes of society except the moneyed class. Thereupon my other colleague from Illinois rose and suggested that all classes of society without exception would be injured thereby. Thereupon the gentleman from Iowa arose and assented, declaring that we must save the moneyed class from the injury which, as he supposed, they were striving to inflict upon themselves.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman must have misunderstood me. I hold, on the contrary, that a rise in the value of money always benefits the man who owns money.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman examine the RECORD and see whether he did not say just what I have attributed to him?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If I am so reported in the RECORD it is a mistake. I repeat that a rise in the value of money always benefits the man who owns money.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I admit that the bondholder proper might profit in that way; but I claim that the bondholders would be an insignificant part of the population.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does the gentleman deny that the holder of railroad stock or railroad bonds would be benefited?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. There is a great difference between stocks and bonds. I admit that if a man has his means invested in long-time railroad bonds for the same purpose that I am supposing the Government bondholder proper has invested his means in Government bonds he is interested in the rise in the value of money.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is he not benefited in the same way that the holder of Government bonds is?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Certainly. But the case is different with the man who holds bonds only for a short time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I supposed the gentleman applied his remark to the whole creditor class of the country.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. What I mean is this: Reference has been made to the national banks and capitalists generally as interested in the rise of money. I am trying to analyze this question, and see which classes are so interested and which are not. I will admit that a creditor as a creditor, and to the extent to which he is a creditor, is benefited by a rise in the value of money in the same way that a debtor as a debtor is injured.

Mr. BRECKENRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is all I contend for.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. But if my colleague from Illinois and the gentleman from Iowa see, as I see, that severe contraction would injure the capitalists of this country, can we suppose that the capitalists do not themselves see it? Do we not know that their constant study, day in and day out, is to see what will endanger their pecuniary interests? They must see it. Their opposition to silver coinage can not be due to a desire to raise the value of money. It must be due to some other selfish motive. It may be the fear that a reduction of the gold balance in the Treasury may bring a frost upon commercial credit. Perhaps they dread the contraction of credit which they think would follow a suspension of gold payments by the Treasury more than they dread the depreciation which would ultimately follow unlimited silver coinage. They may be like people in a theater when there is a smell of smoke in the air. They may be afraid because they expect others to be afraid. With them as with a crowded audience in a theater it is a legitimate cause of alarm.

That capitalists profess to be alarmed is admitted. Their professed alarm has been the key-note of many a silver speech since this session of Congress began. We know for a fact that much capital now seeks shelter in bonds and call loans in the money centers, so that interest there is low; while interest in the West and South is high. What motive has thus brought capital from its free and wholesome circulation in the arteries of American industry to clog the money centers of the country? It can not be the hope of gain. It must be the fear of loss. No other motive than these two can be attributed to a capitalist, as such.

Whether the apprehensions of capital are reasonable or not is not the question. Reasonable or unreasonable, they cause a substantial loss to American industry. Capital and labor must work together like two horses in a team. If either horse is restive the team is useless for the time being. It is just as useless whether the horse be reasonably frightened by the approach of a real danger, or unreasonably frightened by the roar of a departing locomotive or by the flapping of a petticoat on a clothes-line. It would be just as wise, moreover, to try to soothe the unreasonable fears of a horse by threatening him with the real terrors of the lash as it would be to try to soothe the fears of capital, unreasonable as they may be, by denouncing the rapacity of the money-lender and demanding a cheaper dollar in the name of the debtor class.

The opposition of capitalists to limited silver coinage is, doubtless, largely due to the belief that it will lead to unlimited coinage.

Is it not true that many advocates of limited coinage support it on that ground? The removal of this fear of unlimited coinage would be a real gain to American industry. It would encourage the investment of capital in the productive employment of labor.

INTERNATIONAL BIMETALLISM.

It remains to consider the international effect of silver coinage in the United States.

Nearly all men agree that the welfare of the industrial world is concerned in the concurrent use of gold and silver money on a uniform standard of value. Nearly all agree that this can not be permanently secured except by international agreement. The United States have twice invited the nations of Europe to a conference with this end in view.

Accordingly that form of our currency is the better, other things being equal, which more strongly tends to hasten the settlement of this great question by international agreement.

What is the silver question of to-day in Western Europe? It is not the theoretical question of the standard of value. That theoretical question was settled, so far as the prevailing public sentiment of Western Europe was concerned, by the Paris monetary conference of 1867, to which I shall hereafter refer. It was there settled that the best standard by which to regulate the value of all the gold and silver money of the world was the single standard of gold. The wisdom or unwisdom of the decision I do not discuss. I speak of the historical fact.

Thereupon a new question arose which first broke out into open rivalry between France and Germany at the close of the war of 1871. The question was which nation could sell its silver to other nations and thereby secure for itself a currency such as England had maintained since 1817, and the United States from 1834 till 1861, consisting largely of the metal which public sentiment in Western Europe had recently declared to be the best standard of value. The wisdom or unwisdom of this endeavor on the part of France and Germany I do not discuss—I speak of the historical fact.

This is the state of the silver question as it stands to-day in Western Europe. It is with reference to this state of the question that our silver policy in its international aspect must be judged.

It is idle to appeal to the disinterested regard of a foreign nation for the welfare of other nations. True wisdom lies, as Washington said in his farewell address, in appealing to the enlightened self-interest of each and every nation.

By continuing silver coinage in this country we produce the impression that we are more deeply interested in making a temporary market for silver bullion than we are in the international settlement of the silver question or in the possession of a strong reserve of gold such as the continental nations of Europe are contending for. By suspending silver coinage now, or announcing its suspension in the near future, we compel the financiers of Europe to face the probability of a larger flow of gold from Europe or a smaller flow of gold from the United States. This is why Cernuschi declares that every silver dollar that we coin is an obstacle to international bimetallism.

Mr. SYMES. Does not the gentleman admit that the demonetization of silver has in a great measure contributed to the present commercial depression and monetary embarrassment?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I believe the present state of things is fraught with considerable evil by inducing a contest among the nations of the world for a strong reserve of gold; and this without reference to the question of the proper standard.

Mr. SYMES. Does not the gentleman know the propriety of the bimetallic standard is now conceded in London and in the commercial centers of Europe by economists who a few years ago thought the single standard the best?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do concede that the present state of things is fraught with evil, and I will say in passing it is an evil we can not remedy by legislation in the United States. It is an evil which has arisen from the action of other nations, and the only cure for it is an international arrangement by which a concurrent use of gold and silver shall be secured. It is not the question of the double or single standard.

Mr. SYMES. My question was whether the gentleman does not admit that the demonetization of silver has in a great measure contributed to the present commercial depression.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. What does the gentleman refer to as "demonetization?"

Mr. SYMES. The action of Germany and the United States.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I admit that there has been within the last thirty years an endeavor on the part of the leading nations of Europe to gradually substitute gold for silver. But the action of Germany, to which the gentleman has referred, was a mere incident in the proceeding; and as for what he calls "demonetization" in this country, I do not think it has had the effect the gentleman states. The gentleman refers to the law of 1873.

Mr. BAYNE. In 1873 there was no silver circulation to demonetize.

Mr. SYMES. But the act of 1873 stopped the coinage of silver.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. In the conference of 1878 our position was unfortunate in two ways: First, because we appealed to Germany not to part with silver, while at the same time, by coining silver in this country, we withdrew it from the market in which Germany was resolved to sell; secondly, because our attitude in 1878 was in grotesque contradiction with our attitude in 1867.

In the Paris conference of 1867 we were represented by Mr. Ruggles. In his address to the conference, after explaining the immense resources of the United States as a producer of gold bullion, Mr. Ruggles explicitly states that it was in view of this great prospective development of the gold-mining industry of this country that he felt bound to urge that the coinage of the world should be brought to one uniform system based on the gold standard.

In a letter addressed to Mr. Ruggles by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance the same views are expressed. The adoption of the gold 5-franc piece is recommended as the common standard of value in all civilized nations.

If this is effected—

Continues the writer—

France will surely give up her vain attempt to maintain the double standard. A common gold standard will regulate silver coinage, of which the United States will furnish the greater part, especially for the China trade.

The impression produced in Europe by the views expressed by Mr. Ruggles and Senator SHERMAN I gather from a work entitled Zur Münz Frage, by Moritz Mohl, published in Germany in 1871. In this work the passages before cited relating to the interest of the United States as a bullion-producing nation are printed in small capitals, and the author sarcastically comments thereon as follows:

We must at all events be grateful to Messrs. Ruggles and SHERMAN for the publication of the reports and correspondence of these very able and far-seeing American statesmen, who treat this important subject from the highest standpoint and with the broadest views of international trade, and the dominant share thereof claimed by the people of the United States by reason of their possession of a large part of the eastern and western coasts of America, but it will be well if these frank utterances remind us that in this matter other interests than the common interests of all play an important part, and that the brotherly love of the United States to other nations is thereby shown to be in wonderful accord with the desire to drive a sharp bargain with Europe immensely profitable to North America.

Such was the impression produced in Europe by the attitude of this country in 1867. We seemed to be appealing to Europe in the interest of the world at large to invest largely in our special product. Our special product in 1867 was gold bullion. By 1878 things had changed. Not gold but silver bullion had now become the special product in the price of which we were chiefly interested. And so we change our tune. With the same lofty appeal, in the interest of the world at large, we call on Europe to abandon the gold standard and come to the rescue of silver bullion. Is it to be wondered at that our overtures to the European powers were received with frigid courtesy and half-concealed suspicion?

In the conference of 1881 our position was much stronger; our overtures were treated with more respect. It was not altogether because we made a more effective appeal to the disinterestedness of Europe. It may have been because between 1878 and 1881 we had demonstrated our ability to resume specie payments and to draw a large amount of gold coin from Europe.

Although Germany appears to be the chief opponent of an international settlement of the silver question, the attitude of Germany can not be fully understood without reference to the large share which France has had in bringing about the present state of things.

From the time of the Crimean war the French Emperor had been drawing closer the ties of commercial and political friendship between France and England. Nothing would have better promoted his plans than a monetary union with England at the expense of Germany. There is no doubt that in 1868 he was preparing to adopt the gold standard for which the Paris conference of 1867 had declared. This appears from the form of the circular inquiries issued by the French Government to the department officials, the chambers of commerce, and the Bank of France. The time was ripe for the change. For nearly sixteen years France has been strengthening her gold reserve. She had absorbed $680,000,000 of gold and exported $345,000,000 of silver.

Had the issue of the war of 1871 been different; had the German military system been as inefficient as the French; had the French army been what the German army was, the finest combination of science, discipline, and glowing national feeling that Europe ever saw, the financial history of the last fifteen years in Europe would have been different. France would now have not merely the gold standard but a gold currency like that of England. Germany would have a currency of silver. It was undoubtedly the knowledge on the part of Germany of the intentions of the French Government which hastened the so-called monetary reforms of the German Empire after the war. The same cause has I believe tended to delay the settlement of the silver question.

This contest between France and Germany for the possession of a gold currency illustrates the probable course of the controversy if it is not settled by international agreement. The result will be the acquisition of a gold currency like that of England by each nation which is strong enough or fortunate enough to force its silver on some other nation. The process will go on till the world's supply of gold is concentrated in some nations and nearly all of the world's supply of silver is concentrated in other nations. That the leading nations of Europe have shown a decided preference for gold for many years, is an indisputable fact. We can not blink it. France closed her mints against the silver of Germany in 1876. By this move France checkmated the German policy, and a large part of the gold coined in the German Empire came back to France. France did not close her mints against the gold of California and Australia, although as gold came in from the West silver flowed out to the East and was coined into rupees.

Many gentlemen suppose that the adoption of a gold currency by several of the leading nations of the world will lead to the abolition of silver money throughout the world. Such a result is no more likely to follow than a collision between the earth and the moon. No nation will adopt a gold currency except by selling its silver to other nations. So long as a single great nation of Europe holds to the purpose of increasing its gold circulation the other nations of Europe will in self-defense close their mints against silver.

It is claimed that the existing state of things has two evil results. The first is said to be an existing evil. It is the general feeling of insecurity among capitalists throughout the world, which may be due to a dread of silver monometallism or to a vague fear of financial convulsion. The second evil belongs to the future rather than to the present. It is the gradual contraction of the world's metallic circulation by the refusal of several nations of Europe to open their mints to silver.

Neither of these evils can be permanently cured by legislation in the United States, although both may possibly be alleviated abroad if we consent to become a silver monometallic nation for the accommodation of gold monometallism in Western Europe. How many will advocate this as an American policy?

What is to be desired is the adoption of an international agreement by which each nation shall bind itself to use its fair share of silver and so bind itself not to use more than its fair share of the world's stock of gold. The adoption of such an agreement would permanently raise the price of silver bullion.

It is said that suspension of silver coinage in the United States would add to the difficulty of the silver question by depressing the market price of silver bullion.

How comes it that the movement for international bimetallism or something equivalent thereto was stronger in 1881 than in 1878, and is said to be stronger in Europe to-day than it was in 1881? The price of silver bullion has been falling all the time.

What particular form the international gold and silver union of the future will take is comparatively unimportant. It may be free coinage of both metals at an agreed ratio. That is, it may be bimetallism in its strict and original sense of the double standard. It may be the issue of silver bullion certificates based on the market value of silver in terms of gold to be ascertained and determined from time to time by international authority. The only really essential feature is that there shall be one standard of value everywhere, and that on that standard each nation shall securely hold its fair share of the gold and silver money of the world.

I do not claim that we can force European nations to come to a settlement of the silver question. What I do claim is that by announcing our determination to suspend silver coinage in the near future we can remove from the minds of European financiers a motive which now operates to delay the formation of an international gold and silver union. They know that by our annual silver coinage of $28,000,000 we relinquish to other countries a large amount of gold which would otherwise be in circulation here. They also know that many able, earnest, and eloquent men in Congress are urging unlimited coinage of silver. They have some reason to hope that this country is about to commit an irretrievable error which Europe will be swift to turn to her own advantage. They have but to wait till our Mint is open to silver and the five hundred millions of gold now circulating in the United States will go to strengthen the gold reserves of France, Belgium, and Germany.

By enlarging the proportion of silver in our circulation we do more than postpone the settlement of the silver question. We lessen our influence in the negotiations by which alone that question can be settled. As the President says, "We render ourselves an undesirable party to any future monetary conference of nations." In such a conference we ought to be and might be the strongest among the nations. Why should we suffer our Delilah of silver bulljon to shear away our strength?

The word bimetallism has been so loosely used as to have almost lost its value as a term of definition. In its strict and original sense it means not merely the use of both metals as money, but the double standard of value. In a larger sense, in which it is now frequently employed, it means the large concurrent use of gold and silver money on one uniform standard of value throughout the civilized world.

In this newer and larger meaning of the word I believe in international bimetallism. Soon after we cease to give to Europe inducement to delay, we shall be invited to a monetary conference to found an international gold and silver union. We ought to go not as a suppliant craving relief from a disproportionate weight of overvalued silver. We ought to go as a powerful, and therefore influential, member to give rather than to receive relief. We should represent not merely or mainly the temporary interest of our silver mines, but the permanent interest of a great industrial nation in a stable currency not only for ourselves, but for the nations with whom we deal. In this way and in no other way can we help to establish on a secure and permanent basis the bimetallic money system of the world. [Applause.]

SILVER COINAGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m). In accordance with its previous order the House now takes a recess till half past 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. CRISP as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1886.

SIR: I designate Hon. C. F. CRISP, of Georgia, to preside at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SILVER COINAGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session of this evening is held, under the order of the House, for debate only on the bill (H. R. 5690) for the free coinage of silver, and other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, at an early stage in this session of Congress two things became clearly evident, the one that the existing coinage act would not be repealed, and the other that, no matter what action the House of Representatives might take, the proposition to commit the Government to free coinage of silver was destined to defeat. Under these circumstances the country will doubtless feel that Congress might profitably have addressed itself to the consideration of other and more important measures, and allowed the silver question to remain quiescent. This, however, has not been done, but instead it has been insisted that the proposition to open our mints to free coinage should be discussed at great length, to the neglect of matters of vastly more consequence, both to the moral and material interests of the nation.

When the silver-tongued orator from the argentiferous fields of Colorado [Mr. SYMES] made his exhaustive appeal to the House a few weeks ago in behalf of silver I sincerely hoped that the extreme bimetallists would be content to rest their case; but since then the talk has flowed with such unceasing and resistless force as to illustrate anew the maxim that while speech is silver silence is golden. Almost every day this Chamber has resounded with the fiery eloquence of the silver advocates, until one could not help recalling the words of the poet laureate:

I chatter, chatter as I flow
To join the brimming river;
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever.

Until this House, after giving up to the advocates of silver much precious time that might have been better spent, deliberately voted to waste six days more in the discussion of this question, I had neither desire nor intention of participating in the debate. But as the advocates of unlimited silver coinage have thrown down the gauntlet it becomes the duty of those holding different views to give expression to their convictions.

We seem to have all kinds of statesmen and almost every possible variety of financiers in this discussion. One man tells us that unless silver is as free as the air dire disaster is sure to overtake the country, while another argues that unless gold alone is used as coin the darkest possible days of business depression and financial ruin are inevitable. To sustain these differing views ancient and modern history have been put under tribute, the pages of mythology have been ransacked, Scripture has been quoted, poetry has contributed her quota, and rhetoric and grammar alike have been violently dealt with.

Now, amid this deluge of words, this exuberance of meaningless rhetoric and gorgeous imagery, is there not some middle ground on which to stand? Every intelligent man in this House, not blinded by prejudice or controlled by local political considerations, knows that the prosperity of the country is not dependent upon the continued monthly coinage of two million silver dollars, much less upon the unlimited production of this kind of money; while on the other hand very few, if any, will deny that silver, as well as gold, has its uses as a circulating medium; that to an extent, and under certain conditions, it is just as good money, and that any attempt to drive it out of circulation is neither wise, politic, nor possible. Personally I have no objection to silver except on the score of its inconvenience and the inevitable harm that will come from an oversupply of it. Gold is the world's money; it is better money than silver because of this fact. But for subsidiary purposes silver is a necessity; and while we are all willing to accept it we do not want any more of it than we are absolutely compelled to take.

I remember reading that when silver was denounced as poor money, in a former debate in Congress, an earnest advocate of silver coinage quickly retorted, "If the gentleman does not want to take silver I am willing to accept his salary in that coin;" whereupon there was a hearty laugh at the expense of the advocate of gold. It would be interesting to have this very thing happen—to have Congress paid off for one month in those huge silver orbs, apparently made to immortalize the raving beauty whose face adorns the coin—those legalized frauds and lies which pretend to be 100 cents when in reality they are only 79 cents. What an instructive study it would be to watch the faces of the members as they pocketed, or, more properly speaking, basketed their monthly allowance! What a broad smile would overspread the features of my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] as, bending beneath the load of precious coin, he foresaw visions of silver fiatism equally as grand and triumphal as any that wrought upon his fancy in the days when he was the Presidential candidate of the men who then were crazy on the subject of greenbackism and fiat paper money! What a mellifluous smile would light up the benevolent countenance of the able gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] as he saw, in this distribution of his pet coin, fresh encouragement to the mines of his State to do their best to supply the inexorable demands of impecunious Congressmen! How the genial gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] would rub his hands in glee and chuckle over this practical triumph of his profound financial wisdom! And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], who had a little session of his own in Washington before the assembling of Congress, which was heralded abroad as a mission fraught with momentous consequences to the country, but who failed to convert President Cleveland to his way of thinking on the silver question, would doubtless be content if that high official (with a salary as large as ten Democratic Congressmen, each one of whom is sure that he would make a better President than the present incumbent) were compelled to take his monthly stipend in the same weighty coin, while the eloquent gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who fairly staggered under the load of his mixed metaphors and classic quotations, would find this a greater burden even than the one he then carried! Just imagine that solemn procession of the nation's statesmen and lawgivers, and then have some degree of sympathy for the average American citizen who to-day is compelled to carry around a pocketful of this coin, and who is prohibited from enjoying the personal convenience and business advantage of one and two dollar bills because of the desire and demand to put an unnatural and unnecessary amount of this inconvenient and depreciated money into general circulation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is seriously argued that the country needs more money. Is that really so? Men talk of "cheap" money. Congressmen in lengthy speeches tell their constituents in effect, if not in words, that they are in debt; that their farms are mortgaged; that there is an abundance of silver in the mines of California, Colorado, and Nevada; and that the Government can and ought to make money out of that silver, distribute it among the people, and thereby better their condition. Doubtless some simple-minded people believe this talk, just as they believed the greenback heresies of a few years ago. But such persons should be reminded that a dollar (even a clipped silver dollar) can only be had in exchange for its equivalent in wheat, or cotton, or corn, or labor, or some other marketable commodity.

It is true the Government can make dollars, or something that is called dollars, but no device has yet been discovered that will enable the Government safely to put those dollars into circulation except in accordance with the inexorable laws of trade. And just here is the fallacy of the talk about cheap money. What is cheap money about which the gentleman from Texas talked so earnestly and eloquently? The history of the world shows that so-called cheap money has in reality always been dear money. The financial schemes of George Law were based on the idea of cheap money, but his schemes came to naught, as all such schemes have, carrying disaster and suffering in their train. It is well to remember that "things sweet to taste prove in digestion sour;" and the history of the disasters that have invariably followed an inflated and depreciated currency have painfully illustrated the truthfulness of Shakspeare's suggestion that > When sorrows come, they come not single spies,

> But in battalions.

We had in this country cheap money in 1868. In that year the national Republican convention declared that the best way to diminish the burden of the public debt, and thereby lift the burdens of taxation from the shoulders of the people, was to improve our credit so that money could be borrowed at a lower rate of interest. This was at a time when the Democratic party was even farther away from the sound financial principles that characterize the fiscal policy of President Cleveland than they are to-day. The Republican party was right, as the mighty financial events of the intervening period abundantly prove. Then the Government was paying $130,000,000 per annum interest on $2,169,000,000 of debt, whereas we are now paying $51,000,000 of interest on $1,260,000,000 of debt. The principal of the debt has been reduced 41⅛ per cent., while the interest charge has been reduced 60 per cent. This grand achievement was the direct result of improving the public credit, and yet intelligent men, some of them Republicans, gravely propose to again depreciate the currency through the instrumentality of unlimited silver coinage, and thus renew the distress that the wisdom of the great Republican party lifted from the shoulders of the people by the grandest display of financial wisdom that the world has ever beheld. It must not be done.

In this discussion the advocates of unlimited silver coinage have laid great stress upon the point that free coinage would necessarily benefit the laboring classes, while all history teaches the exact opposite. No better illustration of this can be found than in a very instructive address upon the money question, recently delivered by Mr. Joseph H. Walker, of Worcester, Mass., before the Massachusetts Club of Boston. Mr. Walker is a practical man who has given great attention to the subject, and he produced a most interesting and instructive collection of facts showing the purchasing power of men's wages and farmer's products in times of cheap money as compared with times when everything is upon a gold basis, his object being to illustrate the importance to workingmen of having the dollar of the country in which they are paid worth a hundred cents in gold; or, in other words, that a depreciation of the currency is always an injury to the laboring classes because, while inflation or cheap money increases their nominal wages, it increases the price of what they have to buy much more rapidly. For this purpose Mr. Walker takes the period from 1860 to 1885, during which this country tested the effects of inflation, its currency growing cheaper and cheaper until it took nearly three dollars of it to buy a gold dollar, and then appreciating until it reached a solid basis. As Mr. Walker says:

> The experiment of depreciating the currency was never tried in any country under circumstances more favorable to the wage-worker than here. A war was in progress during four years of the time of such vast proportions that the consumption of the aggregate products of labor was increased by fully one-tenth, besides which more than one-tenth of the men who competed with each other in the labor market were employed in military operations, which was the equivalent of increasing the market for the laborer by one-fourth. Under these apparently favorable conditions for the wage-worker the value of his wages to him ought to have materially increased instead of depreciating, if it is possible for him ever to save himself from loss in periods of a debased currency.
>
> But what were the facts? In 1860 a dyer in a woolen factory received 67 cents a day, and with this he could buy in a year the following necessaries which Mr. Walker assumes would keep a family of four persons just above the freezing and starving point:

Articles.	Quantity.	Price.	Total.
Flour ..... barrels...	3	$8 25	$24 75
Corn-meal ..... pounds...	150	04	6 00
Granulated sugar ..... do.....	150	11	16 50
Fresh beef ..... do.....	200	10	20 00
Corned beef ..... do.....	100	08	8 00
Pork ..... do.....	100	10	10 00
Lard ..... do.....	24	11	2 64
Ham (whole) ..... do.....	16	10	1 60
Codfish ..... do.....	100	06	6 00
Tea ..... do.....	12	75	9 00
Butter ..... do.....	75	23	17 25
Cheese ..... do.....	10	12	1 20
Beans ..... bushels...	1	2 50	2 50
Potatoes ..... do.....	12	50	6 00
Coal ..... tons...	4	7 25	29 00
CLOTHING FOR ONE YEAR.
Shoes ..... pairs...	3	1 45	4 35
Cotton cloths ..... yards...	20	10	2 00
Prints ..... do.....	20	08	1 60
Denims ..... do.....	5	15	75
Satinets ..... do.....	12	65	7 86
Rent	.....	4 00	48 00
Total	.....	.....	$225 00

In 1864 inflation had increased this dyer's wages to $1 a day, but it had also increased the price of the articles named above, which cost in 1860 $225 to $441.67, so that he was no better off than he would have been with 50 cents a day four years before. The purchasing power of his wages was, therefore, one-quarter less in 1864, when the premium on gold averaged $1.21, than in 1860, when there was no premium. The next year the dyer's wages advanced to $1.20 per day, in 1866 they were $1.25, and in 1867 they were $1.30, which was the highest point reached. From that time they declined until 1873, when they were a dollar a day, but the premium on gold had dropped to 15 cents, and the price of his year's supplies to $278.58, so that his wages at that time had a purchasing power of 80 cents as against 67 cents in 1860 and 50 cents in 1864.

The panic of 1874–'75 reduced his wages to 80 cents a day, but the premium on gold had disappeared and the price of the goods named had fallen to about $245, so that he could buy with his wages as much as he could when he got a dollar a day and more, nearly 50 per cent. more than when he received $1.20. Since 1881 he has been getting a dollar a day, and with this he can buy now more than twice as much as he could in 1864, for $216 buys now the articles which cost twenty-two years ago $441. The same relative facts appear in all other lines of industry. Green shavers, whiteners, and skivers who were paid $1.75 in 1860 and $2.50 in 1864 could only buy with their $2.50 in 1864 what they could buy with $1.27½ in 1860. Therefore their real wages in 1864 were more than one-quarter less than in 1860. It was eight years before their wages were worth to them as much as in 1860.

During that time their real wages averaged $1.40⅜, and they lost the value of 416¼ days' wages, $729—nearly a year and a half. To-day their wages are $2.90—nearly two-thirds more than in 1860.

Carpenters who were paid the same as the greenshavers, &c., in 1860 and 1864, with the same results for those years, got their wages back sooner.

In six years carpenters' wages were worth to them as much as in 1860.

During that time their real wages were $1.45½, and they lost the value of 260 days' wages, $455—nearly seven-eighths of a year. To-day the wages are $1.75, the same as in 1860.

Machinists who were paid $2 in 1860 and $2.50 in 1864, could only buy with their $2.50, in 1864, what they could buy with $1.27½ in 1860. Their real wages therefore were in 1864 nearly three-eighths less than in 1860. It was eight years before their wages were worth to them as much as in 1860. During that time their real wages averaged $1.61⅜, and they lost the value of 405¾ days' wages, $810.60—over one year and a third.

To-day their wages are $2.25—one-eighth more than in 1860.

Locomotive engineers, who were paid $2.40 in 1860 and $2 80 in 1864, could only buy with their $2.80 in 1864, what they could buy with $1.42⅞ in 1860. Therefore their real wages in 1864 were more than two-fifths less than in 1860. It was ten years before their wages were worth to them as much as in 1860. During that time their real wages averaged $1.91¼ a day, and they lost the value of 545⅞ days' wages, $1,309.50—nearly one year and seven-eighths.

To-day their wages are $3.20—one-third more than in 1860.

Locomotive firemen, who were paid $1.20 in 1860 and $1.50 in 1864, could only buy with their $1.50 in 1864 what they could buy with .76⅞ in 1860.

Their real wages, therefore, in 1864 were nearly three-eighths less than in 1860. It was eight years before their wages were worth to them as much as in 1860. During that time their real wages averaged .93¾, and they lost the value of 468 days' wages, $561.75—more than one year and a half.

To-day their wages are $1.75—nearly 46 per cent. more than in 1860.

In this way Mr. Walker finds that in nineteen of the leading industries of the country the operatives lost by the inflation of 1860–'64 in wages, or the purchasing power of wages, equivalent to what they could earn in a year and a tenth, and he says:

Taking the country over and reckoning five persons to a family it gives ten million families. Assuming that the earnings of each family are $250 a year of three hundred days, shows that the loss to the wage-workers of the country by the depreciation of the currency was $2,750,000,000, a sum equal to the public debt on August 31, 1865, its highest point, and nearly double the present national debt. This experience of the American wage-worker is precisely that of his brother in France during inflation times, excepting not so severe. There thousands of artisans and their families actually died of starvation. Their wages, while nominally high, would not buy enough to sustain life. The history of England shows the same state of things during the clipping and debasing of her coin, and also in the times of her inflated paper currency. And the same is true of every country that has tried such experiments.

These are instructive facts borne out by the record, and they are of the utmost importance now when a tremendous effort is being made in this Congress to cheapen the money of the country by the unlimited coinage of 79-cent dollars under the false and misleading plea that it will benefit the working classes. On the contrary, it will bring demoralization to labor, sorrow to American homes, and a harvest of discontent and disaster such as our country has rarely seen.

The claim is gravely asserted on this floor that there is a scarcity of money and that the Government must make it more plentiful. The talk about a scarcity of money in this country is a delusion and a snare, the fact being that the money market is absolutely glutted.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] in his exceedingly able speech pointed out that notwithstanding this cry has been reverberating in these Halls, as high as $64,000,000 have been locked up at one time during the past year in the vaults of New York city, the holders being unable to float it at the exceedingly low rate of 2¾ per cent. That is a solemn truth. Money has been so plentiful at all the money centers that it could hardly be loaned at any rate of interest. Over and above the legal reserve there has been from $24,000,000 to $64,000,000 lying idle in New York city alone, and when loans have been made on good collateral they have been at from 2¾ to 5½ per cent. The annual review of the Financial Chronicle closes with the significant remark that "money was practically easy throughout the entire year." And yet our silver philosophers are clamoring for cheap money. It is not more money that the country needs, but more collateral; and this can only be secured by preventing further coinage of silver, by voting down all propositions to emasculate our tariff laws, and by giving the country a profound rest from all violent agitation of financial and revenue questions.

Mr. Speaker, we all remember a few years ago, when the Greenback heresy broke out in this country in its most virulent form—this grand financial scheme that was to give riches to every impecunious bummer who stood on the street corner or held down the dry-goods box on the sidewalk while his neighbor did the work—how utterly impossible it was to satisfactorily discuss the currency question with a man who had a severe attack of the disease. As well might one have ventured to argue with a cyclone or to have tried conclusions with dynamite. In that discussion the Greenbacker simply overwhelmed his opponent with tables of statistics, and that was the end of it. When the advocate of honest money succeeded in digging himself out from the mass of figures that had been hurled at him he could not help admiring the industry and ingenuity—mistaken though they were—that enabled a man, in this short life of ours, to get together so much material of so immaterial a quality.

It would be interesting if our friend from Iowa would bring forth from his attic some of the speeches he delivered during his candidacy for the Presidency, and, in the light of what has since happened, read them to this House for its edification and amusement. But the fact remains that the Greenbacker always imagined he had the best of the argument, and he absolutely knew that he had the figures before which facts had to give way. So to-day we are being bombarded with ingeniously-constructed tables, showing the beauties and delights of unlimited silver coinage. As the country survived the Greenback craze, so, too, it will survive the silver craze, and a few years hence, when the finances of the country are again adjusted on a stable basis, when logic has taken the place of assertion and knowledge has regained the throne from which speculation has driven her, the people of this country will look back with as great surprise upon the financial record that the silver men of this Congress are making as they now look with astonishment upon the foolish Greenback heresy that swept over the land, carrying into its ranks a vast army of followers, even bringing the great Democratic party upon bended knee before this dishonest and outrageous scheme of practically irredeemable paper money.

I will not stop to discuss the question whether the stock of gold in the world is sufficient to meet the banking and commercial operations of Europe and America independently of a properly regulated silver legal tender. Time and time again on this floor the broad statement has been made that there is not enough gold in the world for this purpose. I will, however, suggest that many of the ablest financiers of this country hold to an entirely different opinion. Indeed, a vast majority of those whose opinions ought to be authoritative believe that with our present methods of transacting business there is an abundance of gold for all practical purposes. Neither will I stop to argue the question how best European nations can be brought to an agreement with this country on the silver question, except to say that it certainly will not be by free coinage on our part, thus giving them an unlimited market for their silver, and producing a consequent drainage of gold from the United States.

The only additional point I desire to make is that there is neither wisdom nor necessity in the continuance of silver coinage. Our vaults are already groaning under the weight of 79-cent silver coins, every one of which ought to be recoined into honest dollars. We have enough on hand, and there is neither sense nor justice in the Government continuing to purchase the product of the silver mines of the country when there is no demand for it after it is coined into money.

As an illustration of the utter folly of continuing silver coinage under existing circumstances, the following letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which was laid before Congress on the 26th day of March, is exceedingly instructive. The Treasury Department asks for an additional appropriation to build more vaults in which to store this superfluous money. The Secretary says:

The last appropriation for this purpose was $100,000, made in 1883, of which there remains unexpended the sum of $1,707.28. In view of the fact that the amount of standard silver dollars required to be coined under existing law is about $27,000,000 each year, and that the remaining space available in the vaults of the subtreasury offices other than at New Orleans is not sufficient for the storage of the coinage for the ensuing twelve months, it is deemed advisable and prudent to ask that a suitable appropriation be made to enable the Department to erect vaults in some other of the subtreasury offices, leaving the vault at New Orleans free for the storage of the accumulation of the coinage executed at the mint in that city.

What profound statesmanship it is for Congress to compel the Government to buy silver and coin money that can not be put in circulation, and then spend large sums in building vaults in which to store the repudiated currency!

I am not ignorant of the fact that the debtor States of the West and South doubtless think this is a smart way to pay off the creditor States of the East. No matter what they say about it some of them at least know that the inevitable effect of unlimited silver coinage will be to drive gold out of circulation, and very likely out of the country, leaving the depreciated silver dollar as the sole basis of our monetary system. They may think it a shrewd business speculation to pay off their debts in money actually worth from 20 to 30 per cent. less than it claims to be. The bulk of these obligations were incurred when the currency was on a parity with gold, and if they can be paid in a depreciated currency it is clear that millions of dollars will be saved to the debtor States. But let me ask, in all seriousness, will this pay? The New York Daily Commercial Bulletin aptly says on this point:

Do legislative integrity and commercial honor pass for nothing in the progress of a people? Are those nations most successful who best succeed in the legalization of fraud? Is confiscation through manipulation of the currency a good basis for that confidence which is essential to the progress of any nation? If Western enterprise is largely based upon Eastern capital, can the West afford to alienate the class upon which they are so vitally dependent? If the Eastern creditors are defrauded upon their now outstanding claims, will they not be likely to make terms upon future loans which will protect them against the repetition of such exactions and compensate them for past losses?

Confessedly the ablest financiers of the country are against the continuance of silver coinage. I am aware that to a class in this House the mention of a bankers' association is enough to throw them into financial spasms; yet to me it is a significant fact that the American Bankers' Association recently gave expression to the following:

The coinage of silver dollars under the compulsory law of 1878 is detrimental to the best interests of the people and dangerous to the welfare of the Government, and the law should be immediately suspended and remain inoperative until an international agreement with leading commercial nations shall give substantial assurance as to the future relations of gold and silver as money.

The recent protest of the New York banks is full of meaning to all who have not a chronic sneer for banks and bankers. It shows conclusively that the business interests of the country are against the continuance of silver coinage.

The savings-banks of the country, those depositories where men, women, and children lay aside their small savings for a "rainy day," are strongly against the proposition embraced in this bill. In the little State that I have the honor in part to represent on this floor there are sixty-seven savings-banks. The number of depositors at the close of the year 1885 was 121,216, and the amount deposited $43,827,356. More than every third person in the State has an account with a savings-bank, and the deposits for the entire population is about $125 per capita. This is a magnificent showing, and if the same industry and thrift had been practiced by the people of the Western and Southern States as by the people of New Hampsnire we would have far less clamor for free silver coinage and much less talk about cheap money. Now I have taken pains to make inquiry of the custodians of these funds, and I have yet to find one of them who is in favor of free coinage, or who does not feel that the suspension of silver coinage would be a blessing to the country. In view of this fact I do not propose to be either a principal or an accessory in the great crime against sound financial principles which is embodied in the bill now under discussion.

Mr. John Jay Knox, whose name is a household word among business men in this country, says:

The silver dollars which are now in the Treasury, or in circulation, if the amount is not increased, could continue to be used upon an equality with gold itself. A slightly increased issue will place the country, not upon a double standard of gold and silver, but upon the silver standard alone. The friends of a good currency will insist upon the suspension of the coinage act. It is of the first importance, and no effort should be spared to accomplish this result.

Hon. David A. Wells, the eminent economist, emphatically declares:

I accept the general opinion that the suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar would favor the plan of a conference of the European governments, with a view of some joint action. I should also be in favor of the assemblage of such a conference irrespective of results; for no harm can ever come from the broadest, most intelligent, and freest discussion of any subject. * * * I favor an immediate suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar.

Mr. B. E. Walker, a distinguished New York merchant, gives this testimony:

The stability of our currency demands the immediate suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar. Even if it were an honest dollar, the currency has been inflated by the amount coined, and the possibility of our not being able to maintain a gold standard is already seriously interfering with foreign trade where long credits are required. The standard dollar should never have been coined, and it only passes as money because of the virtual contract of the Government to redeem it. It is merely so much bullion, which the Government must some day sell as such, and we are committing the unparalleled folly of holding this enormous stock of bullion in a falling market, every month adding to our stock and every month witnessing a lower quotation for our merchandise.

Mr. D. C. Robbins says:

A suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar should very properly precede any attempt on our part to induce European governments to join in an international coinage compact. The coinage of the silver dollar should, without doubt, be suspended as soon as possible, because needless and improper.

Mr. John E. DeWitt, president of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Maine, is equally emphatic, as follows:

Not to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar would compel the United States Government to become the purchaser of gold to pay its bond obligations, interest and principal, either by the means of custom dues or direct purchases. It would create a currency system within this country entirely foreign to that of all others, namely, a silver basis; and the prospective trade of this country would be injured, because it would create a set of middlemen who would have to be compensated by commissions for the capital used in transferring the silver values into gold, wherever our people had a foreign bill to pay, thus making an additional tax on the people to that extent.

Mr. D. Pingree, of Salem, Mass., a leading authority on financial matters, truthfully declares:

With a prospective premium on gold staring the country in the face, what greater disturbance could there be to the finances of the United States, to our currency system, or to the trade of the country than the continuance of the silver coinage. When the Colorado silver miner sells his product to the Government, he knows that he does not receive the value of a gold dollar for what the Government coins into a silver dollar. When any one buys a gold dollar's worth of flour, he knows that, if the Government should take one quarter of it, and stamp a tag on the balance, saying this is a gold dollar's worth of flour, it would not give him a gold dollar's worth of nourishment. A Government lie is no better than any other lie, and when there is a sufficient accumulation of such lies to pervade the community, they are felt and appreciated at what they are worth. All the channels of trade rise up to resent a financial lie, and do not resume their natural course till it is thoroughly killed. Our double-standard coinage is not a true coinage. It is a disturbing element to trade, and should be suspended at once.

Hundreds of similar declarations from eminent financiers all over the country could be quoted, but enough has been given to show that the business men and sound business interests are against continued coinage, and that they stand appalled before the prospect of unlimited coinage. It is interesting to know that the total coinage of the silver dollar from the organization of the Government to 1834, a period of forty-two years, was only $1,369,517. The coinage from 1834 to 1873 was about $6,000,000, or $160,000 per year, while during the past seven years more than two hundred millions have been coined, a large proportion of which are in the vaults of the Treasury, guarded by watchmen, and depreciating day by day. Is it not time to return to the "Democratic simplicity" of the fathers of the Republic on this subject, and conclude that President Cleveland's "innocuous desuetude" is precisely what the silver dollar needs? Its unrestricted use is harmful, its disuse will be harmless.

Two international monetary conferences have utterly failed to unite the nations on the question of silver. It may be wise to make an effort for another, but that can only be brought about after our mints cease to make silver dollars. As Mr. S. Dana Horton, one of our representatives in the international monetary conferences of 1878 and 1881, in an instructive book just published, says:

To perform this task, it is essential that our Republic should act as a nation in the community of nations, with the will of a strong man who understands himself, who knows what he is doing. To this end we must eschew errors both of anti-silver men and of silver men; we must be "bimetallists" entitled to the name. If we are to make silver equal to gold as it was a dozen years ago, it must be as international a money as gold; we must be "international bimetallists." The leaders of the nation are committed to this international policy by act of Congress and by the will of the people.

To the gentlemen who, in their speeches on this floor, have declared that the United States can get along without any agreement with other nations on the silver question, these words will have no weight. But to those of us who believe that our coin money should have an international as well as a national value, they are words of wisdom which ought to be heeded. As an eminent financial writer suggests, the gold standard is a fixed fact in the commercial world, in all that portion of the globe which we call civilized, which is not, and, under existing circumstances, can not be true of silver. It is just as much fixed in bimetallic France as in monometallic England, just as much in Holland, Belgium, and Italy, as in Germany, Spain, and Portugal. It is equally so in Russia and Austria, although both are nominally silver, but actually shinplaster countries for the time being. The monetary dislocation of the United States from the countries with which all but the merest fraction of our commercial transactions are carried on can not be contemplated without the gravest apprehensions. But that is not all, nor is it the worst. The depreciation of our domestic currency is fraught with much graver consequences. The course of this depreciation and the consequences of it would be the same as they were when we entered upon the down-hill career with our greenbacks, except that the depreciation would be limited by the bullion value of silver, and would fluctuate from day to day with that.

In the international monetary conference of 1878, held in Paris, the danger that threatens this country if our mints are opened and European nations are invited to send their surplus silver to us to be coined, was forcibly expressed by Mr. Pirmez, one of the delegates from Belgium. In advocating the proposition that to accomplish any good result all the governments of the world should adopt simultaneously an identical relation between gold and silver, Mr. Pirmez said:

It is evident, indeed, that if the relation to be established between the metals does not comprise all states in its embrace, the metal whose commercial value exceeds its conventional value [gold] will flow into the states remaining free, and the depreciated metal [silver] will accumulate in the states bound to receive it, and attributing to it by agreement a fictitious value. The coalition which will be formed between a more or less great number of nations will have no other consequence than that of making those nations a field of speculation for the countries which shall not have accepted the relation between the two metals. Let us suppose that all the states whose delegates are sitting here adopt one of the ratios indicated—whether the ratio of 1 to 15½ or 1 to 16 is immaterial. The first thing that will happen will be that Germany will pour her stock of silver into these states, taking from them a corresponding quantity of gold at the fixed ratio, namely, 15 per cent. perhaps above the commercial value of that silver, which would amount perhaps to 50,000,000 francs. I think that were we to adopt such a measure Germany would have little desire of attending congresses, for she would find her affairs managed better in her absence than she could have ventured to demand if present.

The above language applies with startling force to the United States to day. The monetary conference was composed of delegates from Austro-Hungary, Belgium, France, Italy, The Netherlands, Russia, Sweden and Norway, Switzerland, Great Britain, and Greece. It was the opinion of this eminent financier, Mr. Pirmez, that these nations combined could not safely enter into an international agreement as to silver, an opinion justified by the result of the conference, for one reason because Germany, who did not participate in the deliberations, would pour her stock of silver into these nations and drain away their gold at a great profit. And yet it is seriously contemplated to open the mints of the United States to all the nations of the world! What a stupendous piece of folly that would be? How long would a single dollar of our gold supply continue with us under such circumstances?

Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to multiply words to state the conclusions of my own mind. I believe in silver money as well as gold money, but with our present stock of silver dollars I believe we have already more than enough of that kind of money, and hence the sooner the so called Bland act is repealed and the coinage of silver dollars, temporarily at least, ceases, the better will it be for the country, and especially so for the laboring classes, who most need the protection of the Government. For a time at least the financial question will be quiescent; confidence will be restored; capital, always timid, will adjust itself to the demands of trade, and a greater degree of prosperity will result than can possibly be secured so long as this question is made the football of every would-be philosopher and ambitious politician. This accomplished, I would have the Government make its present dishonest dollars ("standard" and "trade" alike) true representatives of what they profess to be, and then trust to the financial integrity and business enterprise of the country for a full revival of both foreign and domestic trade, a condition of things always impossible while visionary schemes of finance are being discussed in Congress, and the minds of the people are being poisoned with the idea that there is a royal road to wealth, and that they have only to reverse the well-established principles of monetary science to have riches, like the rain, descend upon the unjust and the just alike. This country can certainly afford to adopt the advice of France's great financial authority, Henry Cernuschi, himself a pronounced bimetallist, when he says:

So long as the bimetallic treaty, proposed in 1881 by the United States and France, is not accepted either by England or by Germany, not one silver five-franc piece should be coined in France, not one silver dollar should be coined in the United States. In no form, under no pretext, should silver currency be increased, neither in France nor in the United States.

Upon this platform every American, be he Congressman or not, can safely stand, so far at least as the interests of the country are concerned; and were it not that "Ephraim is wedded to his idols" I should expect to see these sentiments crystallized into a bill and enacted into law before the Forty-ninth Congress becomes a thing of the past. But if this can not be done, as now seems probable, let us at least put our foot and the seal of our condemnation upon the monstrous proposition to coin silver in unlimited quantities—a proposition that, in view of the attitude of most European nations on the subject, will strike a deadly blow at the prosperity of this country and bring back to us sad reminders of former troublous and disastrous days. It is in our power to avert this calamity by wise legislation, and I have faith to believe that the good sense of the American Congress will resist the clamor and unreasonable demands of the owners of silver mines and the advocates of unlimited coinage, thus protecting the interests and defending the honor of a nation whose marvelous growth in the past is an assurance of still greater development in the future, provided she is not wrecked by legislative enactments that are calculated to impair her credit and strike down her industries. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to answer, if I can, the principal objections to the further coinage of the American silver dollar, and to its free and unlimited coinage, urged by the President in his message to this Congress by the fiscal agents of this Government in their annual reports, and by at least three members on this floor.

They have all publicly and unequivocally declared that it is the duty of the legislative branch of the Government to suspend indefinitely the coinage of silver, or, in other words, to practically destroy one of the two kinds of money provided for and guaranteed by the Constitution.

I know that this House will not embody their views in a national statute, as the life and prosperity of a nation depend, in a great measure, upon the wisdom and stability of its financial system; but upon solemn consideration and debate, may liken them to "two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek them all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search."

I do not intend in this discussion to allude to the antiquity of the use of silver or its peculiar fitness as a medium of exchange, as the country is flooded with literature on these subjects. Suffice it to say that the silver dollar was the original unit of value and circulated in perfect harmony and equality with gold from 1792 until 1873, when in that and the subsequent year, either through fraud, accident, or ignorance, the silver dollar was omitted from the list of coins to be thereafter minted, and made a legal tender for the sum of only $5.

Of course no act of Congress could demonetize the silver dollars then existing, as it is well settled that when silver coins of the required weight and fineness have been fabricated at the mints they become full legal tender by virtue of the Constitution, without any declaration of Congress being necessary to make them such.

The then President of the United States was certainly not aware of this unprecedented and unparalleled legislation. Believing that Congress had not affected the status of the silver dollar, he, on January 14, 1875, recommended the establishment of additional mints at Omaha, Chicago, and Saint Louis, that silver dollars might therein be coined, and the resumption of specie payment on the 1st day of January, 1879, in pursuance of the act of 1875, be facilitated.

The people never knew that the silver dollar was demonetized until the 30th day of March, 1876, when Senator Conkling asked Mr. Sherman to tell him "if it were true that there is now by law no American dollar." The answer to that question was the first revelation to the people that the silver dollar had been smuggled out of existence by national legislation of questionable character.

Up to 1873 no American statesman in or out of Congress ever favored the demonetization of the silver dollars, the indefinite suspension of their coinage, or any sort of discrimination between them and gold dollars. No great political party ever had the hardihood since the formation of the Government to go before the American people, standing upon a platform that declared in favor of the destruction or the degradation of silver money. No man was ever nominated by a great party for the high office of President who had the temerity to express in a public letter of acceptance a word of hostility to the dollar of your fathers.

Had Governor Cleveland embodied in his letter accepting the nomination of the Chicago Democratic national convention the financial theories and recommendations contained in his message there is not a member here who believes that he would ever have crossed the threshold of the White House except as a visitor. I predict that there is not an advocate here of a single-money standard who will dare in 1888 to champion for a Presidential nomination an avowed enemy of silver, even though he be the personification of civil-service reform.

Who complains against the silver dollar on account of its size, weight, utility, or value? There are more than forty millions of people who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, who own no gold, no nontaxable bonds, and not one of them has ever protested against the silver dollars. The only protest they are making is against the unjust restraint placed upon their circulation.

The farmer, manufacturer, mechanic, and laborer are interposing no objection. This class of people ought to be entitled to some consideration. They have presented no petition or remonstrance against the further coinage of silver. Healthy discussion has made it as clear as the "handwriting on the wall" that the sentiment of the common people is for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, or for a measure that will be a full equivalent, if there can be any such. It is voiced by almost every unsubsidized newspaper in the nation, and by almost every man who has given the silver question serious study, who is not a bondholder, banker, or member of a board of trade, or chamber of commerce, or an officer of the Treasury Department at Washington.

The President in his message characterizes, or rather caricatures, the present "Bland act silver dollar" as an 80-cent dollar. I have known learned members of Congress to do the same thing in the cloak-room, and declare it to be a nuisance that required immediate abatement.

Before replying to this "light-weight" charge, it may be proper to state that there is some evidence tending to cast suspicion upon the authorship of that portion of the President's message relating to finance. In support of this assertion, I cite the following paragraph from the President's message:

The most distinguished writer on bimetallism has said "no American citizen's hand has yet felt the sensation of cheapness either in receiving or expending the silver-act dollars."

Now I find this same paragraph on page 28 of a little book entitled The Great Metallic Powers, which I now hold in my hand, and to which I invite attention. The author is an Italian-Frenchman named Henri Cornuschi. He is the same man who predicted in 1878 that the Bland act would cause an instant departure of all the gold in America. His views on the question of the immediate suspension of silver coinage are the reflex of those of the President and Secretary Manning. His theory is to demonetize and destroy the silver dollar instanter, to enable it, phœnix-like, to rise from its ashes at some not far distant day in renewed life and vigor. There are in this country a myriad of intelligent, level-headed men, who have given this subject a serious and impartial consideration, who have no confidence in the Cornuschian policy of killing a sick man that he may speedily be resurrected in the full bloom of manhood.

I find on a fly leaf in the margin of the Cernuschi pamphlet the following words: "With the compliments of Mr. Manton Marble, 532 Fifth avenue, New York." Manton Marble, a New York monometallist, was the gentleman delegated by the President to bring about an international money congress in the interest of bimetallism—a thing which he ought to have known was beyond the range of possibility in view of the then attitude of the great creditor nations.

It may be that Manton Marble bumped up against Cernuschi in Paris, became inoculated with his views on American finance, and incorporated them into the message of the President, who in all probability never had time to study the question from any other than a New York city standpoint. At any rate, it is a singular coincidence that at a supreme moment Manton Marble and the President should recognize Cernuschi as supreme authority on finance. Admitting that he is the most distinguished writer and authority on bimetallism, as claimed by the President, I will hereafter cite his book as a witness to prove that free coinage in America is an indispensable necessity, and that it makes an 80-cent dollar an impossibility.

If the present dollar be any 80-cent dollar, the complaint of the monometallist is not without foundation. Though from a silver State, I am opposed to such a "coined monstrosity."

I deny the existence of any 80-cent dollar in America. Our present dollar contains 371¼ grains of pure silver. No American silver dollar ever had any more. It is a legal debt-paying dollar. The very moment it is impressed with the stamp of the Government it will buy enough gold bullion to make a gold dollar. It is worth 100 cents in silver. It will buy 100 cents' worth of any commodity or necessary of life as well as a gold dollar. Its purchasing power is as great now as it was in 1873, when it commanded a premium over gold, and when no one complained of a "light-weight" gold dollar. It will liquidate a coin debt of the value of 100 cents. If a day's labor is worth 100 cents in American money, a silver dollar containing 412½ grains of standard silver will buy it. There is no fraction of an 80-cent dollar, but a cent is a fraction of a dollar worth 100 cents.

There are no two prices on goods, such as a silver and a gold price. The laws of trade, of Congress, and the Constitution make it worth 100 cents. Present it at any place of business between New York and San Francisco and it will be received on perfect equality with the gold dollar. In all domestic monetary transactions a 412½-grain standard silver dollar is the peer of the 25.8-grain gold dollar, no matter how high the premium. A greenback or national-bank note of the denomination of a dollar is as good as a gold dollar, but no better than a silver certificate for the same amount, and the silver certificate is no better than a silver dollar. The silver dollar is received at the custom-houses for import duties as the equivalent of a gold dollar, but no one understands how, in a moment after its reception, it has become so shrunken in value to the extent of 20 per cent. that the patriotism of the Secretary of the Treasury will not permit him to pay it out to a bondholder who contracted to take it as the equivalent of 100 cents' worth of gold.

Congress has more than once declared the silver dollar to be the equal of the gold dollar in value. The Bland act of 1878 says so. Section 3527 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

> Silver coins, other than the trade-dollar, shall be paid out at the several mints * * * in exchange for gold coins at par in sums not less than $100.

Now, if a silver dollar is good enough to pay out at a subtreasury of the United States for a gold dollar, by what process of reasoning can it be maintained that the Secretary of the Treasury is justified in refusing to pay it out with gold to the bondholder who contracted in express terms to receive it in satisfaction of his debt?

The 80-cent dollar exists only in imagination. It has not depreciated in forty years more than any commodity the value of which it is intended to measure. Its production has scarcely kept pace with the expansion of commerce and the growth of population. It is not a "coined lie," as stated by Senator FRYE a few days ago at a Boston banquet given by the Boston Board of Trade, but it is a coined truth.

Senator FRYE is the first man who has ever discovered that a silver dollar coined by authority of the Constitution and of the weight and fineness provided by Congress is a "coined lie." The Senator, fortunately for himself, gave no reason for the "faith that was in him." It is evident that his estimate of the American dollar bearing the stamp of an American mint was based on the value of silver bullion as compared with gold, when regulated by the London market.

If Senator FRYE had been Secretary of the Treasury since 1878, and had obeyed the laws instead of substituting therefor his own opinions, and paid out the silver dollar to him who agreed to take it in payment for a debt, he would never have reached the conclusion that it is "a coined lie." He would have declared it to be a coined truth, because a decent compliance with law would have raised the value of silver and reduced the premium on gold.

If the denunciations of the President, Senator FRYE, and the bondholders against the "light-weight" dollar are deserved, it logically follows that every substance out of which money is made, if it does not possess the intrinsic value of gold bullion as regulated by the London market, ought to be condemned and cast into the fire.

The trade-dollar contains 7½ grains more of standard silver than the present dollar, yet it is worth 20 cents less solely because Congress has not made it one of the current coins of the country. The Treasury notes that were issued to meet a national emergency are intrinsically worthless—a mere evidence of debt, a substitute for real money, being redeemable in real money coin. They live upon the credit of the Government only, and still they have the same purchasing power as gold, because of the people's faith in the solvency of the Government. Two half dollars have 6 cents' worth of silver less than the silver dollar, but ten of them will pay a debt of $5 as well as a gold half-eagle, or any other kind of currency.

When coinage is not free the weight of the dollar is of no more importance than the dimensions given to paper money.

Cotton does not bring a higher price by increasing the size of the bales, nor sugar by making loaves heavier than usual. These commodities are sold by weight. Just the same with silver. Whether the owners of silver in the United States send to Europe dollars of 412½ grains or of 500, or simply bullion, it will make no difference, silver will still be bought by weight, to be sent, as now, mostly to Asia.

And corroborative of this I will quote from the distinguished member from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY], who, in his recent speech in favor of the gold standard, clearly confesses that silver when represented by silver certificates is the equal of gold and is good enough for the bondholder. He says:

> There is pending a proposition now which requires the Secretary to redeme called bonds in silver dollars. I do not suppose that means an actual delivery to each bondholder of the veritable dollars themselves, but that they shall be paid in representative money of which silver is the basis. Well, suppose that should be done, who would be hurt by it? Not the individual holder of the bond, for, silver still being the equal of gold, he would convert the money into other property and be as well off as before.

Now if silver be as good as gold when represented by a silver certificate, it must require a most fertile imagination to reach the gentleman's final conclusion that "gold, in his opinion, in spite of all your laws, by virtue of a law of its own, will still be king."

His was a most eloquent speech, but in my humble opinion it surpasses the understanding of the average intellect. To prove the truth of this assertion, I invite attention to the following extracts, trusting that the House will give them its most earnest attention. He says:

> Daniel was once called upon to tell a great king the nature of a forgotten dream, and then to interpret its meaning. The prophet declared that the vision that the king had seen in the night, and which he vainly attempted to recall, bodied forth a colossal figure, the head of which was gold, the arms and waist of silver, the rest of the body of brass, the legs of iron, and the feet of iron and clay. A stone cut out of the side of the mountain dashed against this figure and ground it into pieces, and the wind blew it away and it was seen no more.
>
> This tremendous figure does not inaptly represent the progressive growth of monetary evolution, which, from the rudimentary forms of barter and exchange, the mere clay at its feet, has gradually developed along the scale of inferior metals, through iron, copper, and silver, until it has reached its culmination and crown in gold. In this evolution, there has been not merely a change of physical form, by which one metal has superseded another, but a differentiation of function also, by which the primitive faculty of metallic money as exchange has gradually given way to its higher and superior virtue as an instrument for storing value, in the course of which the world's commerce has come to be carried on in great part by a secondary or representative currency.

I presume that every member of the House, except myself, has a clear conception of the meaning of these two paragraphs. An experience of thirty-three years on the Pacific coast justifies me in declaring that to a man west of the Rocky Mountains they are no more intelligible than the hieroglyphics on an Egyptian obelisk.

If there is anything in this Darwinian theory of monetary evolution it must be that the march of intelligence has been gradually displacing the baser with the more precious metals, and finally culminated in crowning gold as the sole standard of exchange. I will hereafter show that if legislation had paralyzed the silver industry of the country a quarter of a century ago, it would be doubtful if the gentleman from Maryland could find enough of the raw material out of which to erect his colossal figure that is to be surmounted by a crown of gold.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the Coinage Committee, who made a speech in favor of the gold standard on a day dedicated to the consideration of private bills, is a firm believer in Mr. FINDLAY'S modern doctrine of monetary evolution. Why not carry out the theory to its legitimate result, and advocate the adoption of platinum as the sole standard of value, it being a more precious metal than either gold or silver, and therefore must necessarily drive all others out of circulation. He admits that gold, silver, and United States notes are of equal value and are so treated by the Treasury, and that a standard silver dollar of 412½ grains, when stamped by the Government, is equal to a gold dollar, but says that if the Secretary of the Treasury gives him a check on the subtreasury at New York for $10,000 in money, which means gold, silver, or paper, if silver is offered when presented for payment he would infer that the Government was trying to force upon him that which did not represent $10,000 in true money.

How is it possible to argue the subject of finance with a gentleman who positively avers that a 412½-grain silver dollar is the equal of a gold and paper dollar, but when presented to him in payment of a check for a dollar in money, he regards it with suspicion and infers that the Government is trying to cheat him and force upon him a dollar that is not true money. No friend of bimetallism can be shaken in his faith by the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who confesses in the peroration that all his convictions on finance are based upon an assumption of facts.

If the weight of the silver dollar is to be increased, then all our public and private contracts resting upon our present coin basis are necessarily changed and violated, and the creditor gets more grains of silver in the dollar than he stipulated to receive. A heavier dollar would not prevent the premium on gold from rising higher if the product of gold continues to decline. Every time gold goes up in London Congress might be called on to inject more grains into the silver dollar. Every time gold drops silver rises. If such a system were adopted the silver dollars might have to be called into the Treasury, filed down or recoined.

How can the advocate of a heavier dollar reconcile his theory with the fact that silver worth less than ours has circulated in France at par value with gold for one hundred years at a ratio of 15½ to 1, when her gold was as valuable as gold in London? Because the laws of France, like our laws up to 1873, made them equal.

I admit that silver bullion as compared with gold bullion has fallen in price, but not lower than any other article of merchandise. Why? Because this country, that produces one-third of the gold and one-half of the silver of the world, allows London, the capital of a foreign country, that produces no precious metals, to fix the price of American silver for the benefit of England. She is the greatest creditor nation in the world. From foreign investments and foreign trade she realizes $500,000,000 per annum. She owns not less than $3,250,000,000 interest-bearing debts.

Being a gold-standard country her foreign indebtedness is generally payable in gold. She is a large holder of American bonds; she supplies India—a silver-standard country—with silver bullion, that has $1,000,000,000 in silver in circulation. Above every other nation she is interested in making silver cheap. On every ounce of American silver she now buys at her own price, say 47*d.* per ounce, she makes more than 25 cents profit in coining it into Indian money.

As an illustration of England's financial genius in the manipulation of our silver, a distinguished writer on finance uses the following language:

A London merchant pays to the Secretary of State for India, in London, say $500 in gold, and in return he obtains an order on India for $600 to $625 in silver, and we sell them the silver at what price they choose to pay for it. These India council drafts act as an export bounty of 20 to 25 per cent. in favor of the Indian exporter of wheat and cotton, for with our cheap silver England pays for Indian cotton and wheat, and can force down the price of American cotton and wheat in proportion as the price of silver is forced down.

The strange privilege of permitting England to fix the value of the bullion out of which is fabricated the Indian rupee and the American dollar coined under the "Bland act" operates as a two-edged sword that stabs American industry to the death.

It is a consolation to know that, though she can regulate the value of our silver bullion with impunity, she is not yet permitted to decree how many grains of American standard fine silver shall be worth 100 cents and shall be a legal tender for a dollar due under a contract.

She does fix the value of our silver in the shape of bullion and makes people believe when she drops it 20 per cent. below the value of gold bullion they get nothing but 80-cent dollars. But the manipulation of silver as a commodity is a different thing from coining it into money at an American mint, its ratio to gold being fixed by the law of the land, and its value absolutely determined.

The so-called Bland act by its restrictions on the free coinage of silver bullion depresses the price. It makes the Government the coiner of silver on its own account. The amount of bullion to be coined monthly is purchased as cheaply as possible at the rate, of course, fixed by the London market. The Treasury Department is converted into a broker's office. The Treasurer takes $80 out of the Treasury, buys eighty dollars' worth of silver bullion, coins it, and returns one hundred legal debt-paying dollars, robbing the miner, who risks his life, his labor, and capital, out of 20 per cent. of the fruits of his industry. As long as the country is blessed with a Secretary of the Treasury who always coins the minimum, under the Bland act, and never the maximum, the excess is thrown upon the market and sold to the highest bidder for cash. Discrimination degrades the metal and enables England, the great bullion purchaser, to fix the value of the amount of silver required to make an American dollar.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] admonishes this House that "when the little bell rings in the Bank of England, in Threadneedle street, its echo starts the money market of the world. Its oscillations are felt in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, and he is not certain but its vibrations reach the prairies of Texas and the mountains of Missouri."

Like the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I have a most intense admiration for the financial genius of England. Her myriad great names are entitled to reverence. She has reduced diplomacy to an exact science. If history speaks aright, she has never let slip an opportunity to trample upon American liberty and blot from the world's map this, the only true republic that ever existed; and yet on questions of trade and finance a fancied relationship seems to stifle the voice of history and color American legislation for her benefit, at the expense of American industry.

Perhaps I ought not to animadvert on the "Bland bill," as I was a member of the committee which first considered it, and of which Mr. BLAND was chairman. It was drafted and introduced into the Forty-fourth Congress as an experiment by Nathaniel P. Banks, of Massachusetts, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, instead of one of the money committees of the House.

It was acceptable to the people of the silver-producing regions, on the principle that "half a loaf is better than no bread." Its wisdom was demonstrated by the era of prosperity which followed its passage. It might well be termed a "blessed act" to-day, if the money coined in pursuance of its provisions were deemed by the Secretary of the Treasury good enough to pay national obligations, as it expressly provided, which would have prevented the accumulation of an idle mass of silver.

The President is evidently not much afraid of silver. He says:

There is not certainly silver enough now in circulation to cause uneasiness, and that the whole amount coined might after a time be absorbed without apprehension; but it is the ceaseless stream which threatens the land that causes fear and uncertainty.

Where is the "ceaseless stream" to flow from? From what quarter of the globe is a deluge of silver expected?

It needs the gift of divine inspiration to answer where. An overflow is not among the possibilities of the present or near future. In 1884 the country produced in silver $48,800,000, one-third of the product of the world, not enough, if allowance be made for what is consumed in the arts and manufactures, to coin the maximum under the "Bland act."

There is no material increase in any quarter of the globe. Every nook and corner of the far West has been pretty thoroughly prospected. The famous Comstock, that scared Bismarck into silver demonetization in 1871, has been pierced at two points to a depth of over 3,150 feet below the surface without discovering any large ore-paying body. Its ores are now low grade in character, scarcely paying the cost of extraction and reduction.

The output of the whole State of Nevada in 1884 was only five millions. During the previous twenty years the Comstock alone added to the wealth of the world more than $180,000,000 in silver, which helped to make resumption of specie payment possible.

There never was but one Potosi. There never was but one Comstock, and it is extremely doubtful if there ever will be another. The silver product of the world for the year 1884 was only $115,000,000. Nearly half that amount is annually consumed by India and China. Hence the "ceaseless stream" exists in the imagination only. The product of Mexico and Peru is declining, and there is no alarming increase in any other quarter. No monometallist lives that can point out the location of the source of a threatening stream of silver. If the "ceaseless stream" ever begins to flow in a volume so mighty as to threaten financial disaster, it will be then time enough to construct legal barriers against the inundation.

If the Secretary of the Treasury had obeyed the law to which Senator BECK called the attention of the nation and applied the 20 per cent. of the receipts in silver for custom duties during the six months before the President's message was submitted to Congress, in conjunction with all the millions of silver received since 1878, to the payment of interest on Government bonds and notes and the liquidation of the principal of the nation's debt, it would take a powerful microscope to detect the President's "ceaseless stream."

Surely $215,000,000, less than $4 per capita, can not create any great consternation, considering the present and future of the country and the amount of money necessary to liquidate its indebtedness.

Bimetallic France has not less than seven hundred millions in silver circulating in perfect harmony with $1,000,000,000 in gold among a population of less than forty millions, and no Frenchman has ever complained of a "ceaseless stream." How beautifully less the "stream" would become if the Government bonds, representing $70,000,000, belonging to the heirs of one man, Vanderbilt, were paid in silver when due, which he agreed to take and which he ought to get, if too much is accumulating in the Treasury. Why, it would take all the idle mass of silver in the Treasury to pay the bonds of this one man.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency, page 18, shows that on the 1st day of November, 1885, the immense mass of idle silver dollars in the Treasury, outside of those represented by silver certificates, which must be considered as in circulation, is the small sum of $70,070,576; just enough to pay the debt.

Contemplate the national, corporate, and private indebtedness contracted on the basis of silver. If all the silver of France were thrown upon our hands the volume of the "stream" would be easily regulated by a compliance with existing law. The statement of the amount of the public debt November 1, 1885, is as follows:

Interest-bearing debt, $1,260,778,162. Matured debt not yet presented, but permitted to draw interest, $3,953,689.76. Accrued interest to date of November 1, 1885, $9,595,948.10. Debt bearing no interest, being amounts due to various persons for services, &c., but not yet paid, $574,012,535.88. Total public debt November 1, 1885, $1,848,340,335.74. At that date there was cash in the Treasury, $400,682,767.65. Deduct the locked-up cash on hand from the total debt and there is a total of $1,447,657,568.09 that the people must have taken from them as they earn it. In words, the sum stands thus: One billion, four hundred and forty-seven millions, six hundred and fifty-seven thousand, five hundred and sixty-eight dollars and nine cents.

The assets of the United States Treasury, as stated by Treasurer Jordan, were, on November 30, 1885, as follows:

Gold coin	$178,002,782
Gold bullion	73,942,796
Standard silver dollars	165,568,088
Fractional silver coin	27,920,309
Silver bullion	3,583,956
Total specie	449,017,861
United States notes	43,290,643
National-bank notes	2,285,050
Current money in banks	13,595,238
Bank notes in process of redemption	3,487,306
Minor coin	616,172
Interest paid, &c	41,891
Total	512,337,161

In addition there are $346,000,000 in greenbacks, redeemable in either gold or silver. It is estimated that there is due to national, State, trust, and savings banks not less than $2,300,000,000, payable in gold or silver. Give us all the silver of France—and she has none to spare—in addition to our own and the "stream," foreign and domestic, will not suffice to wipe out national and private obligations payable in silver dollars.

There is not too much silver in the country. It has less silver and more gold than most other nations. They average about one dollar in silver and one dollar of gold, while the United States have only one dollar in silver to two dollars and a quarter in gold.

But a new point has been made by the gifted member from Massachusetts, Governor LONG, which is the cardinal feature of his argument on last Saturday and ought to be answered. He says that "free coinage is an invitation to the world to dump into our mints its entire stock of silver bullion, coins, old tea-pots, spoons, and tankards, and to draw for every 78 cents' worth of silver so dumped a full United States dollar."

The danger of a "dump" must disappear from the minds of the advocates of a gold standard when they learn that one of the inflexible laws of finance is that silver coins never seek the melting-pot until silver commands a premium over gold. Tea-pots, spoons, and tankards, and other articles of silverware are seldom melted, because the skill and labor employed in their manufacture often cost more than the original bullion.

The gentleman failed to tell us what kind of United States full dollars the "dump" would draw from this country.

Does he mean gold dollars? If so, the answer is that no commercial nation of Europe will do the vain and idle thing to export silver here and bring back gold bullion (gold coins are bullion abroad), when it can be purchased at home for the same price without incurring any cost of transportation or insurance. They will take in return a more profitable cargo.

If he means full silver dollars, then I assert, without fear of contradiction, that neither the gentleman from Massachusetts nor any one else can point out the locality that contains a mass of silver that can be dumped on American soil in the event of free coinage. No one claims that England has any surplus. All her silver coins are clipped before they leave her mints for the express purpose of keeping them within the limits of the realm.

No one claims that France or any of the countries comprising the Latin Union has any surplus bullion. All their silver coins are in active circulation. Would it not be the acme of absurdity to conclude that any of these nations could draw away any of our good dollars by means of their silver coins which are worth less than ours, but still are on a par with gold at the ratio of 15½ to 1 regardless of its premium in the London market?

If there is any one who believes that Germany has any silver to dump upon us in a favorable emergency, I refer him to the report of the Director of the United States Mint for the year 1880, which discloses the fact that of the vast amount of silver Germany demonetized in 1873, only $74,707,248 remained at the close of 1879. The same report informs us that there was no surplus silver bullion in Great Britain that year, the imports and exports being equal. The very next year $40,000,000 were coined for India. Where did this amount come from? Not from the United States, for we coined over $27,000,000 and only produced $37,000,000; not from Mexico, for it coined over $22,000,000 of a product of $25,000,000. The inevitable inference is that it must have come from Germany. No advocate of a gold standard has dared to tell this House or the country that Germany has to-day a dollar's worth of idle silver.

The threat of a "dump" is a weak invention of the enemy. It is predicated upon neither facts nor figures, and therefore is not entitled to respectful consideration.

But if legislation should choke up the source whence flows the present feeble stream of silver, the stream of gold will not suffice to supply the dentists of the country with material enough to plug the diseased teeth of the advocates of the gold standard.

Let us see. The country produced last year $30,800,000 in gold. The whole output of the world in 1884 was less than one hundred millions—a falling off of nine millions as compared with 1882. The Orient consumes about twenty millions per annum. The Director of the Mint admits that twelve millions of our own small product were consumed in art and manufacture last year in this country, with a growing demand in that direction.

The placer mines of California, that added to the world's wealth in thirty-six years more than $1,000,000,000 in gold without depreciating the silver dollar, are only the reminiscences of happy days gone by, never to return.

The working of hydraulic gravel mines is stopped by operations of the law. The decline of her gold product in the last four years is $8,072,438.17. The falling off in Australia is now perceptible. Suspend silver coinage, demonetize silver, close down the silver mines for the benefit of the bondholder, banker, and broker, and for no one else, and the decline of the gold product will become more apparent to the President than the difference in value between the present gold and silver dollar.

It is not generally known that at least 25 per cent. of all our gold bullion is a by-product of silver. The gold and silver product of the United States for the five years ending December 31, 1884, was $145,244,551, of which the sum of $48,441,267 in gold was extracted from silver ores.

Let me remind the members of this House who propose to usher out of existence one-half of the hard money of the country that during the last twenty years the little county of Storey, in which I live, produced, according to the assessor's reports, the sum of $180,000,000 in silver and $145,000,000 in gold. It paid in dividends to mining stockholders $120,000,000, and paid out for wages to miners $4,000,000 annually. Outside counties produced $100,000,000 more. It is safe to add to the assessor's report $55,000,000 more in gold.

Where did the $200,000,000 in gold come from? Not from mines located, operated, or designated as gold mines, but solely from mines recognized as silver mines. They came from veins of silver ore. They were a by-product of silver. They came from the same matrix of rock. The bar of the silver miner was gold and silver in nearly equal proportions.

The Comstock is now producing nearly $1,000,000 per month, and 50 per cent. of the silver ore extracted is gold. Not a mine on the Comstock would be operated to-day were it not for the gold contained in the silver vein. All the large silver veins of Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Arizona contain a decent percentage of gold.

Strike down one and you strike down both. Had an American Congress twenty years ago legislated the silver industry out of existence it is apparent that the gold supply we have now on hand would scarcely deserve an honorable mention.

This House ought to know that from the silver ores of the West fifty-eight million dollars' worth of lead, and more than twenty million dollars' worth of copper have been extracted.

It does seem that the bondholder who gets and expects gold for principal and interest on his bonds should cherish the silver dollar. The silver production means gold production. Without it Secretary Manning can not continue to pay in gold what he ought to pay in silver.

It is urged by the President in his message, and the Treasury officials in their reports, as one of their reasons in justification of the immediate suspension of silver coinage, that of the $215,759,000 already coined only $50,000,000 have found their way into circulation, consequently entailing considerable expense in constructing vaults to deposit the residue. This is probably as sound an objection as any that has been made against the further coinage of silver.

Now, the gentleman whom the President characterizes in his message as the most distinguished writer on bimetallism, without naming him, tells us that "all the gold in the world could be stored in a twelve-horse stable, and all the silver in a building forty times as large." It is estimated that a structure 10 feet high and 230 feet square would afford ample vault-room for all our American silver.

Considering that nearly one-fourth of our silver is in the hands of the people, and that $93,000,000 are represented by silver certificates, which when presented will cause so many dollars to vanish from the Treasury, the dimensions of the vault-room will shrink into proportions as insignificant as the nature of the objection.

Is it not a singular objection on the part of the head of a great nation, the brilliant destiny of which is almost beyond human comprehension, with its marvelous fertility of resources, its steady increase of population, and its constantly expanding commerce?

Is it not a pitiful objection in face of the fact that for the first time in American history the Government, and not the miner, coins silver on its own account, and reaps a profit on the business of about $4,000,000 per annum, which by right belongs to the miners of the West, and which ought to build a secure forty-horse stable for the deposit of silver dollars and bullion? A contract to erect it for one-fourth of this sum would be more valuable than the office of a member of Congress. If the cost of vault room were the only objection to the coinage of silver, I know a few Western silver producers, Mackey, Jones, Hobart, or the heirs of Sharon, who would be only too glad to obviate it by constructing at their joint or individual expense a treasure-house for silver and making a present of it to the Government.

The silver that the Secretary of the Treasury failed to coin during the last fiscal year, under the provisions of the "Bland act," in direct violation thereof, is more than ample to build all necessary vault room. I find on page 8 of the report of the Director of the Mint for last year, the following language:

> It will be seen that the amount of silver purchased and delivered at the mints during the year fell short by $252,539.75 of two millions per month.

This gross and palpable violation of the law is excused upon the flimsy pretext that the bullion contracted for was not delivered in time. When the "Bland-act" dollars are understood to be legal tender, and are permitted to perform the functions of money, instead of unnecessarily accumulating in the Treasury, complaints of vault-room expense will cease, and the world will have a chance to determine whether or not the silver dollars are acceptable to the people.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] wants to know if the Secretary of the Treasury has violated existing law. The perusal of this page of the report of the Mint Director and the speeches of Senators BECK and EUSTIS ought to furnish him with the necessary information.

In answer to the complaint of the cost of transporting silver dollars to the nearest vault-room, I assert that there is not an express or railroad company in the land but what will transport a million of dollars in silver as cheaply as a million of dollars in gold.

I admit that in the interest of economy, a saving has recently been made in the transportation of $10,000,000 in silver from New Orleans, by converting American war vessels into freighting hulks, the Government forgetting the purpose of their construction, the character of their duty, and the dangers of the sea. That amount of money, I am informed, could have been utilized by the people of the South in moving their cotton crop, and, if so, there was no necessity for incurring the cost and risk of its transportation. The cost of transportation to the nearest vault-room is a most interesting objection, in view of the fact that by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, not an ounce of Western silver bullion is allowed to be coined in a Western mint, but the mints of Philadelphia and New Orleans—thousands of miles from the silver-producing regions—now enjoy the exclusive privilege of coining the Bland dollar.

On the Pacific coast there is a universal complaint as to the dearth of silver coin. Treasury notes are seldom used in business there. Still, the Secretary of the Treasury, in direct violation of law, closes the Carson mint, an institution established by act of Congress for the convenience of the people of that great silver and gold producing section, in the heart of which it is situated. It was more than a self-sustaining institution, the profits in 1885 being $7,147 in excess of the expenditures. No owner of gold bullion can now deposit it at the Carson mint to be fabricated into coins in pursuance of law; no owner of silver bullion can have it cast into bars of fine metal of standard fineness in pursuance of law.

The Carson mint is a subtreasury, with spacious vault room. When the edict of suspension was issued about six months ago it had on deposit $3,341,283 in silver and 407,017 ounces of silver bullion ready for treatment, all of which was needed in the immediate vicinity. All the silver coin and bullion in the mints of the Pacific coast have been transported here. If the transportation was unnecessary and inexpedient, the President and Secretary Manning ought not to complain of the cost.

The most serious charge against the coinage of the silver dollars is that they will displace gold and banish it out of the country. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency, page 63, shows that since the 1st day of January, 1879, up to October, 1885, the import of foreign gold in excess of the export is $178,028,043. For the year ending November, 1885, the product of gold in this country was $30,800,000; the amount of foreign gold coin and bullion imported is in excess of the exportation $12,315,915.

Again, he states that during the last year the amounts of gold and silver have increased $31,115,915 and $31,923,388, respectively. If silver is driving gold out of the country, how is it that on the 1st day of January, 1879, the date of the resumption of specie payment, all our gold coin and bullion amounted only to the sum of $278,310,126, and on the 1st day of November, 1885, the stock was more than doubled, there being $586,727,787?

During each of these years there has been a stream of gold bullion flowing into the country, annually increasing in volume. On page 64 of the same report it is stated that the gold in the Treasury, including bullion in process of coinage, has increased during the last year $7,667,789, and in the banks has increased $44,471,713. On page 67, he says that there was in the Treasury on the 30th day of September, 1876, in gold coin and bullion $55,423,059, and on the 1st day of November, 1885, $251,359,349, nearly five times as much, each year showing an increase over the preceding one.

The report of the Director of the Mint shows that only the small sum of $395,750 in gold bullion was exported last year, and the import was $8,849,237. During the same period $20,422,924 in silver were exported. Out of the silver crop of last year, amounting to $48,800,000, $19,000,000 found its way abroad by export.

The statistics in the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Director of the Mint are a damning refutation of the monometallist theory that silver, the cheaper metal, has a tendency to drive out the dearer gold. The fear that the country will lose its gold is not justified by their figures, still they have the audacity to recommend demonetization.

The only merit these reports possess is due to their statistical information.

Congress can not give any respectful consideration to the financial recommendation of the Comptroller of the Currency, who on pages 19 and 20 of his report clearly confesses that he does not know in what particular kind of hard money, whether in gold only or gold or silver, legal-tender notes are redeemable.

Silver drives gold out of this country the way it does in France.

France paid a war indemnity to Germany of more than $1,000,000,000 in gold. The war cost her $800,000,000 more, and it has taken a similar sum to enable her to prepare for another. With all this immense drain she has in circulation to-day at par with $1,000,000,000 in gold more than $700,000,000 in silver. She is to-day the envy of European nations. Bimetallism has clothed her in purple and fine linen and placed her upon the pinnacle of earthly prosperity, while eleven-twelfths of the population of monometallic England are wallowing in the mire of pauperism. France keeps up her supply of gold by selling her products at the double standard and buying those of England and Germany at the gold standard.

During the thirteen years prior to the civil war, when there was scarcely any silver coined, gold went out of the country at the rate of one hundred and thirty millions a year, and all the silver coined in the mints of the country up to 1873 amounted to only $17,000,000. It took flight because silver was at a premium of 3¾ cents over gold. Coin payments were made in the cheaper money, gold. The value of these cheap gold dollars was the same here as in London. If Americans had to settle balances in London with silver, they had to buy it at a premium.

So long as our exports exceed in value our imports we can keep our own money, and accumulate more and regulate the price of our precious metals if we will. Exchange with foreign countries can not be fixed by law. Home production and the American policy of protection will operate as a barrier against the outflow of our gold and silver.

If gold is ever driven out of this country, it will be because of its scarcity or the suspension of silver coinage. Silver demonetized creates a fictitious demand for gold, which appreciates in value because of the destruction of its twin metal. The more valuable it becomes the more it is hoarded.

Its premium rises as the volume of silver contracts. Its circulation is prevented because its value is out of proportion to the price of all other things it is intended to measure. It establishes a new range of prices; it impairs the obligation of contracts; it robs the poor man, makes the rich man richer; it becomes unfitted for a circulating medium, and seeks the melting pot, instead of the channels of trade. Senator FRYE might, with truth, term the inflated gold dollar "a coined lie."

The President tells us that "gold is now being hoarded." What of it? What difference does it make to the poor man who has no gold, no securities, no taxable bonds? No poor man, from New York to the Rocky Mountains, ever receives or pays out gold. The presence of a twenty-dollar piece is never detected until you reach the far West, where copper cents, debased nickels, and worn-out greenbacks have not yet crawled into general circulation.

I threw in sight a few days ago at Solari's, on Pennsylvania avenue, a twenty-dollar gold-piece and the clerk did not know what it was.

If no new gold-fields are discovered gold coin must soon become a curiosity. It is becoming too precious to be a medium of exchange. Its fluctuations are too violent and its productions too irregular to be adopted as the sole standard of value.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], in his speech on private-bill day, said that "on January 1, out of $550,000,000 in gold in the country, only about half the gold coin could be found either in the banks or in the Treasury. The question is, where has it gone?" He can not tell whether it has been consumed in the arts and manufactures or hoarded on account of the scantiness of its production. He can not point out the source that will fill the vacuum, and yet clamors for a gold standard on the principle of monetary evolution. The reason that prompts the President to warn the country of the fact that gold is now being hoarded is because the day of payment of national obligation is approaching.

It is difficult for the average American to perceive the logic of this reasoning, when there are no national obligations payable exclusively in gold. There is not enough on hand to go around; not enough of it to continue the practice of paying it out to the bondholders and national and State bankers who own 42 per cent. of the national indebtedness in the manner originated by Senator SHERMAN and followed up by Mr. Manning with a vengeance.

Now, if gold is practically out of circulation, or should cease to be a standard of value, it does seem that silver would be an excellent substitute. The abolishment of a gold standard would doubtless occasion a loss to the creditor class; but if any one is to suffer, the rich can stand it better than the poor.

Silver is the poor man's money. It is more useful than gold. One hundred silver coins flow through the channels of trade for one of gold. If a little of it is good it all ought to be. It is the money of nine-tenths of the nations of the globe, and the people are now demanding that the hand of hostile legislation shall no longer affect their cherished metal. They want this Government administered on the old plan. They are tired of the programme adopted by our Treasury officials, who in every money dilemma rush over to New York, consult clearing-house authorities and a syndicate of bankers, hop on the train, run over to Washington, and put their interested opinions into practice, as if New York were the whole United States, and not a financial suburb of London.

The President, in the Cernuschi paragraph to which I have before alluded, expresses his congratulation that the hand of no American ever experienced the sensation of cheapness in expending or receiving the silver dollar. Nothing is said about the hand of the miner who, with his blankets on his back, traverses desert, cañon, and mountain in scorching sun and blinding snow. He locates his claim under existing law. He believes this great Government will protect the great industry of mining.

If the doctrine of chances rewards his indomitable pluck and perseverance with a lucky strike, his horny hand immediately experiences the sensation of cheapness by the loss of 20 cents on every dollar's worth of silver he raises to the surface through shameless violation of law. But he believes the sun is bursting through the clouds, heralding the dawn of a new era. He is buoyed up by the hope that before the Speaker's gavel announces the adjournment of this Congress his honest belief will have become crystallized into a law that will forever keep from his hand the "sensation of cheapness."

That law will be the free and unlimited coinage of silver, or an acceptable substitute.

Give us free coinage, and industry itself, independent of law, will fix the ratio of the precious metals. The world is entitled to the entire product of all gold and silver mines to be used as a circulating medium.

I need no better authority than Cernuschi to prove that the panacea for our monetary evils is unlimited coinage. I agree with him. On page 20 of his pamphlet on "Great metallic powers," he says:

It is certain that if the Congress of the United States authorized the free coinage of silver all the dollars already coined would instantaneously become good money. Good money would be the dollars which the public would then get coined.

And again, on pages 7 and 8, he uses the following language:

Whenever the coinage of either metal is free the metal itself is potential money; whenever it is not free it is not the metal which is money, but merely the quantity coined. Whenever the metal itself is money, every ounce of it being entitled to coinage, every ounce of it is therefore worth as much as every ounce of metal already coined. The bullion does not augment in value by going to the coining-press; coins do not lose any value by returning to the crucible.

Wherever the coinage of the metal is not free all the uncoined metal remains in the market, it is for sale; whereas what has been coined is no longer in the market and serves for buying.

The limit of good money is fixed by nature. With liberty of coinage the monetary mass consists of the totality of the metal in existence. No Legislature can change its volume. On page 11 he says:

If gold did not exist, people would be everywhere under the system of silver monometallism, a very convenient mass. People would manage perfectly well, though without renouncing the use of deposit certificates for the larger divisions.

If Cernuschi be authority, as claimed by the President, why not grant the right to which we are entitled and have enjoyed for more than three-quarters of a century, that of free and unlimited coinage? Place the silver miner on the same level with the gold miner. Let him become the issuer of the silver dollars, and not the Government. He will then take his bullion to the mints, have it converted into dollars on his own account, and will take with him them or their equivalent, leaving less for storage and more for circulation.

Suspend the coinage of silver; demonetize it; usher out of existence one-half of the money of the country, and the history of the past makes the future a doleful certainty. It teaches us that expansion of our currency means high wages, high prices, progress, prosperity, and happiness. It teaches that contraction or suspension means "hard times," low wages, poor prices, pauperism, socialism, communism, and perhaps revolution.

The consequences are depicted by that eminent practical financier, Baron de Rothschild, who on a late occasion said:

The two legal moneys ought to be maintained. The two metals constituted together the monetary circulation of the world. They were united by a tie of a certain degree of elasticity, but which was indissoluble. To separate them would be impossible under pain of falling into a commercial chaos, of which the consequences would be incalculable. The more there was of the precious metals, gold and silver, the better, for the more labor was developed.

Then, why not prevent this "chaos?" The bare announcement from the head of the Treasury Department that bondholders would hereafter be paid according to the contract, in gold or silver as convenient, would in twenty-four hours raise the price of silver bullion to par. To pay according to the solemn agreement can not be a strain on the honor of a nation or an individual.

Free and unlimited coinage will certainly restore the true equilibrium between gold and silver bullion. Coining the maximum or the medium, under the Bland act, would raise the price of silver. A call for bonds when due and payment of them in silver, if there should be a surplus, would have the same effect.

A demand on Europe for the purchase of one hundred millions of silver to be coined into dollars and applied to the honest payment of our debts would raise the price, because it could not respond to the call. The hoarding of silver in our vaults for a year or two instead of exporting it at the rate of $20,000,000, as was done last year, would have the same effect. If Congress refuses to pass a bill for free and unlimited coinage of silver, and determines on a substitute for the Bland act, the people hope that legislation will not inflict upon them the "compromise Sherman bill" lately introduced in the Senate.

If coinage is to be suspended, they prefer the bill proposed by the Knights of Labor, submitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and introduced by one of its members, or that proposed by Dr. SWINBURNE, because instead of contracting they expand the volume of money. They make a silver certificate, representing 412½ grains of standard silver, the equal of a greenback worth a dollar, or a gold certificate representing 25.8 grains of standard gold, and do not affect existing contracts. They make an outlet for all silver bullion, and restore its parity to gold.

The Sherman bill proposes to discontinue the coinage of 412½-grain dollars, and have the Government purchase not less than 2,000,000 ounces, 900 fine, nor more than 4,000,000 ounces per month, at market rates. The silver is to be deposited to liquidate exclusively silver certificates.

If the fiscal department of the Government is to be shaped according to the policy adopted by Mr. SHERMAN and Secretary Manning in reference to the Bland act, it is clear that the maximum part of the measure is entirely superfluous. It is only another way of whipping the devil around the stump and carrying into execution his pet exploded theory that there ought to be 480 grains of standard fine silver in the silver dollar.

At the present price of silver under the "Sherman bill," there would be 480 grains on deposit to represent the silver certificate of the denomination of a dollar, and not a dollar of the bullion can be applied to the payment of Government bonds, but must be applied in payment of the silver certificates. Every owner of bullion can sell it now at the market price as readily as he can under the Sherman bill.

The people have had enough of discretionary power in the purchase of coinage of a minimum and maximum quantity. What they need is absolute certainty in the future. They do not want Mr. SHERMAN to saddle 67½ grains of standard fine silver upon every dollar of their existing obligations. They want a silver certificate representing 412½ grains of standard fine silver to be as good as a gold-dollar certificate. They will hail a measure of this sort as a curse instead of a blessing.

I conceive it to be the duty of the friends of silver in this House to concentrate upon a wise measure of relief. If they do not, the present diversity of opinion as to what is the true measure will result in stopping the wheels of justice from revolving in the interest of silver.

But it seems to be the intention of the Secretary of the Treasury, if his power be perpetuated, to destroy greenback as well as silver, and make gold and national-bank notes the sole medium of exchange. He finds fault with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that it is constitutional to issue paper money in time of peace. He says "the disorders of our currency chiefly arose from the operation of two enactments. The first is the silver-coinage act of February 28, 1878, and the other the United States note act of May 31, 1879." He construes the latter to mean an indefinite postponement of the redemption of legal-tender notes in gold or silver, as provided by the act of 1869. It is evident, if he can raid silver out of existence, he means war on greenbacks. He propose to retire the $346,000,000 of legal-tendar notes and substitute them with national-bank notes, thus perpetuating a system that is tolerated by the people but that has no warrant in the Constitution.

Would it not be wiser to substitute the greenback, which is issued by the Government and not by a corporation or individual, for the national-bank note?

The life of the latter is precarious; its approaches dissolution whenever a speech like Senator BECK'S hurries up a call for bonds, and must die in the near future when the basis of its existence is destroyed.

A greenback is not of bastard origin. Its paternity is vouched for by a decision of the court of last resort that possesses the attribute of infallibility. Courts may make greenbacks good money in time of peace, but when war specks dot the American sky and the credit of the Government is imperiled, they will not stand the "tug of war" like gold and silver. We have seen them worth only 38 cents on the dollar, and suddenly rise in value to 100 cents when made by law redeemable in light-weight silver dollars.

In conclusion I desire to state that silver mining is one of the giant industries of the country and ought to be protected. There are not less than fifteen hundred manufacturing establishments engaged in the manufacture of silver-mining machinery, employing fifteen thousand men. It has conjured into existence real and personal property, independently of mineral wealth, worth $200,000,000.

It has developed the national domain west of the Rocky Mountains. It has robbed the desert of its terrors, made it teem with the fruits of civilization, and was a potential factor in maintaining the integrity of the Union. It has created the great State of Colorado, with her infinite variety of resources and over three thousand miles of railways. It will help to smother polygamy in Utah, robe her in the garments of Statehood, and make her the peer of Colorado in wealth and beauty. It has placed the brightest jewels in the diadem of the queen city of the Pacific. The feet of progress and civilization in the far West have been always sandaled by silver.

The great industries of pig-iron, coal, and steel are constantly clamoring for protection; yet I fear there are strong advocates of that policy who will without hesitation smilingly strike down silver, forgetting that every blow that is struck paralyzes the production of its twin metal, gold.

The people of the gold and silver producing regions are breathlessly expecting wise and patriotic action on the part of this Congress. They feel that the interests of Wall street, of wealth and power, will not be consulted in the determination of the solemn question as to what shall be the status of the silver dollar in the future. They have reason to hope that the anathemas of those high in official station will fall upon the ears of its members with no more effect than "sounding brass and tinkling cymbals." They expect the passage of a measure that will enable silver—the great gift of nature, that from the antiquity of its use seems to have been destined to be a medium of exchange between man and man—to circulate like gold, free and untrameled in the channels of trade, adding to the volume of the world's wealth, chasing the wolf from the poor man's door, and giving a new impetus to the drooping industries of the country. [Great applause.]

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, to enter into an exhaustive argument at this time of the principle involved in the pending bill would be to weary the House by a repetition of facts and figures bearing on the question which have been already used and repeated until they have become "familiar as household words," and I only propose to ask your attention for a few minutes to another way of presenting old facts as bearing on the question of discontinuing the coinage of silver.

Under existing laws not less than two nor more than four million of standard silver dollars are required to be coined monthly, and we are advised to change the law and suspend further coinage.

The proposition is alike important to every industry and to all classes of people, and it should be carefully considered before it is adopted or rejected.

One of the reasons given against further coinage is that if it is continued this country will become the dumping-ground for the silver-producing nations of the world, and therefore gold will be driven out of the country.

If this would be the effect of silver coinage, we might well pause before proceeding further under the present coinage laws; but if this has not been true in the past, is not true now, and is not likely to be true in the future, then the principal reason that exists for a change of policy falls, and weightier reasons must be given before inaugurating a change.

I think the facts do not warrant this statement, and the following figures, taken from the official reports of the Director of the Mint, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Secretary of the Treasury, squarely and clearly disprove the statement.

The total amount of gold coin and bullion deposited in the United States Treasury during the last fiscal year was $56,748,752, of which $19,115,063 was foreign, being $6,567,396 more than was deposited during the year preceding.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Gold bullion imported last year	$11,221,846
Gold coin imported last year	17,842,459
Total imports of gold	29,064,305
Gold bullion exported	395,750
Gold coin exported	8,082,142
Total gold exported	8,477,892
Total gold imported	29,064,305
Balance in one year in our favor of gold	20,586,413
Silver bullion imported	4,530,384
Silver coin imported	12,020,243
Total silver imported	16,550,627
Silver bullion exported	13,272,239
Silver coin exported	20,422,924
Total silver exported	33,695,163
Balance against us in one year in silver	17,144,536

So that during the last fiscal year we had $20,586,413 more gold come to us from abroad than left us. We sent to other countries $17,144,536 more silver than we received from them.

In the face of these facts, will any man be willing to repeat the stale statement that "gold will be driven out by a further coinage of standard silver dollars" at the present rate?

But it may be argued that this was an exceptional year and the claim made that notwithstanding the last year's experience the tendency in a series of years would be in that direction. To meet that argument I need only give the exports and imports of silver and gold from the years 1878 to 1885, both inclusive.

In these eight years we imported in gold coin and bullion $300,000,000 and exported but $112,326,784. We gained in gold in eight years $187,673,216, or an average of $23,459,152 per annum.

During that time we imported in silver coin and bullion $103,914,000 and exported $170,200,000. We lost in eight years in silver $66,286,000, or an average of $8,285,750 per annum.

Now, I submit that there is no danger of the continued coinage of silver either making us the "dumping grounds for the silver of other countries" or "driving gold out," as the stubborn and unrelenting figures for last year, and for the whole eight years since the present coinage laws went into effect, emphatically disprove both statements.

We coined last year in gold $24,861,123, and of silver $28,848,959. Of the $28,848,959 silver coined we exported $13,272,239, or about 45 per cent.; leaving balance $15,576,720 of our coinage and $12,020,243 we imported, making $27,596,963 total of silver added to our former circulation.

We coined last year of gold $24,861,123, and we imported gold coin $17,842,459; total, $42,703,582; and we exported $8,082,142 in gold coin, which was an increase of gold coin in one year of $34,621,440.

Let us take the last year as a guide for the next decade.

The increase of gold coin at $34,621,440 per annum for ten years would be $346,214,400.

The increase of silver coin at $27,596,963 per annum for ten years would be $275,969,630.

To-day we have in existence—gold coin, $542,000,000, silver coin, $278,000,000, or a total of $820,000,000.

At this rate, as the law now stands, at the end of ten years we would have of gold coin $888,214,400, and of silver coin $553,969,630; and at the end of twenty years we would have of gold coin $1,234,426,800, and of silver coin $829,939,260, or about two-thirds as much silver as gold. If we assume that our population was 55,000,000 June 30, 1885, we had close to $15 per capita of gold and silver.

From 1860 to 1880 our population increased 66 per cent., and if we should increase in population in the same ratio for the next twenty years we would have gold and silver to the amount of $22.50 per capita, or 50 per cent. more than now.

On October 1, 1885, there was in circulation $268,869,597 national-bank notes, or about $5 per capita.

If you say that at the end of the next twenty years we will have too much money, or that the business of the country does not need $22.50 per capita, then the remedy is threefold, to wit: Either make a reduction of the coinage of gold and silver alike, or, better still, let gold and silver coin take the place of the national bank issues, or retire the Government notes called greenbacks by paying them in coin as we agreed to do, and by that means keep afloat such a volume or amount as will best promote the general interests of the country. But there has already been a shrinkage of about ninety million of national-bank notes since 1882, and at that rate the next decade will wipe out the remaining two hundred and sixty-eight millions, thus causing a contraction of the present value of our circulating medium.

The friends of silver do not ask that money may become so cheap by a redundant amount as to injuriously affect the creditor class, but they do protest, in the name of justice, against such a contraction as would be ruinous to the debtor class.

But gentlemen say: "I am not opposed to silver, but I want an honest dollar;" "Put into it silver enough to make it worth a dollar." I know these gentlemen are sincere, and it may be they are correct; but I can not understand how the 412½-grain dollar is either an 80-cent or a dishonest dollar, as there has never been an hour in the history of our country when it would not buy as much as, or more than, the gold dollar, except during the years when it was outlawed at the command of the East, and to-day it stands the equal in purchasing power with its yellow brother in spite of the disgraceful conspiracy against it.

It is true that during the last year eight hundred and fifty gold dollars would buy silver bullion enough to make one thousand silver dollars, but the $850 only became $1,000 by adding to it the cost of coining, which was about 3 per cent. for running or current expenses at the mints, together with the cost of the grounds, buildings, tools, and repairs on the same (which would probably double that amount) and the stamp or indorsement of the Government.

The mistake men make is in confounding the bullion value of silver with the coin value of gold.

As well might you say a ton of coal in the city of Washington was only worth $4 because it was only worth that amount at the mines, or only worth $1 because its value was only that sum before being mined; or that a pine tree standing in the forest is worth but $1 because that is all it will sell for.

It is worked into logs suitable for market, and its market value is increased by the labor added to its original value, so it will pass from one to another for $3 or $4 or $5.

You then add the necessary labor to it in sawing, inspecting, seasoning, and making it ready to ship to the consumer, and its worth becomes $10 or $20.

It would be the height of absurdity to say that it is still worth but a dollar, and it would be equally absurd to estimate the standard dollar by the value of the metal before any labor had added value to it, or to estimate its value by its condition when only a part of the processes that are necessary to bring it to perfection had been performed, or before the "fiat" of the Government made it a legal tender.

It is an "honest dollar;" it is the dollar of our forefathers; it is the poor man's dollar; it has stood side by side with the gold dollar during all the years of our national existence, and never for a day has it or its friends been called to apologize for its character.

It is said by the enemies of silver that it will not circulate. If that be true it would be an argument, so far as it goes, against the further coinage; but it is not so, if the following statements, made to us officially, are true:

We have a total gold coin of $550,000,000. The gold certificates in circulation amount to $106,465,420, or a fraction less than 20 per cent. of our gold is in the hands of the people in the form of certificates.

We have a total silver coin of $268,000,000. The silver certificates in circulation amount to $93,146,772, or a fraction more than 34 per cent. of our silver is in the hands of the people in the form of certificates.

In the Treasury there was of gold January 30, 1886, a balance of 136,086,610.58, or 25 per cent. of all our gold. There was in the Treasury at the same date a balance of $82,980,559.44, or 31 per cent. of all our silver.

Now, there being in circulation a larger percentage of silver certificates in the hands of the people than there is of gold certificates, and nearly as large a per cent. of gold in the Treasury as of silver, and the coinage of silver being comparatively of late date, will an honest man state, or an intelligent man believe, that it will not circulate, or that the people do not want it?

It has clearly been shown by facts and figures, which I will not weary the House by reproducing, that France, England, and Germany float a larger sum per capita in silver than we would have if we coined double the amount we are coining each year for the next twenty years.

It is true that after the Franco-Prussian war, when Germany was paid a hundred millions in gold, she did all she could to degrade silver, knowing that thereby the price of gold would be correspondingly enhanced, but to-day the whole German people are earnestly petitioning and loudly clamoring that the ban of silver outlawry may be removed.

The German farmers' congress has been petitioning Bismarck and the Reichstag for the restoration of silver, and declare in forcible language that the enforcement of the monometallic standard is grossly unjust to the debtor class, because it makes money dear. They solemnly avow that Germany can not afford to wait upon England in this matter, and that silver must be restored. But our American financiers insist that we must wait on both England and Germany.

Prince Bismarck is much impressed by the extent of this demonstration and is anxiously considering his action.

On the Bourse at Frankfort the last month our bonds, payable in gold or silver at our option, sold at a premium of 21 cents, which was higher than the bonds of any other nation on earth, and ours were only 4 per cent. bonds, while many of the others were 5 per cent.

It is therefore not true that our gold is leaving us, since silver was ordered to be coined at the rate of not less than two nor more than four millions monthly.

It is not true that the coined, stamped, and legal-tender silver dollar is the inferior in purchasing power to the gold dollar.

And it is only true that gold bullion is more valuable than silver bullion because the Government has, and does, unjustly coin, stamp, and realize, free of charge, the gold, and will not do the same for silver.

It is not true that there is no demand for silver by the people as shown by the percentage of gold and silver in the hands of the people, in the form of coin, and certificates payable in coin.

But gentlemen say, "That is true as to our own country, but in our commercial dealings with other nations we would be embarrassed."

I will admit that if our highest aim should be to adapt ourselves to English or German interests or whims, there would be force in the objection to further silver coinage; but I do not want to legislate specially in the interest of Germany, England, Wall street, or the President and his Cabinet officer at the head of the Treasury; but rather for the men who toil, who organize and control the productive enterprises of the country, the men who make it possible by their resistless energy to cause the balance of trade to be sixty-one millions in our favor last year; in short, the men who create our wealth and prosperity.

These are the interests that would be crippled by reducing the volume of our circulation. These are the enterprises that must suffer by a failure to increase that volume as rapidly as our commerce and population are increasing.

The American nation can survive if our creative industries can be protected, though all the money-changers of Wall street should sleep "the sleep of the Capulets."

Strip the question of all false pretense, and it is simply an issue between the debtor and the creditor classes. The one class has more due to it than it owes; the other owes more than is due to it.

To inflate the volume of circulation would simply make it easier to pay debts, because the same number of bushels of grain, the same number of feet of lumber, the same number of pounds of meat, or the same number of days' work could be exchanged for a greater amount of cheap money than it could for a higher-priced money; and for the same reason the creditor would be compelled to take in full for his claim what would purchase less of these than he could purchase if the supply of money was made scarcer and thereby its purchasing power increased.

Either an abnormal plethora or scarcity, therefore, would work an injustice to one or the other of these classes, and therefore both should be avoided.

The debtor classes do not ask to be benefited at the expense of the other by increasing the volume of circulation; they simply ask you, gentlemen, to "be let alone," and to leave unimpaired the contracts or the legal rights they enjoyed at the time when the contracts were made, under which the indebtedness accrued, as an overwhelmingly large percentage of all the indebtedness—national, State, municipal, and individual—was contracted when the silver dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver was a legal tender.

We purchased twenty-eight millions of silver bullion last year at 85 cents, which was a clean profit to the Government of $4,200,000. Why object to this? Who complains of this as a financial transaction? It cost us about $3,120,000 to run our mints last year, and this gain is the only material offset to that expenditure.

There comes to this Congress no protest from the toilers or producers of the nation against the silver dollar, and no petition from them for an amount so great as to have a depreciated value.

The cry comes from the banks and bankers of the country, the money changers and the creditor classes, and, unfortunately for the credit and dignity of the Republic, they have always found, and find to-day, their most powerful allies in the Executive of the nation and their ministers of finance.

They will prate of the "buzzard dollar"—of the "dishonest dollar"—and predict from year to year the most imminent danger of financial convulsions, unless we heed the warnings of Wall street, calamities which do not happen and convulsions that never come from this cause.

No better evidence of their cupidity and insincerity need be adduced than the New York Bankers' Circular of July 20, 1885, in which they say:

Whereas, after careful inquiry into the current operations of the United States Treasury, it is ascertained that with the continued purchase of two million silver bullion per month the probable receipts of gold currency will be insufficient to meet the demands upon it until the meeting of Congress in December next; but that the Secretary will be compelled to make his payments in silver dollars, which will become a most disturbing element in the daily business of the country: Therefore,

Resolved, That to avert this threatened danger and in the confident belief that Congress will take early steps to prevent the deterioration of the present commercial standard of value, the banks hereby tender to the Government, from their gold reserves, the sum of $10,000,000 in exchange for that amount in fractional silver coin, or for such other currency as the clearing-house committee may approve, the same to be apportioned among the banks in the clearing-house respectively, pro rata of their deposits and gold reserve.

Resolved, That should this amount prove insufficient, a further sum, not to exceed ten millions, be offered, and that the banks of Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and other cities be invited by the clearing-house committee to participate in carrying out the objects of these resolutions.

There was at that time in the United States Treasury, gold coin, $180,863,798.65; gold bullion, $71,271,013.62, and not a single obligation against the Government to the amount of a single dollar which the Government was compelled to pay in gold, and yet these self-sacrificing patriots discovered the "probability that the receipts of gold in the Treasury would be insufficient to meet the demands upon it until Congress should meet in December, and that the Secretary will be compelled to make the payment in silver dollars, which will become a most disturbing element in the daily business of the country."

The amount of gold in the Treasury demonstrates that there was no ground for such solicitude on their part, and that the statement was untrue and misleading even if the payments should be made in gold; and their prediction that these dire calamities would so certainly befall the country I think were as unreliable as the prediction of citizen Cleveland of February 24, 1885, "that a financial crisis is now close at hand."

The year has rolled round and the crisis has not come.

But to make the cheat more transparent they say they will exchange ten or twenty millions of their gold reserves, for what? Not trade-dollars of 420 grains, because these were only made a legal tender in sums of $5 or less by law; but for "fractional silver coin or such other currency as the clearing-house committee (of New York) may approve."

The clearing-house committee would not approve the 412½ legal-tender dollar, and therefore to further disparage and disgrace the standard dollar of 412½ grains they would only take the fractional or subsidiary coin of but 384 grains as an equivalent for their gold, though it was no finer in quality, nor was it endowed by law with any greater power, nor had it any greater purchasing power in a single place—in a single nation on earth.

But by this means they hoped to drive the standard silver dollar out of existence by disgracing it, thus reducing practically the amount of money in circulation, and thereby increasing the purchasing power of what remained, and enhancing the value of the moneys, stocks, mortgages, and bonds held by them, and to that extent oppress the debtor classes.

We are told by the President and by the champions of the single gold standard that the "Federal Treasury is heaped full of silver coin which are now worth less than 85 cents on the dollar."

We have already shown that the silver dollar, stamped, coined, and made by law a legal tender, is not "only worth 85 cents," but is as eagerly sought after as the gold dollar, and is the equivalent in purchasing power, and always has been.

We have shown also that the percentage of silver coin and silver certificates in circulation is as large as the gold and gold certificates in circulation, and this too in the face of their declaration that "since the resumption of coin payments on January 1, 1879, the banks throughout the country, together with the Government itself, have practically maintained the gold standard then re-established, and the business of the nation has been carried on upon that basis," in the face of the other fact that the banks by their circular above referred to and the Secretary of the Treasury by failing to pay for silver bullion purchased by him in silver dollars, have been engaged in a studied and systematic attempt to discredit it.

Having laid down the proposition that equal and exact justice imperatively demands that as nearly as practical the amount of money in circulation at the time the debts were contracted should be maintained, so that neither the debtor nor creditor classes shall unjustly suffer by expansion or contraction, as it seems the settled policy to neither expand nor contract the volume of greenbacks or Government notes and to call in and pay our interest-bearing bonds as fast as possible, thereby wiping out the remaining two hundred and sixty-eight millions of national-bank notes, we must fill the vacuum thus created by the coinage of silver, as we have no other means of supplying the deficiency.

Mr. NEECE addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

And then, on motion of Mr. BLAND (at 9 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRAGG: Petition of A. G. Ruggles, of Fond du Lac., Wis., for payment of a judgment recovered by him against the United States on January 4, 1886, for $20,287.36, with interest from January 4, 1886—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Petition of William R. Shuck and 323 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Indiana, for a service pension for the ex-soldiers of the war of the rebellion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURROWS: Petition of Mrs. D. W. Rupert and others, favoring woman suffrage—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONGER: Petition of Local Assembly No. 4881, Knights of Labor, of Des Moines, Iowa, protesting against the passage of the so-called free-ship bill now pending—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. GEDDES: Petition of Knights of Labor of Norwalk, Ohio, for the passage of the bill to prohibit aliens from acquiring title to real estate in the United States—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Petition of G. E. Smith and 50 others, of Ohio, for free and unlimited coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. HALSELL: Affidavit of J. W. Williams and others, to accompany bill for the relief of N. G. Alexander—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JACKSON: Affidavits of John Glass and of Rev. J. C. Bigham, in support of the claim of the mother of Thomas Dimand, Company C, Sixty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LYMAN: Petition of Local Assembly No. 4476, Knights of Labor, of Griswold, Iowa, protesting against the passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. MILLARD: Petition of Edgar A. Monfort, of New York, relative to electric guns, &c.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of the Knights of Labor of Oxford, N. Y., against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. PLUMB: Papers in the case of Jacob A. Henry—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PRICE: Memorial of the board of supervisors of Baldwin, Wis., on the subject of interstate commerce—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. RANNEY: Petition of J. J. Walworth and others, relating to legislation necessary to put in force the Mexican treaty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of H. A. Decon and others, and of A. H. Thwing and Z. D. Smith, relative to post-office savings-banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ROGERS: Memorial of citizens of Dardanelle, Ark., in relation to the improvement of the Arkansas River at that point—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SOWDEN: Petition of the Women's Auxiliary Indian Association of Bethlehem, Pa., and other prominent citizens of the same place, favoring the Dawes Sioux bill—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SPOONER: Petition of Women's National Industrial Association of Newport, R. I., for the passage of Senate bill No. 52, relating to the Sioux reservation—to the same committee.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Petition of John Dwight & Co. and others, of New York, relative to the tariff on bicarbonate of soda—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STRAIT: Petition of citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Ohio, for free coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of 150 legal voters of the third Congressional district of Minnesota, praying for the protection of the dairy interests of the country against adulterated and imitation products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. I. H. TAYLOR: Memorial from the Winona monthly meeting of Friends, of Ohio, asking the passage of Senate bill No. 355, to promote peace among nations—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WELLBORN: Petition of citizens of Bosque County, Texas, for improvement of Galveston Harbor, Texas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The following petitions, praying Congress for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in the Military and Naval Academies, the Indian and colored schools supported wholly or in part by money from the national Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. GROUT: Of citizens of Windham, Washington, Windsor, Orange, and Caledonia Counties, Vermont.

By Mr. WORTHINGTON: Of citizens of Stark, Fulton, Peoria, and Knox Counties, Illinois.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 5, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 26, 1886, a statement of accounts filed in the Department of Justice for moneys due to the commissioners appointed to examine and report on the damages against the Government occasioned by the erection of dams on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin; which, on motion of Mr. SAWYER, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Cleveland, Fremont, Sandusky, and Martin's Ferry, in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Knights of Labor of Martin's Ferry and Van Wert, in the State of Ohio, praying for the construction by the Government of the Hennepin Canal; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Muskegon, Mich., praying for the construction by the Government of the Hennepin Canal and the Michigan Ship-canal across the lower peninsula from Lake Michigan to Lake Erie; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Rockport, Me., praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Lyons, East Saginaw, Lowell, Lexington, Sparta, and Essexville, in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Manistee, Mich., praying for the construction by the Government of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Elkhart, Jeffersonville, and Carbon, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Jeffersonville, Ind., praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Carbon, Ind., praying that liberal appropriations be made for public works, and especially for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Carbon, Ind., remonstrating against the employment of convict labor by contract; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MAXEY presented a petition of the Estacado monthly meeting of Friends of Texas, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 355) to promote peace among nations, for the creation of a tribunal for international arbitration, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TELLER presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Grand Junction, Colo., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Racine, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Des Moines, Clarinda, and Lehigh, in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Sarah Hamilton, of Mount Pleasant, Henry County, Iowa, widow of Thomas Hamilton, deceased, late a private in Company G, Thirty-seventh Regiment Infantry Volunteers in the war of 1861, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PAYNE presented petitions of Knights of Labor of Chapman, Van Wert, Lima, Canton, Martin's Ferry, and Pomeroy, in the State of Ohio, praying for the construction by the Government of the Hennepin Canal; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Cleveland, Columbus, Jackson, Washingtonville, Kent, Lima, Ironton, Fremont, Athens, and Thomastown, in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Water Valley, Miss., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of members of Sydney monthly meeting of Friends, in the State of Maine, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 355) to promote peace among nations, for the creation of a tribunal for international arbitration, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN. I present a paper which was in the nature of a bill, but very imperfectly drawn, and I have changed it to a petition, for the purpose of having it investigated. It was handed me by a lady, who asked me to present it, and I do so by request. I know nothing about the case. It is the petition of Mrs. Sarah Biggs, praying that her claim be considered and investigated by Congress. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Chicago, Litchfield, Murphysborough, Nashville, Port Byron, Gillespie, and Mount Olive, in the State of Illinois, and the memorial of Knights of Labor, No. 4723, of White County, Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of F. C. Wood Post, 468, Grand Army of the Republic, of Altoona, Pa., praying for the passage of a bill to pension ex-Union soldiers who were prisoners of war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Peabody, Kans., praying Congress to give each soldier who served three years during the rebellion 160 acres of land without requiring a residence thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Saint Croix Falls, Mich., praying that Michael Fitzgerald, late a private in Company A, Sixteenth Illinois Veteran Volunteers, be granted an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Saginaw County, Michigan, praying that an increase of pension be granted Emery Dibble, late a private in Company F, First Illinois Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Rachel Ann Pierpont, mother of Thomas W. Bailey, late a private in Company C, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Trenton, Lexington, and Bevier, in the State of Missouri, and a memorial of Knights of Labor of Livingston County, Missouri, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a resolution adopted by the coal-miners of Rich Hill, in the county of Bates, State of Missouri, in which they remonstrate against the coal operators in the Indian Territory being allowed to remain on the Indian reservations, there carrying on their business, and ask that they be excluded from the reservations in the same manner as the cattle-men were excluded from the reservations. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL presented a resolution of the house of assembly of New Jersey; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas there is now before the United States Senate and House of Representatives a bill to put on the retired-list, with the rank of captain, Lieut. A. H. Von Luetwitz, retired, and as the said officer served his adopted country during the war and for many years after, and is now disabled from wounds received while bravely fighting the hostile Indians on the frontier: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress be respectfully requested to render what service may be in their power to pass said bill and give justice to a gallant, brave, and honorable soldier.

That copies of this resolution, properly signed, be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives from New Jersey now at Washington, D. C.

SAMUEL TOOMBS,
Clerk House of Assembly.

Mr. CAMERON presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia (Pa.), favoring the enactment of a national bankruptcy law; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of civilian employés of the supply departments of the Army at Saint Louis, Mo., and Santa Fé, N. Mex., remonstrating against certain provisions of the Army appropriation bill reducing their pay; which was referred to the Committee on Military Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Nashville, Tenn., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PIKE presented a resolution of the Patrons of Husbandry of New Hampshire, praying that the Commissioner of Agriculture be made a Cabinet officer; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GORMAN presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Baltimore, Md., praying for the construction by the Government of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present the petition of Elizabeth S. De Krafft, widow of the late Rear-Admiral J. C. P. De Krafft, praying for an increase of pension, which, together with letters from Admiral Porter, Admiral Rowan, Admiral Worden, and others, I move be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Carbon, Elkhart, and Jeffersonville, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented two petitions of Knights of Labor of Jeffersonville, Ind., praying for the construction by the Government of the Hennepin Canal; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Carbon, Ind., praying for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Knights of Labor, of Carbon, Ind., remonstrating against the employment of convict labor by contract; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. INGALLS presented petitions of Knights of Labor of Cherokee and Olathe, in the State of Kansas, praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Rosedale, Wamego, Emporia, Leon, and Stockton, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of importers and jobbers of china, glassware, &c., of the city of New York, praying for the enactment of a bankruptcy law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Fairhaven, N. Y., praying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that will prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages throughout the national domain; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Watertown, Richbury, Oxford, Cortland, Suspension Bridge, Newark Valley, and Binghamton, in the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Travelers' Protection Association, New York city division, praying for the abolition of the tax on commercial travelers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Allentown, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of certain proposed bills regarding pilotage; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of members of the Law and Order League, temperance societies, churches, &c., of Fairhaven and Sterling Centre, N. Y., praying for the prohibition of the sale and manufacture of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Cortland, N. Y., praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of the United Labor League of America, praying that an appropriation of $100,000 be made to build a national monument to William H. Akins, inventor of the sewing-machine, in Central Park, New York; and also that a joint committee of the Senate and House be oppointed to investigate the Saint Louis strike; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PALMER presented a memorial of Wilmot J. Joslin and 38 other citizens of Debray, Mich., remonstrating, in behalf of the window-glass workers of America, against the proposed reduction of the tariff; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Lyons, Lowell, Sparta, East Saginaw, Tittabawassee, and Ludington, in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Mrs. Bishop E. Andrews and 12 others, officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Michigan, and the petition of S. Jennings and 3 other citizens of Lowell, Mass., praying for the passage of a joint resolution submitting an amendment to the Constitution providing for woman suffrage; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Manistee, Mich., praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM presented memorials from local assemblies of Knights of Labor in Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

A memorial of 97 members of local assembly at Nashville;
A memorial of 61 members of local assembly at Peru;
A memorial of 27 members of local assembly at Petersburg;
A memorial of 40 members of local assembly at Grape Creek;
A memorial of 23 members of local assembly at Sandoval;
A memorial of 41 members of local assembly at Havana;
A memorial of 65 members of local assembly at Bloomington;
A memorial of 111 members of local assembly at Carterville;
A memorial of 187 members of local assembly at Chicago; and
A memorial of 68 members of local assembly at Litchfield.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Norfolk, Va., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GEORGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1941) to enable the Northwest Trading Company, a private corporation organized under the general laws of Oregon, to purchase certain lands in the Territory of Alaska, to report it adversely.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. DOLPH. The committee has made a report in a very short time. That bill was offered to call the attention of the committee to the necessity for some legislation in regard to the sale of public lands in the Territory of Alaska. There are some other bills pending, and I desire that the whole question shall be brought up for consideration at some time. I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. GEORGE. The committee gave the bill such consideration as to satisfy them that it would be a very improper bill to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky., to report it without amendment. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] desires to submit the views of the minority on the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit the views of the minority on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee and the views of the minority will be printed, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Anna Egan, praying for remission of the accumulated interest upon taxes for special improvements on part of lots 10 and 11, square 557, city of Washington, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2037) for the relief of Mary Anna Egan; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5549) limiting the cost of the erection of a public building at Rochester, N. Y., reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1894) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon," approved January 31, 1885, reported it with an amendment.

FORT LEAVENWORTH SCHOOL BUILDING.

Mr. MANDERSON. There was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Printing a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates for a school building at Fort Leavenworth. The letter, and the accompanying papers, except the maps, were ordered printed by the Senate. The question as to whether the maps should be printed was referred to the Committee on Printing. That committee now instruct me to report adversely to the printing of the maps, believing it to be unnecessary to do so; and we ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The report was agreed to.

WHARF AT FORT MONROE.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print certain plans accompanying the letter of the Secretary of War for a permanent wharf to be built at Fort Monroe, Va., have instructed me to report it adversely and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

HENRY WARD.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report adversely upon the printing of certain papers relating to the conduct of Henry Ward, an Indian inspector, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior, and now in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be so referred, and the report of the Committee on Printing will be agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably a concurrent resolution to print 4,000 additional copies of the revised list of papers touching unpaid claims on account of French spoliations prior to January 31, 1801; and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 5,000 additional copies of the revised list of papers touching unpaid claims on account of French spoliations prior to January 31, 1801, transmitted by the President of the United States on the 17th instant, be printed; of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by the Department of State.

OFFICIAL REGISTER.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 89) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States, to report it favorably with amendments. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, after the word "repealed," in line 8 of section 1, to strike out:

And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to send the Register to such library not a depository as shall be named to him for the purpose by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

So as to make the section read:

That inasmuch as the Official Register of the United States is now supplied to depositories of public documents as one of the set of Congressional documents in leather binding, so much of the act of December 15, 1877, as provides for supplying depositories with this document is hereby repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Public Printer shall supply the leather-bound copies of this document for depositories as soon as practicable after its publication.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator reporting the bill whether it discontinues the practice of sending copies of the Official Register to the depositories and libraries that have heretofore had them.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will explain the position to the Senator and to the Senate. In the presence of the fact that under the existing law by the method of distribution two of the Official Registers went to each depository, it was the purpose of the House resolution to provide that one of the two copies which are sent should be transmitted to another depository to be selected by each member of Congress and each Senator. In the opinion of the Senate Committee on Printing this was not advisable, and we propose an amendment of the House resolution that the four hundred and odd sets of two volumes each shall not be printed at all, thus making a great saving in the expense of the public printing. It does not disturb the distribution of these volumes to the present depositories.

Mr. CONGER. As I understand at present two volumes of the Official Register are furnished to each one of the depositories. Does this plan diminish the number of the public depositories?

Mr. MANDERSON. No; it does not. It continues the law, but provides that every depository shall receive one copy of the Official Register. As the law now stands each depository is receiving two copies, but we propose to prohibit the publication of the additional copies.

Mr. CONGER. That is, I suppose, because members of the House and the Senate may designate the same places?

Mr. MANDERSON. No; it is because of the operation of two different statutes, one providing for the distribution from the folding-room and the other from the Interior Department. It does not disturb the existing order, but only saves the sending of two copies.

Mr. CONGER. Then, as I understand, each of the depositories that has been in the habit of receiving these Official Registers will continue to receive them?

Mr. MANDERSON. The depositories will continue to receive them.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LAND COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 18) for the further distribution of the Report of the Public Land Commission, to report it favorably, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It repeals the provisions of joint resolutions approved August 7, 1882, and June 27, 1884, limiting the time for the gratuitous distribution of the Codified Land Laws and History of the Public Domain, and authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies remaining to the credit of any member of Congress upon the order of the member.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back adversely the joint resolution (S. R. 36) for the further distribution of the Report of the Public Land Commission, and I move that it be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

BINDING OF CENSUS SCHEDULES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably the concurrent resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have bound the schedules of the Second, Third, Fourth, and Tenth Censuses of the United States, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to have bound, at the Government Printing Office, the schedules of the Second, Third, Fourth, and Tenth Censuses of the United States.

Mr. MANDERSON. The object of the resolution is that the original schedules at the Census Office may be bound. They have been bound as to very many of the censuses of the United States, but as to those mentioned in the resolution they have not been bound. The Secretary of the Interior asks this authorization to have them bound so that they may be preserved.

The resolution was agreed to.

MONEY FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MAHONE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to submit a report in response to a resolution of the Senate of February 10, 1886. I ask that the report may lie on the table and that the usual number of copies be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. CONGER. What is the report? What is the subject-matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first page of the report will be read.

Mr. CONGER. I do not care to have the report read, but only to have the subject-matter stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not inform the Senator. The first page of the report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

In response to a resolution of the Senate, dated February 10, 1886, that "the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be requested to report to the Senate the aggregate amount of money proposed to be appropriated by the bills reported from that committee up to and including this day; also the number of buildings and cost of each and the States in which they are to be located; also the population of the cities or towns in which such buildings are to be erected and the purpose for which each building is to be used," the following report is submitted, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 683) granting a pension to Henry O. Hill; and

A bill (S. 814) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline M. Putnam.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1270) to authorize the Mississippi Water-Power and Boom Company, of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 197) to increase the pension of Florence Murray;

A bill (S. 811) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Gilman;

A bill (S. 1127) to amend and correct the act approved March 3, 1885, granting a pension to Sarah Hague; and

A bill (S. 1363) granting a pension to William Blanchard.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 58) authorizing the printing of a naval report; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 115) providing for the execution of the joint resolution of February 5, 1883, voting thanks and a medal to John F. Slater.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 2038) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Parker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2039) granting an increase of pension to Ira Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2040) granting a pension to George Faulk; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2041) to establish a port of entry and delivery at Atchison, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2042) granting a pension to Manuel Tibbs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2043) for the relief of Capt. Charles Thomas, of the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2044) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Hamilton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2046) granting a pension to Elizabeth Marshall; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 2047) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2048) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2049) for the relief of James N. Hill, heir at law of Joshua Hill, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2050) to refer the claims of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TELLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2051) to incorporate the National Academy of Dental Science; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2052) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petitions, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 2054) for the relief of Mrs. M. C. Handson, widow of Captain Weighton Hanson, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2055) to authorize the Court of Claims to take jurisdiction of and adjudge the claim of the Piedmont Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. VOORHEES. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the river and harbor bill, and as it is brief I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the harbor at Michigan City, Ind.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the proposed amendment be referred with the accompanying letter to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of George Brown for remuneration for property taken by the United States Army in 1862 be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Senator SHERMAN be chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

That Senator HARRISON be appointed a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

That Senator SPOONER be appointed a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

That Senator STANFORD be appointed a member of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

That Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, be appointed a member of the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the following concurrent resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint select committee of three on the part of the Senate and five on the part of the House of Representatives be appointed to consider the subject of a celebration in 1889 at Washington of the centennial anniversary of the formation of the Government under the Constitution of the United States, and also of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America in 1892, and to report what, if any, action by Congress is advisable in connection therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

CONSIDERATION OF EXECUTIVE NOMINATIONS.

Mr. PLATT. In pursuance of a notice which I gave at the last sitting of the Senate I desire to submit for printing an amendment to be proposed by me to the resolution relating to the consideration of executive nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be printed. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment to be proposed by Mr. PLATT to the resolution relating to the consideration of executive nominations submitted by him January 29, 1886, and reported adversely by the Committee on Rules April 5, 1884:

After the word "considered" insert the words "and acted upon;" and at the end of the resolution add the following words:

"And so much of section 2, Rule XXXVI, and section 2, Rule XXXVIII, of the standing rules of the Senate as conflicts with or is inconsistent with the above is to the extent of such inconsistency rescinded."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say that at some convenient time in the near future I shall ask the Senate to listen to some remarks upon the resolution. I hope I may be able, without interfering with the pressing business of the Senate, to do so on Wednesday or Thursday.

EXPENSE OF DISTRIBUTING PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which comes over under objection from Thursday. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. GORMAN April 1, 1886, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish to the Senate the name of each person employed in receiving, folding, and distributing public documents, together with their compensation, and all other expenditures made on that account, for the fiscal years 1883, 1884, and 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the resolution by adding:

And also to communicate to the Senate such additional information or suggestions as in his judgment will be of advantage to Congress in the matter of legislation touching the printing and distribution of public documents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI WATER-POWER AND BOOM COMPANY.

Mr. DOLPH called up for consideration the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1270) to authorize the Mississippi Water-Power and Boom Company, of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.

J. N. DOLPH,
D. M. SABIN,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CHARLES F. CRISP,
W. D. BYNUM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

DELAWARE INDIANS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the bill (S. 943) to pay the Delaware Indians the value of certain lands in Kansas, in compliance with treaty stipulations, which is on the Calendar favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 515) granting a pension to Althea A. Frasner;
A bill (H. R. 567) granting a pension to Mary A. Little;
A bill (H. R. 599) granting a pension to Mrs. Honorah Maloney;
A bill (H. R. 686) to grant a pension to John G. Shawbell;
A bill (H. R. 918) granting a pension to Gilbert A. Philips;
A bill (H. R. 1273) for the relief of Samuel J. Brown;
A bill (H. R. 1330) granting a pension to Martin Taylor;
A bill (H. R. 1560) for the relief of Evaline A. White;
A bill (H. R. 2054) granting a pension to Rebecca Marchant;
A bill (H. R. 2940) granting a pension to John T. Pennington;
A bill (H. R. 3135) granting an increase of pension to Charles Sebring.
A bill (H. R. 3303) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Joseph McMillan;
A bill (H. R. 3489) granting a pension to Amelia J. Gill;
A bill (H. R. 3860) granting a pension to John H. Walters;
A bill (H. R. 4461) granting a pension to Stevens W. Merrill;
A bill (H. R. 4685) for the relief of John A. Orendorff;
A bill (H. R. 4782) granting a pension to Elizabeth McKay;
A bill (H. R. 4808) granting a pension to William Field;
A bill (H. R. 4850) for the relief of William J. Hudson;
A bill (H. R. 4884) granting a pension to Rose A. McManus;
A bill (H. R. 5058) granting a pension to John Arthur;
A bill (H. R. 5351) granting a pension to Mrs. Clarissa Taft;
A bill (H. R. 5408) granting a pension to Josiah Focht;
A bill (H. R. 5583) granting a pension to John G. Burrill;
A bill (H. R. 5655) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Bell;
A bill (H. R. 6000) granting a pension to George W. Cramblett;
A bill (H. R. 6012) to increase the pension of Leander W. Corey;
A bill (H. R. 6019) granting a pension to Maria Hollands;
A bill (H. R. 6020) granting a pension to Levi M. Starne;
A bill (H. R. 6023) for the relief of Frank Sherbonaw;
A bill (H. R. 6039) for the relief of Greenville R. Hale;
A bill (H. R. 6044) granting a pension to Eliza Francesco;
A bill (H. R. 6045) granting a pension to Adam Feltner;
A bill (H. R. 6150) for the relief of Euphemia R. Smith;
A bill (H. R. 6192) granting a pension to Mary Norman;
A bill (H. R. 6225) granting a pension to Abigail H. Carey;
A bill (H. R. 6237) for the relief of Samuel Shuler;
A bill (H. R. 6257) for the relief of Julia Connelly;
A bill (H. R. 6457) granting a pension to Alfred Pickelsimer;
A bill (H. R. 6502) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Drew;
A bill (H. R. 6504) granting a pension to Nathan Magoon;
A bill (H. R. 6519) granting a pension to John D. Krehbiel;
A bill (H. R. 6638) granting a pension to William Gordon;
A bill (H. R. 6639) granting a pension to Catharine Kennedy;
A bill (H. R. 6648) for the relief of Edward M. Harrington; and A bill (H. R. 6668) granting a pension to Lurena Wages.

The foregoing forty-six pension bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the Army bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Army bill is now the order under a special agreement which the Chair will have read, so that the Senate may understand the unanimous agreement made at the last sitting.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. LOGAN. That on Monday after the morning business we proceed to the consideration of the bill to increase the efficiency of the Army, and continue it until it is disposed of, with a view not to displace any other measure that has the right of way; but at the conclusion of the morning hour that the unfinished business be laid before us and then temporarily laid aside to proceed with the Army efficiency bill until it is finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent for his proposition. The Senate has heard it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the proposition is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois will yield to the Chair to lay before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives for reference.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

LABOR ARBITRATION.

The bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that that bill, which is one of great public interest and of some urgency at the present time, may be printed in the RECORD, in order that it may be immediately in the possession of the Senate, and I give notice that I shall ask the immediate action of the Committee on Education and Labor upon the bill and the earliest possible consideration thereof by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the bill be printed in the RECORD. The Chair will state that it has been printed two or three times in the RECORD.

Mr. BLAIR. I have not seen it. There were a great many amendments placed upon the bill in the other House, and I should like to have it printed as it finally passed that body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be so printed and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill is as follows:

An act to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever differences or controversies arise between railroad companies engaged in the transportation of property or passengers between two or more States of the United States, between a Territory and State, within the Territories of the United States, or within the District of Columbia, and the employés of said railroad companies, which differences or controversies may hinder, impede, obstruct, interrupt, or affect such transportation of property or passengers, if, upon the written proposition of either party to the controversy to submit their differences to arbitration, the other party shall accept the proposition, then and in such event the railroad company is hereby authorized to select and appoint one person, and such employé or employés as the case may be, to select and appoint another person, and the two persons thus selected and appointed to select a third person, all three of whom shall be citizens of the United States and wholly impartial and disinterested in respect to such differences or controversies; and the three persons thus selected and appointed shall be, and they are hereby, created and constituted a board of arbitration, with the duties, powers, and privileges hereinafter set forth.

SEC. 2. That the board of arbitration provided for in the first section of this act shall possess all the powers and authority in respect to administering oaths, subpœnaing witnesses and compelling their attendance, preserving order during the sittings of the board, and requiring the production of papers and writings relating alone to the subject under investigation now possessed and belonging to the United States commissioners appointed by the circuit court of the United States; but in no case shall any witness be compelled to disclose the secrets or produce the records or proceedings of any labor organization of which he may be an officer or member; and said board of arbitration may appoint a clerk and employ a stenographer, and prescribe all reasonable rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, looking to the speedy advancement of the differences and controversies submitted to them to a conclusion and determination. Each of said arbitrators shall take an oath to honestly, fairly, and faithfully perform his duties, and that he is not personally interested in the subject-matter in controversy, which oath may be administered by any State or Territorial officer authorized to administer oaths. The third person so selected and appointed as aforesaid shall be the president of said board; and any order, finding, conclusion, or award made by a majority of such arbitrators shall be of the same force and effect as if all three of such arbitrators concurred therein or united in making the same.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said board of arbitration, immediately upon their selection, to organize at the nearest practicable point to the place of the origin of the difficulty or controversy, and to hear and determine the matters of difference which may be submitted to them in writing by all the parties, giving them full opportunity to be heard on oath, in person and by witnesses, and also granting them the right to be represented by counsel; and after concluding its investigation said board shall publicly announce its award, which, with the findings of fact upon which it is based, shall be reduced to writing and signed by the arbitrators concurring therein, and, together with the testimony taken in the case, shall be filed with the Commissioner of Labor of the United States, who shall make such award public as soon as the same shall have been received by him.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the right of any employés engaged in the controversy to appoint, by designation in writing, one or more persons to act for them in the selection of an arbitrator to represent them upon the board of arbitration.

SEC. 5. That each member of said tribunal of arbitration shall receive a compensation of $10 a day for the time actually employed. That the clerk appointed by said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees and compensation as clerks of United States circuit courts and district courts receive for like services. That the stenographer shall receive as full compensation for his services 20 cents for each folio of an hundred words of testimony taken and reduced to writing before said arbitrators. That United States marshals or other persons serving the process of said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees and compensation for such services as they would receive for like services upon process issued by United States commissioners. That witnesses attending before said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees as witnesses attending before United States commissioners. That all of said fees and compensation shall be payable by the United States in like manner as fees and compensation are payable in criminal causes under existing laws: Provided, That the said tribunal of arbitration shall have power to limit the number of witnesses in each case where fees shall be paid by the United States: And provided further, That the fees and compensation of the arbitrators, clerks, stenographers, marshals, and others for service of process, and witnesses under this act shall be examined and certified by the United States district judge of the district in which the arbitration is held before they are presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for settlement, and shall then be subject to the provisions of section 846 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and a sufficient sum of money to pay all expenses under this act and to carry the same into effect is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That not exceeding $1,000 shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States to defray the expenses of any single arbitration under this act.

Passed the House of Representatives April 3, 1886.

Attest:

JOHN B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me, I desire to give notice that on Monday, the 19th instant, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending order so that I may submit for a very short period of time some remarks on a resolution that I introduced, which is now upon the table ready to be taken up. I did not desire to interfere with the Senator from Illinois, but I shall not occupy any great length of time.

Mr. LOGAN. I dislike very much to refuse any courtesy to a Senator, but the Senator from Florida well knows that the Army bill has been before the Senate for several days, and it has been postponed time and again. There is an agreement that it shall be taken up now and that we shall proceed with it until it is finished, and I hope that will be done. The Senator will have ample opportunity hereafter to make his remarks.

Mr. CALL. I do not urge it upon the Senator from Illinois, but I give notice that at the conclusion of the Army debate I shall ask the Senate to take up the resolution to which I refer in order that I may submit some remarks upon it.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 777) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, the pending question being on Mr. HALE'S motion to strike out section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. At the conclusion of the consideration of this bill on a preceding day there remained some things which I desired to say about the bill which I will present to the Senate now.

Section 11 of the bill provides as follows:

That so much of the act making appropriations for the Army approved July 24, 1876, as forbids payment of mileage over land-grant railroads, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate especially to that section. The provision which it repeals, section 2 of the Army appropriation act of July 24, 1876, is as follows:

That when any officer travels under orders, and is not furnished transportation by the Quartermaster's Department, or on a conveyance belonging to or chartered by the United States, or on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, he shall be allowed 8 cents a mile, and no more, for each mile actually traveled under such order, distances to be calculated by the shortest usually traveled route.

That is as much of the section as refers to the question of mileage. By a series of legislative provisions the relations of the General Government to the land-grant railways were adjusted upon the basis of the payment by the Government of 50 per cent. of the ordinary or schedule prices for the transportation of persons and property over such railroads, and in order to save to the Government the full benefit of that provision that part of section 2 of the act of 1876 which I have read was adopted. At the present time if an Army officer wants to travel over a land-grant railroad he can not get mileage, but he goes to the proper quartermaster and gets an order for transportation in kind. That transports him without cost to himself, but it cuts him off from the little profit he gets when he travels on other railroads at 8 cents a mile.

Now, in order to give an Army officer this little profit, which is dear to his heart, this bill coming from the Committee on Military Affairs proposes to double the price we have to pay to land-grant railroads for that transportation. For instance, in the State of Kansas the regular local fare upon all railroads is 3 cents a mile. An Army officer who travels over a land-grant railroad in that State gets transportation from the quartermaster in kind, and when the bill is rendered to the Government by the company it is cut in two in the middle, the transportation thus costing the Government 1½ cents a mile for that transportation, and that is reserved to the Government because of the terms upon which the lands which built the roads were granted to the railroad companies, by which, under the decision of the Supreme Court, the Government is entitled to the free use of the track, and is only required to pay for the use of the motive-power, wages, &c.

By reason of this decision of the court, and by reason of the legislation which at various dates has followed that decision, the Government gets now a reduction of one-half on all its transportation over land-grant railroads, including the transportation of officers and soldiers. It can readily be seen that if an officer gets 8 cents a mile and pays 3, he enjoys some little profit. It is one of the perquisites of the military service, so to speak, and one of those things the taking away of which makes the Army officer resentful. He does not like it at all. He does not want the Government to save 1½ cents a mile on his travel, and thereby deprive him of 5 cents a mile clear profit. If the Senator from Illinois in his zeal to serve the Army officers and give them all possible perquisites which legislation can provide had simply said they should have the 8 cents a mile but that the railroad company should deduct the cent and a half per mile as now, it would have been better. But in order to give the Army officer this profit, this provision not only covers the officer himself, but requires the Government to pay a cent and a half per mile extra to the railroad companies beyond what your law now requires to be paid, and beyond what has been agreed upon as just.

While I think an Army officer traveling under orders is well enough equipped when he gets an order for transportation in kind, so that that transportation costs him nothing, still if it is designed to enable him to make a profit out of travel, and so make it a favor to him to get from his commanding officer the necessary order to travel, let us give him the benefit alone and not give it to railroad companies with which we had a formal settlement whereby they agreed to accept in full satisfaction for service rendered to the Government one-half rates, and this, too, based on the valuable consideration of the land grants they had from the Government.

Those members of the Senate who were here a few years ago will not need to have recalled to them the struggle that occurred over the question of how much this extra transportation of officers should cost the General Government. From time to time the amounts which had been paid were enlarged until we came to pay, as in 1876, $230,000 a year to Army officers traveling under orders without troops. Great abuses grew up under it. A case was brought to the attention of the committee having the subject in charge where a general officer desirous of sending his wife to a watering place which was somewhat remote from the station where he was serving detailed a member of his staff to go to the watering place, and the extra pay that staff officer received on account of the trip was sufficient to pay the entire expenditure of the general officer's wife who accompanied the staff officer. That was not, I beg the Senate to understand, a single case by any means. We come to know many such abuses that had grown up under the provision for Army transportation, and they are abuses which are liable to again occur.

Now whenever an Army officer wants to be transported over stage-routes where the price of transportation is more than 8 cents a mile, or is such that he does not get any profit on it, I venture to say he invariably goes to the quartermaster and gets transportation in kind; but where he can travel over a railroad over which he may have a pass or over which at all events the charge is less than 8 cents a mile, he claims his 8 cents a mile and thereby makes a profit.

I am not complaining now about the rate of 8 cents a mile; that is apart from this discussion; but I call attention to the fact that here is one of those wholesome rules that grew out of the adjustment of our relations to land-grant railroads which it is proposed to rescind simply in order to give greater profit to Army officers—the Government losing at both ends.

Section 5 is as follows:

That officers serving away from their stations as members or judge-advocates of courts-martial or courts of inquiry, or as members of military boards, shall receive a per diem allowance of $2.50.

The Senator from Illinois made the obvious explanation, which is that when once there has been established a scale of expense to which the officer has accustomed himself he shall not be moved unless he is paid for moving. In other words, he is to be insured against extra expense under all circumstances, and whatever may happen no contingency or emergency of any kind is ever to affect him unfavorably. He is to be so equipped and bolstered up by provisions of law that if he turns around twice more in the course of a day than he is accustomed to do he must be paid for that turning around.

According to the authority which the Senator from Illinois quoted the other day, there were over three thousand courts-martial held in the division of the Missouri last year; and that did not include military boards, boards of survey, and so on. I think generally the average number of officers will be at least seven to a court-martial. That would take the service of twenty-one thousand officers in the course of the year; and if only half of those served on the courts-martial away from their stations, and if no court-martial sat more than two days, it would mean the addition of a very considerable sum to the expense of the Army for the purpose of evening up the compensation of the officers in such a way that under no possible circumstances can it be said that anything they can be required to do under orders has resulted in any loss to them. I think the Army that has got along for the last one hundred years without that provision can get along without it longer.

Section 6 provides:

That the Secretary of War may authorize the employment at the headquarters of military divisions, departments, and districts of civilian clerks in place of the general-service clerks now authorized for such employment, at rates of compensation not to exceed those paid to other civilian clerks employed at such headquarters by officers of the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments.

A few years ago on due consideration the enlistment of what is known as general-service clerks was provided for. That law provided for the enlistment of not to exceed four hundred persons in the Army who were to receive the pay and allowance, I think of a sergeant, and who were to be employed exclusively for clerical purposes. The average pay is about $81 a month; just about $1,000 per year. Under that authority for employment there has been employed this number of clerks, and they have rendered great satisfaction. The result has been to bring into the service a useful body of men, and their service has been entirely satisfactory except that it robs the division and department commanders of that which they would like to have, the privilege of selecting somebody whom they personally like as clerks at their headquarters.

It does not enable them to exercise that choice which they would like to have and to distribute that patronage which, after all, is as dear to persons out of political life, I suppose, as it is to persons in political life. So it is proposed here to practically destroy this system which has been subjected to the test of years and substitute in place of it the arbitrary will and discretion of the Army commanders to employ persons at a price which will be undoubtedly at least one-half greater than the present cost to the Government of the general-service clerks, and without bringing any better results.

Another provision of this bill is found in section 8 to this effect:

That officers of the line, except regimental quartermasters, detailed for duty as acting assistant quartermasters, shall be allowed the same additional compensation as is now allowed by law to acting commissaries of subsistence.

That is an allowance of $10 per month, and that illustrates again the general disposition which underlies this bill to avail of every possible opportunity to give something extra to some officer of the Army. Some man who does not want to command his company and can be detailed as a quartermaster is to have $10 a month—a reward to men for shirking that duty with their company which they owe, and which whether they can be spared from their company or not practically imposes no greater responsibility upon them than there is upon them as company commanders. It ought to be a part of the duty of every officer to serve in every department in the Army within some reasonable period of time, in order that he may be familiar with other duties than those specifically attached to his ordinary assignment. Every company commander ought to be in turn the quartermaster of a post or regiment; he ought to serve in the general staff departments; he ought to be sufficiently many-sided in order that if the emergency shall ever come for armies, we shall have those in all our companies and in all our regiments who are capable of performing those valuable functions which they would then be required to render in connection with the organization of volunteer regiments.

As it is now, once an officer of any branch of the service always such officer and nothing else; and the tendency is all the while not only to keep a man in the place where he happens to be appointed, but to remove from him any stimulus to learn anything else except the naked and very limited routine of duties which fall to his lot in the rank to which he happens to be appointed. He has no responsibility. As I said the other day, the commanding officer of a company does not see his company until it comes out on parade in charge of the orderly sergeant. He rarely drills it. It is presented to him, so to speak, properly equipped for service. Instead of this there ought to be ever present with the officer responsibility for more things and not the constant disposition to make him responsible for less.

The addition of this section will not add very largely to the expense, perhaps, but it is a totally useless provision; and why at this late day it should seem to be necessary to seek out every possible occasion and opportunity to add to the perquisites and to the emoluments of the officers of the Army and to the consequent burden of the Treasury, I have yet to be informed.

I received a letter the other day from a gentleman who described himself as "an old citizen of New York," who reprobated me very sharply for my opposition to the increase of the Army. He said there were forty thousand socialists in New York who were ready at any time to rise and destroy property, and that the Army, to use his expression, "would not furnish them mince-meat." Without knowing anything about it, I will venture to say that that "old citizen of New York" is a man of very considerable wealth, and that by as much as he has acquired wealth has withdrawn himself from the discharge of the ordinary duties of a citizen. He does not know anything more about the government of that municipality of which he is a part than some man who was never within its borders; he probably has not voted for many years; he has absorbed himself with his own private business, overlooking his obligation to the public, caring nothing for anything else than accumulating money, and without any sense of responsibility concerning the character or the quality of the Government which was over him. He wants the United States Government to protect his wealth, which he has done nothing to protect himself by contributing his mite to just and good government.

It is one of the evil signs of the times that the men who it would be supposed had the most at stake in the Government pay the least regard to their duties as citizens. They are not the men who go to the polls; they are not the men who seek to form an enlightened judgment in regard to public affairs; they are those who, as they accumulate, get more and more selfish and less and less concerned about their public duties and obligations, and who, at the very first scent of danger, which comes to them quicker than it does to the average man because they have more to lose, call upon the General Government to do for them what they have heretofore in this cowardly way omitted to do for themselves. The letter is significant not only of that, but of the general feeling as to what this addition to the Army means.

The Senator from Illinois has seemed to think that there was some personal ill-will toward him in this matter, and he has said a great many disagreeable things about those of us who have had the temerity to oppose this bill. I do not reflect upon him for having introduced the bill. I think, perhaps, his regard for the regular Army is natural, not like Katisha in the Mikado, an acquired taste, but one that may be inherited. I have no doubt that in introducing and advocating it he is perfectly sincere and honest. He naturally thinks of the military establishment with some degree of pride, a very natural degree of pride too. I hope, however, that that pride which he has in the regular Army will not induce him to forget that great volunteer army of which he formed so important a part, and that in his zeal to increase the perquisites and emoluments of the officers of the regular Army he will not forget the one fact which stands out in bold relief to all intelligent observers who contemplate that great struggle of a few years ago, that after all it was the private soldier who, while he got the least, was entitled to the greatest credit. I hope he will not forget that those private soldiers are scattered all over this broad land, mostly in comparative poverty; that the Government is in debt to them—a debt which it grudgingly pays, some of which it has not paid at all, and which I fear it never will pay.

The Senator from Illinois has himself introduced from time to time a bill for the equalization of bounties, which, as in duty bound, he sent to the committee of which he is chairman and a conspicuous and honored member, and in which he has, as he has in the Senate, a great and commanding influence. I hope when he has got through with the regular Army, when he has given to it everything that the most exacting member of it could demand, he will remember these men who labor under this inequality which the bill to which I have referred seeks to remedy, and that before the time when by means of bills of this kind and others of like character the money in the Treasury will be exhausted, he will manage to get that bill before the Senate and make that much of a contribution to the welfare of the private soldiers in the late war, in the discharge of an honest debt which the Government owes to them and which it has too long postponed the payment of. And when he shall get that bill out of the committee, whether with a favorable or an unfavorable report, he will not need to characterize me as a demagogue on this floor to get me to vote for it. He will not need to make an offensive reference to any business in which I happen to be engaged in order to get me into line with him in supporting that measure. I will gladly join with him in passing it through the Senate. There is no hurry about it; next year will do, no doubt; but such a measure as now before the Senate to give more pay to the regular Army can not wait. If when it comes next year it is not met by the statement that we have already exhausted the money in the Treasury and so these men must wait another generation, I shall be glad. And I hope that when he considers that bill, and the men whom it will benefit scattered as they are from Maine to California, poor and weak and distressed, he will revive his recollections of that grand army which he led, of the great merit of the men in the ranks who composed it and who were only too glad to follow where he led and whose courage and constancy he knows better than I can tell him. He knows how they have long suffered on account of the injustice of the Government; what a relief the pittance due them would bring. And when he gets through with the regular Army, when he has piled up mountain high its salaries and emoluments and added everything which the exactions of that branch of the service can demand, that he will bear in mind these other and helpless ones to whom we owe something for services already rendered.

Mr. President, there has been some discussion about the cost of the addition of five thousand men to the regular Army, and the Senator from Illinois will put in a statement in his speech presently, I have no doubt, from some officer of the Army speaking simply of the pay and ignoring the great mass of expenses which go to make up the cost of the Army, and which is bound to be to a large extent, if not wholly, proportioned to the number of persons in it. I have here the Army appropriation bill for 1876, which I select simply as a matter of convenience, having referred to provisions which it contains, and it is substantially the same as those which have succeeded it. Stress has been laid upon the cost of transporting the Army, and it has been said this item would not be increased by increasing the number of enlisted men. Here is the item of the appropriation bill which provides for transportation:

For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing and camp and garrison equipage from the depots of Philadelphia and Jeffersonville to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence-stores from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery, under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small-arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freight, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of horses, mules, oxen, and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; for procuring water at such posts as, from their situation, require it to be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads, and for removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops in the field, $3,500,000.

That is a part of a bill which appropriated about $25,000,000 for the support of the Army. The annual appropriation now is a trifle less, some of the excrescences having been recently cut off to the extent I think of about a million dollars, and yet transportation, including all the items which I have enumerated, only amounts to three and a half millions, and that is transportation of camp and garrison equipage, which, of course, will be increased in proportion as the troops are increased, of clothing and military stores for their use, which of course will be increased as the troops are increased. There is not a single item of transportation except that of officers on extra duty, for which the sum of about $160,000 is now appropriated annually, but what will be increased in proportion to the enlargement of the number of soldiers of the Army. All the items enumerated in the foregoing provision amount to only about 12 per cent. of the whole annual cost of the Army, and transportation proper not to over 10 per cent.

In addition to that we appropriate every year a number of hundreds of thousands of dollars for the erection of new quarters for troops, new hospitals, and things of that kind, which of course will have to be increased in proportion as we increase the number of soldiers. There is no way whereby the cost of these five thousand men can be safely estimated to be less than $800 per annum per man to the Government if they are put into service. All the talk about the pay being only $160 a year for the first year, and so on, and 20 cents a day for rations, is idle. The Army has got to be clothed and sheltered and fed as well as transported, and when it is transported by rail, that transportation is paid for just as the transportation of private persons is paid for, in accordance with numbers. When the stores are transported they are paid for in proportion to the quantity and weight, whether quartermaster stores or commissary stores, and all the machinery of the Army, everything that goes to make up its expense, is increased in proportion as we increase the number of persons for whom the money is to be spent.

I do not think that is the worst part of this bill. I look with more disfavor upon the half-dozen additions to the pay and emoluments of the officers than I do upon the addition of five thousand men to the Army, bad as I regard that to be. I can conceive of no justification for that. We have already made two separate and distinct material increases in the pay of officers of the Army since the war. The Senator from Illinois says this does not increase it. If you make the Government pay for the wood which the officer uses, whereas now he is required to pay for it himself, is not that adding to his compensation? If you pay him two dollars and a half a day for every day that he is put on extra duty does not that add to his compensation? If you authorize him to have a private servant from the ranks at $20 a month when he can not hire one now at less than $40, including board and shelter, is not that increasing his compensation? And in order to do that this bill provides for taking a man who costs the Government $800 a year and giving him to the officer for $20 a month. Then when you enlist instructors to instruct his children and thereby relieve him of the necessity of employing any one for that purpose, is not that an addition to his compensation? And if, in addition to that, you allow him mileage for travel not now allowed on which he makes a profit which the Government loses, is not that increasing his compensation? Sooner or later all officers travel, and the difference which they get now between the regular railroad fare and 8 cents a mile is a very handsome sum and they appreciate it.

I heard one of the oldest and most useful officers of the Army, whose name I am not permitted for obvious reasons to use, speak to this effect with reference to this bill: He said the officers of the Army are doing well enough now; and he added, "I object to the bill not because I am not willing to take what comes to me, but because I foresee the time when in the effort to make both ends meet Congress will be casting around for some place where it can cut off expenses, and by just as much as we increase now the expenses of the Army beyond its needs by just that much will the reaction come then which will induce Congress to put in the knife that much deeper." I believe that would be the judgment of all the judicious members of the Army. They are as a rule high-minded, honorable men, but they are men, and when they find Congress in a mood to give them something they have not now got, like anybody else they will take it. Suppose we were confronted with a war and we had to multiply this Army ten or twenty times. At the present rate of pay and with all these additional allowances thrown in it would be an army the expense of which would be frightful.

Is it not better to take the money to pay the debt we owe to the volunteer soldiers who served us in the field in the late war, and thus cultivate in the minds of our people a belief in the honor and integrity of the Government to an extent that will induce them when the necessity shall arrive to come forward promptly for service in the ranks? Is it not better to take this $6,000,000 a year and build with it guns and fortifications rather than to waste it, because it is absolute waste and totally unnecessary upon the existing establishment, and thereby to that extent cut off our ability to engage in this great defensive work, whether it be on the land or whether it be upon the sea? Just at a time when we seem to be aroused to the necessity of something of that kind and when we ought to husband our resources in order to do it effectively and promptly, here is a proposition to add $6,000,000 a year to the current expenses of the Army and thereby take that much out of the funds from which we might make our Navy within a few years large enough to answer all practical purposes, and, in addition to that, put defensive guns at the important points upon our seacoast.

I have made a little table of what I think the various items in this bill will cost. One hundred instructors in the Army to instruct the children of Army officers and to prevent the necessity of the Army officers being detailed under a section of the Revised Statutes which I read the other day, to instruct the men of their commands, will cost $100,000.

They are to have the pay of ordnance sergeants, which is $34 a month and a ration and a half and clothing and so on. The averege will not be less than a thousand dollars a year each, which, as I said before, is tolerably good school pay. It is a good instructor indeed who in any of the States gets a thousand dollars a year. I suppose that the item of wood will cost the Government at least $200,000 a year. The addition of civilian clerks in place of general service clerks will cost $50,000 a year. The loss to the Government on account of the servants who are to be enlisted under this bill—because that is what it amounts to—will be between $600,000 and $700,000 a year. The extra expense or courts-martial will be about $50,000. The five thousand additional men will cost $4,000,000. The chaplains, details, &c., I estimate will cost $50,000 more.

Then in addition to that is to be added about $900,000 I think, according to the estimate furnished to the chairman of the Military Committee, for the increased pay of the private soldiers and the non-commissioned staff, and that is the smallest part of it.

Altogether there is an actual increase of about $6,000,000, over one-third of which will come without the addition of a single man to the Army, practically a present to the officers now in service of that much money.

In addition to that, one of the most wholesome provisions in the statutes, which provides for the inspection of the pay corps by an officer not belonging to that corps, is wiped out, and the Secretary of War is compelled to inspect the pay corps through the medium of its own members. It seems to me as though every one of these provisions is totally out of place, totally unjustified. I have no feeling about the matter, as has been stated here, and it happened that I had had no consultation with anybody about it prior to first speaking, and if the bill shall be voted up it will not affect me in the slighest degree, personally or otherwise, and if it shall go down I hope the Senator from Illinois will at least believe that the Senators who vote against it are incapable of casting votes upon a measure of this kind upon personal grounds.

Whatever there is of personality that has been brought into this debate the Senator has brought in here himself. No one has referred to him in an unkind manner, or certainly not until after he had characterized in a manner most offensive a member of the Senate who never had had for him, up to that moment, anything but the kindest of feeling, and who never had done him anything but service. If he is satisfied with the debate and what shall grow out of it, I certainly am not dissatisfied.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks hardly in line with those which have been made to the Senate this morning, and yet which look a little bit toward war. I reported a resolution touching a commission recommended by the President on fisheries two months ago. It was made a special order February 16 for February 22. It was postponed on account of the educational bill about a month, and of the political discussion about three weeks, and now the Army bill and the Washington Territory bill have interposed. I regard it as very essential that that matter shall be discussed in the Senate and determined at the earliest day possible. I think that good reasons will appear from the suggestions and facts I shall briefly present for early and decisive action.

Mr. President, I wish to read the following resolution adopted by the Fishing Exchange in Portland a week ago:

> Whereas information has been received through the Assistant Secretary of State that American fishing vessels have no right to enter Canadian bays or harbors, only for shelter, damage, and purchasing wood and water:
> Therefore we memorialize Congress to take some immediate action that shall deprive provincial fishermen of the same privileges of entering American bays and harbors that are denied by the Dominion Government to American fishermen; and
> Whereas there are several provincial vessels in our port purchasing bait for the purpose of carrying on their cod fisheries:
> Therefore we ask that the same restrictions be placed upon their vessels which enter American ports for bait that the Canadian Government has imposed upon American vessels; and
> Whereas the Canadian Government has already fitted out cruisers ostensibly to keep American vessels outside the three-mile limit, so called:
> Therefore we pray that our Government send a sufficient number of armed vessels to look after and protect the rights of American vessels.

I wish to say further that the minister of marine in Canada has issued a proclamation in which he declares that no American fishing vessel shall be permitted to enter Canadian ports for the purchase of bait or ice, or for the purpose of shipping crews, or for the purpose of landing freight from their vessels for transmission across the Canadas into the States. I understand further that they have fitted out their cruisers, and that there is one to-day in British waters giving directions to our fishermen not to enter a Canadian port for any purpose except shelter, to buy wood or water, or to repair damages under the treaty of 1818, and I know they claim that to-day we are living under the treaty of 1818, under the terms of which we had no commercial privileges in Canadian ports whatever, and in fact we never had any from the day we became independent up to the treaty of 1818.

The President of the Fishery Union sent to the State Department, March 25, a communication calling the attention of that Department to what was going on in those waters, and calling upon the Department to take some action touching the premises. I took up the New York Tribune this morning and found that Captain Whitten, a Portland man, telegraphed to know whether sailing vessels he had just fitted out and for which he had engaged crews in Canada would be permitted to enter Canadian waters and take those crews on board, and I read the dispatch in reply from the State Department, dated "Washington, D. C., March 27, 1886." Here is what the State Department says:

> American vessels of any character have a right to enter any port which is not actually blockaded for the purpose of shipping a whole or a part of a crew. But the right does not carry with it any other privilege.
>
> JAMES D. PORTER.

The very same day—March 27—came another telegram from the State Department:

> Department informed since sending telegram of this morning that American fishing vessels can only enter Canadian bays and harbors for shelter, damages, purchasing wood, and obtaining water. This is under the concession of 1818.
>
> JAMES D. PORTER,
> Assistant Secretary.

Amazing difference in the two telegrams; one free entry to Canadian ports, the other no entry at all except for the bare rights of hospitality!

Now, the State Department needs education further. I declare that we have a right to enter Canadian ports and harbors for any purpose we please, except for piracy or for fishing within the shore-line. I contend that an American fishing vessel licensed and with a permit to trade in foreign countries has a well-settled right to go into any port in Canada she may desire to go to buy bait or ice, or flour or bread, or anything else, or to ship crews.

Why, sir, look at it for one moment. You may examine all the treaties we ever made with Great Britain and you can not find commercial privileges mentioned in one of them. Go back to the beginning of 1783, and follow them through to-day, and there are no commercial privileges provided for in a treaty except incidentally in the treaty of 1854. These commercial privileges are creatures of law and nothing else, and you turn to our statutes and you will find that we commenced proffers to open our ports in 1820, then by a statute of 1823, then by a statute of 1830, and Andrew Jackson, after the statute of 1830, issued his proclamation, which I desire to call the attention of the Senate to for a moment. This is the closing paragraph of it:

> Now, therefore, I, Andrew Jackson, President of the United States of America, do hereby declare and proclaim that such evidence has been received by me—> and that by the operation of the act of Congress passed on the 29th day of May, 1830, the ports of the United States are, from the date of this proclamation, open to British vessels coming from the said British possessions, and their cargoes, upon the terms set forth in the said act, the act entitled "An act concerning navigation," passed on the 18th day of April, 1818, the act supplementary thereto, passed the 15th day of May, 1820, and the act entitled "An act to regulate the commercial intercourse between the United States and certain British ports," passed the 1st day of March, 1823, are absolutely repealed; and British vessels and their cargoes are admitted to an entry in the ports of the United States from the islands, provinces, and colonies of Great Britain on or near the American continent and north or east of the United States.

That is, as to the opening of British ports—

And by parliamentary acts our vessels were admitted to their ports. But go one step further. There is a law which seems to have escaped entirely the attention of the State Department. The United States had been proffering for years to Great Britain a repeal of our navigation laws to induce Great Britain to repeal hers, and in 1849, June 26, Great Britain did repeal her navigation laws to the extent we asked. I have the act here before me. It proceeds under a "whereas" to repeal a score or more of restrictive laws touching navigation and trade, and "so as," in the language of section 10, "to place the ships of such country"—referring to the country making similar modifications of their navigation laws—"on the same footing as nearly as possible in British ports as that in which British ships are placed in the ports of such country."

And there is further in the law touching the same thing. Now I call attention to the message of President Taylor in 1849, recognizing this action on the part of Great Britain:

> Our relations with Great Britain are of the most friendly character. In consequence of the recent alteration of the British navigation acts, British vessels, from British and other foreign ports, will (under our existing laws), after the 1st day of January next, be admitted to entry in our ports, with cargoes of the growth, manufacture, or production of any part of the world, on the same terms, as to duties, imposts, and charges, as vessels of the United States with their cargoes; and our vessels will be admitted to the same advantages in British ports, entering therein on the same terms as British vessels. Should no order in council disturb this legislative arrangement, the late act of the British Parliament, by which Great Britain is brought within the terms proposed by the act of Congress of the 1st of March, 1817, it is hoped will be productive of benefit to both countries.

Shortly after that President Taylor issued a proclamation, in which, in consideration that the ports of Great Britain had been opened to our vessels, our ports were all opened to the vessels of Great Britain. Now, what has the treaty of 1818 to do with that? Is there any repeal of the law of 1849? Is there any repeal or modification of our law since 1849? Is there any withdrawal or modification of the proclamations of Great Britain and of the President of the United States opening all the ports of both countries to the vessels of the other? None can be found, and I contend that we do not go back to the treaty of 1818 for our commercial privileges. We go back to the law of 1849 and the proclamations of Great Britain and of the United States issued in consequence of that law, and we have as free entry for our vessels under their terms into Canadian ports to buy ice or bait or flour or ship goods as we have to go into the port of New York for the same purposes. They are coming into our ports under that law and buying whatever they please. They are buying bait to-day in the city of Portland. Four vessels were there last week, four vessels in Gloucester the day before yesterday, I saw by a telegram, buying bait; and we, forsooth, are not to be permitted to go into their ports to ship seamen or buy bait or ice, and English cruisers are to prey on our fishermen as they have for fifty years past if we undertake to do it!

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator will suspend for a moment. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes. Under the agreement previously referred to it will be laid aside informally to proceed with the Army efficiency bill.

Mr. FRYE. I will go on only one minute.

Mr. President, I am only waiting for one single American vessel to be seized, and there will be one or more within a week I greatly fear taken into a Canadian port, tried in a colonial court, and condemned on the evidence of colonial witnesses, who perhaps guess that she was within the three-mile shore line, and then I propose to introduce a bill—it need not take more than ten lines—to close the United States ports against all British colonial fishing, freight, and passenger vessels, and see how long Canada will carry on this operation she has entered upon now.

Mr. President, I am exceedingly anxious that the resolution to which I have alluded, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations unanimously, shall be adopted by as nearly a unanimous vote as possible. Canada to-day is only repeating her history for the last twenty, thirty, forty years. She is only by outrage undertaking to drive us into a new treaty, and I want the Senate of the United States to put itself on record against any such commission as Canada has driven us into by seizing our vessels before. I ask unanimous consent that that resolution may be taken up for consideration to-morrow morning immediately after the morning business. It will not occupy more than three hours' time, in my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator now asks unanimous consent——

Mr. LOGAN. I feel as much interest as the Senator from Maine in that matter; but I can not agree, after having had this bill laid aside so often, that any business shall interpose until it is completed. That was the agreement made unanimously and made by order of the Senate; and I can not agree to anything which may disturb it.

Mr. FRYE. Will you get through with this bill to-day?

Mr. LOGAN. I will if we can. We can not if we are to discuss the fisheries.

Mr. FRYE. Then I give notice that to-morrow morning, after the morning business, I will move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution relative to the fisheries.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it is quite a surprise to me, as I have no doubt it is to the Senate, that we should have the discussion of the fisheries controversy between the British Possessions and the United States on the military bill. I suppose in the present opinion of the Senate it was supposed that a proposition to add to the force of the Army of the United States and to reorganize it gave an opportunity to the Senator from Maine to express his belligerent views on a matter of commerce between the United States and Canada.

This question is one that is capable of being handled without the interposition of an army or a navy either. It is a question of commerce, a question of mutual relations between two adjacent countries upon the delicate matter in regard to their fishery rights, which involves some very grave questions of international law, and I am quite surprised that the discussion of it should have been interjected here. At an opportune moment I shall request the Senate to ask the Secretary of State what new complications have arisen within the last day or two between Canada and the United States on this very delicate topic. I do not know that I shall be able to find an opportunity to introduce a resolution of that kind, but at all events I will try and address myself personally to the State Department to know whether there is any new fact in this case of an alarming nature. The prognostication is made here this morning that in a short time there will be a vessel seized and probably confiscated in the admiralty courts of the Dominion, and that that will bring on a controversy of a very unpleasant and trying character between these two governments. I do not wish to force any controversy. I wish, and I carry it out by my votes in this body, to do all that I can to sustain every American right, and that means, so far as I am concerned, that I will avail myself of every power of the Government of the United States within my reach to maintain and protect the very slightest right of any American citizen against foreign invasion, or foreign interruption, or against discredit in a foreign port or elsewhere.

My view of the general topic coincides, I think, with that of the Senator from Maine, but I must insist that we ought to discuss this question not upon the military bill, but with deliberation and coolness and quietness, so that the whole subject may have an investigation upon its actual merits.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words upon the measure that is actually pending before the Senate, Senate bill No. 777, to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States. The measure now pending directly is the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to strike out section 2, which section increases the number of the standing regular Army five thousand. There is another amendment pending, the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], which proposes an additional increase to the Army of fifty majors, fifty captains, fifty first lieutenants, and fifty second lieutenants. It proposes to increase each of the twenty-five regiments of infantry to twelve-company regiments, so that each regiment will have twelve companies, composing three battalions, and known as the three battalions' organization. There are other features of this bill which I shall not take the time to discuss.

The question is, is there any necessity for an increase of the standing Army of the United States five thousand men and two hundred officers? Is there any necessity for an increase of the annual permanent expenditures of the United States to the extent that will be required to maintain these additional five thousand men and two hundred officers? Is there any necessity for an imposition upon the tax-paying people of the United States of a sum sufficient to support and maintain these five thousand additional soldiers and these two hundred additional officers? Is there any necessity for the increase of the Army to the extent contemplated? Unless there is some reason, unless there is some necessity for the increase of the standing regular Army of the United States, the increase of the burdens borne by the tax-payers, and the increase of the annual permanent expenditures of the United States, this bill should not be passed.

Now, Mr. President, what is the Army to-day? It is composed of 1 lieutenant-general; 3 major-generals; 16 brigadier-generals; 68 colonels; 89 lieutenant-colonels; 220 majors; 611 captains; 40 adjutants (extra lieutenants); 40 regimental quartermasters (extra lieutenants); 568 first lieutenants; 459 second lieutenants; 34 chaplains; making an aggregate of 2,149 officers in the regular Army to-day. Then going to the non-commissioned officers and privates we find, 40 sergeant-majors; 40 quartermaster sergeants; 40 chief musicians; 60 principal musicians; 10 saddler sergeants; 10 chief trumpeters; 112 ordnance sergeants; 120 commissary sergeants; 80 post-quartermaster sergeants; 140 hospital stewards; 1 battalion sergeant-major; 1 battalion quartermaster-sergeant; 430 first sergeants; 2,210 sergeants; 1,905 corporals; 240 trumpeters; 628 musicians; 240 farriers and blacksmiths; 620 artificers; 120 saddlers; 430 wagoners; 558 privates, first class; 419 privates, second class; 17,046 privates; making a total of 25,500 non-commissioned officers, employés, and privates, and an aggregate in the whole standing Army of officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, of 27,649. The organizations are twenty-five regiments of infantry, ten of cavalry, five of artillery, and one engineer battalion.

In addition to that in the military establishment we have three hundred and seventy-two in the Military Academy at West Point and five hundred and twenty officers upon the retired-list drawing three-fourths of their regular pay.

Mr. President, what is the burden of this standing Army? What does it cost the people to maintain and support the regular standing Army?

Our military establishment, including fortifications, arsenals, and river and harbor improvements, cost in the year 1791, $632,804; in 1800, $2,560,878.77; in 1810, $2,294,323.94; in 1820, $2,630,392.31; in 1830, $4,767,128.88; in 1840, $7,095,267.23; in 1850, $9,687,024.58; in 1860, $16,472,202.72; in 1870, $57,655,675.40; in 1880, $38,116,916.22; in 1881, $40,466,469.55; in 1882, $43,570,494.19; in 1883, $48,911,382.93; in 1884, $39,429,603.36; in 1885, $42,670,578.47.

So that we may put down the actual expenses to the tax-payers of this country of the regular Army at from forty to forty-five million dollars per annum.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that is not the cost of the Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. I mean of the military establishment.

Mr. LOGAN. That includes the expense for dredging, and for all river and harbor improvements, which do not belong to the Army; but the Army is used to expend the money. The cost of the Army establishment is $25,000,000, including West Point, the War Department, and everything connected with the establishment. That is the fact about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am only speaking of our military establishment, what comes under the War Department. Now it is proposed by this bill to increase that total, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says about $6,000,000, and others say different amounts. I have not had the time to estimate what would be the additional expense; but we know that five thousand men would probably cost about one-fifth as much as the present twenty-five thousand soldiers, and two hundred additional officers would cost in the same proportion.

SHALL ARMY OFFICERS CONTROL LEGISLATION FOR THE ARMY?

Now, is there any necessity, any reason why we shall enact this bill increasing the Army and increasing the expenses of the Government and increasing the taxes upon the people? Shall we pass it because the Army officers want it? That has been brought in here as a reason why we shall increase the Army. It is said all the officers of the Army want it. Is that a safe rule for legislation? Shall Congress pass every law that the officers of any particular branch of the service may desire? Suppose we were to pass every bill that the chiefs of divisions here and the employés in the different Departments, the registers and receivers of land offices, and the various officers in the civil employment of the Government want, we should double the expenses of the Government in a very short time.

It is no reason why we should increase the Army because the officers of the Army want it. The Army is a creation of Congress. It does not exist in the executive branch of the Government at all. The Constitution is explicit upon that question. The Constitution provides that—Congress shall have power to raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

Two years is the longest term that even Congress can appropriate money for the support of a regular standing army. A standing army permanently was scarcely contemplated by the Constitution. Congress, further, has power—

To provide and maintain a navy; to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

It is the militia that Congress has the power to call forth to enforce the laws, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasions.

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

No, Mr. President, the officers of the Army may want a large army because they may want their companies large, and their regiments and their brigades large, and the commands under them large; but that is no reason why this increase should be made.

DO OUR RELATIONS WITH THE INDIANS JUSTIFY AN INCREASE OF THE ARMY?

Is there any increase of the Army demanded because of our relations with the Indian tribes? To-day the Indians are more powerless than they have been from the time this country was discovered. I say there is no necessity whatever for an increase of the regular standing Army because of our relations with the Indians. Formerly they roamed from Mexico to Canada. They had an immense area of country; they could commit their depredations upon the frontier, and then they could flee to places of retreat and safety, where they could not be found for weeks and months by the cavalry or any standing force of the United States Army.

How is it to-day? There is not a spot upon American soil where a band of a thousand Indians could secrete itself without being reached within two or three days by the soldiers of the United States Army.

There is no place for them to go; there are no more hunting-grounds for them. They can not roam over that vast area extending from Mexico to Canada, where the buffalo formerly ranged and where they went every year to procure their supplies. That is all changed. We have railroads—the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Kansas Pacific, the Texas Pacific, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, and other roads crossing the continent, and we have cross-roads, and the Indians are upon reservations with railroads and settlements encircling them in every direction, and they are rapidly learning that they can not commit depredations on the whites any more with impunity. We have to-day twice as many men in the standing Army as there is any necessity for in regard to the Indians. There is no necessity for an increase of the standing Army because of the Indians and our relations with them.

ARE OUR DOMESTIC TROUBLES OF SUCH CHARACTER AS TO NECESSITATE AN INCREASE OF THE ARMY?

Mr. President, is there any necessity for an increase of the Army because of domestic trouble? Some Senators have argued that there should be an increase of the Army because of our domestic and internecine strifes and contentions and unsettled condition. This is a very serious question to be propounded to the Senate of the United States and the American people, that because of the existing condition of the dealings and actions of American citizens, the only sovereigns in this great country, there is a necessity for an increase of the regular standing Army.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not expect the insinuation from him at least, that the object of this bill was to strike at any person on account of any contentions now. Does he not know that the law expressly prohibits the use of the Army anywhere in enforcing the law as a posse comitatus? Does he not know that it stands upon the statute-book, passed in 1879 or 1880, I do not remember which?

Mr. COCKRELL. Eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the law to-day. Why should any one say that under the law existing to-day you can use the Army at all as a posse comitatus? There can not be any intention, so far as this bill is concerned, to make use of the Army for any such purpose. I know the Senator does not mean that. He knows the bill has been discussed in the committee over and over again for years, not only to-day but ever since 1880, with the very same provision in it precisely as this, and he knows that no such intimation or thought has ever shown itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think my good friend the distinguished Senator from Illinois is a little oversensitive in regard to our criticism of the arguments that have been advanced to show the necessity for this increase of the Army. I am referring to the speech of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. He must remember that others have spoken in favor of this bill as well as himself. I know he has taken no such position as this; the Senate knows he has taken no such position; but it was distinctly referred to by other Senators, and I am meeting that proposition. I am not saying that the Senator from Illinois is arguing that this bill shall pass for that reason, but other friends of the measure have done so, and it is legitimate to reply to that argument.

Mr. LOGAN. I was only calling the Senator's attention to the fact that the committee that reported the bill certainly are the ones who are responsible for its provisions, and what any one might say or infer certainly should not cast a reflection upon those who reported or were connected with the passing of the bill through the committee where there was no intention of that kind, and it could not be inferred from anything that was said or done.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it is no reflection upon any Senator to meet his argument fairly and squarely. It has been stated here that there was a necessity for this increase because of trouble. It is a legitimate argument to reply to that, and it is no reflection upon the Senator from Illinois. As I say, he seems to think that everything we say is a lick at him, when it is not. I know his views perfectly well. I know he has not argued this bill on that point at all.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is very much mistaken if he thinks I take everything personally. I have no such thought.

Mr. COCKRELL. I mean no criticism of his connection with the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. I am not speaking of myself. I only speak of the provisions of the bill, that there was no such intention. I do not look upon those things as legitimate arguments, and I am very sorry the Senator thinks I do. No matter what other Senators may have said for a purpose, I was in hopes that certainly the Senator from Missouri would not. I have not criticised any one on account of his opposition to the bill. Every Senator has a perfect right to be for or against a measure, and I have no right to criticise the position of any one in that regard.

Mr. COCKRELL. I opposed this bill in committee. I am doing on the Senate floor what I have consistently and persistently done ever since the measure was before the committee and before the Senate, and when I reply to an argument that has been made upon the floor of the Senate as a reason why this bill should pass, it is perfectly legitimate and is no reflection upon the Senator in charge of the bill, who does not entertain the same view as other Senators upon that question.

Mr. President, I ask the question, is there any necessity for any increase of the standing Army because of any domestic condition or trouble? The Senator from Illinois will say no, evidently, from his argument. From what he has already said he will admit that there is no increase needed on that account. Others will not, however; and now let us examine that proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I just stated that the law expressly prohibits the use of the Army as a posse comitatus.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will show that when I come to it.

Mr. LOGAN. Therefore it can not be for a purpose of that character.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will show how the Army can be used. I shall show clearly how, under the Constitution and laws, the regular standing Army can be used, and where the danger of its use is.

The strength and perpetuity of our unequaled systems of government, National and State, rest in and depend upon the respect, confidence, good-will, and patriotism of our people. Under our system of government the people alone are the absolute sovereigns. Mr. Lincoln, in his inaugural on the 4th day of March, 1861, said:

This country with its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it. When they grow weary of the existing Government they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it.

The State governments are the most competent administrations for all our domestic affairs and the surest bulwarks against all anti-republican tendencies. A well-disciplined militia, under control of our respective States, is our best reliance in times of peace.

In every State, in every county, in every parish, will be found honest, peaceful, law-abiding, order-loving, intelligent, patriotic citizens sufficiently numerous and strong to sustain county and State officials in the exercise of the powers and authorities vested in them by State laws—sufficiently numerous and strong to enforce all rights, to redress all wrongs, and to maintain peace and order, and to suppress and quell all unlawful disturbances and combinations, and to protect every citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property. If, by reason of any peculiar conditions which may exist in any one or more counties or localities in any State, the local authorities therein may not at once be able, with the aid of the posse comitatus, to preserve and maintain peace and order and to protect life, liberty, and property, then the whole power and authority of the State can render them all the needed aid.

If the whole power of the State can not quell disturbances, maintain quiet and order and protect life, liberty, and property within its territorial limits, then under the Constitution and existing laws there is an adequate, ample remedy, with even a smaller regular Army than we now have, or even without any regular Army at all.

Mr. President, read section 4, Article IV, of the Constitution of the United States:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

There the Constitution gives express authority to the United States to aid the States, on the application of either the Legislature or the executive, in protecting them against domestic violence, suppressing insurrection, suppressing and quelling riot and resistance to the State authority which the State authorities themselves are not able to overcome. Now look at section 5297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and we shall see that the laws are already sufficient without any increase of the Army:

SEC. 5297. In case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the executive, when the Legislature can not be convened, to call forth—to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States, which may be applied for, as he deems sufficient to suppress such insurrection; or, on like application, to employ, for the same purposes, such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as he deems necessary.

What? The regular Army? Not at all—

The law, however, brings in the militia first, as the first reliance in times of peace. Now I read section 5299:

SEC. 5299. Whenever insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combinations, or conspiracies in any State so obstructs or hinders the execution of the laws thereof, and of the United States, as to deprive any portion or class of the people of such State of any of the rights, privileges, or immunities, or protection, named in the Constitution and secured by the laws for the protection of such rights, privileges, or immunities, and the constituted authorities of such State are unable to protect, or, from any cause, fail in or refuse protection of the people in such rights, such facts shall be deemed a denial by such State of the equal protection of the laws to which they are entitled under the Constitution of the United States; and in all such cases, or whenever any such insurrection, violence, unlawful combination, or conspiracy, opposes or obstructs the laws of the United States, or the due execution thereof, or impedes or obstructs the due course of justice under the same, it shall be lawful for the President, and it shall be his duty, to take such measures, by the employment of the militia or the land and naval forces of the United States, or of either, or by other means, as he may deem necessary, for the suppression of such insurrection, domestic violence, or combinations.

There is an ample remedy under the Constitution and laws as they exist without one solitary regular soldier. But this is not the only remedy already provided. Clause 2 of Article VI of the Constitution says:

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

This gives the courts ample power to enforce all the laws of the United States. We should read section 5298 of the Revised Statutes in connection with that:

SEC. 5298. Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any State or Territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any or all the States, and to employ such parts of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, or to suppress such rebellion, in whatever State or Territory thereof the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed, or the execution thereof forcibly obstructed.

There is ample power given to the President to call forth the entire militia, and that means the able-bodied citizens of the entire United States, to enforce the process of the courts of the United States against any opposition that may be offered to it.

There can, therefore, be no necessity for an increase of the regular Army to maintain order, to preserve the peace, to suppress violence and unlawful combinations, and to protect every citizen of every race, color, and condition in the fullest enjoyment of life, liberty, and property.

Our Government—its very existence and perpetuity—does not depend upon any regular army, large or small, but upon the good-will, confidence, patriotism, and devotion of the great masses of our people. We want no regular army to intimidate or overawe the citizens of this great Republic. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. In monarchies the people enjoy their rights and privileges after protracted struggles with the Crowns, and only such rights and privileges as they have been able to wrest from the Crowns, that claims to rule by Divine right. In such cases the people are much more vigilant and jealous of their rights and liberties, and quickly discern and resent any attempt to encroach upon them.

In this great country, under this grandest and best system of government ever yet devised by the wisdom of sages or attained by the blood of heroes, we are born in the enjoyment of our rights, privileges, and immunities, and may not be so watchful and vigilant of them as in other countries, and may not quickly discern measures which may in the lapse of time be construed and made to deprive us of our liberties.

In this country under our Constitution and system of laws no standing army is needed for any domestic purpose. No standing army is needed in the United States for any other than one of the two purposes, the control of the Indians and to meet foreign foes. These are the only two objects for which any regular standing permanent army of the United States should be maintained. A regular army is dangerous to any republican government. A regular standing permanent army is in direct contravention of a republican system of government. I desire to read just one or two extracts upon this question, and I read from the inaugural address of Andrew Jackson on the 4th of March, 1829:

Considering standing armies as dangerous to free governments in time of peace, I shall not seek to enlarge our present establishment, nor to disregard that salutary lesson of political experience which teaches that the military should be held subordinate to the civil power. The gradual increase of our Navy, whose flag has displayed in distant climes our skill in navigation and our fame in arms; the preservation of our forts, arsenals, and dock-yards; and the introduction of progressive improvements in the discipline and science of both branches of our military service, are so plainly prescribed by prudence, that I should be excused for omitting their mention sooner than enlarging on their importance. But the bulwark of our defense is the national militia, which, in the present state of our intelligence and population, must render us invincible.

If invincible in 1829, how are we in 1886 with a population of over 55,000,000? Then we could put a million of armed soldiers from the various States in the militia organizations into the field; and to-day, if occasion were to demand it, we could put from five to eight or ten million of as good soldiers as ever marched to music on the battlefield.

As long as our Government is administered for the good of the people, and is regulated by their will, as long as it secures to us the rights of person and property, liberty of conscience and of the press, it will be worth defending; and so long as it is worth defending, a patriotic militia will cover it with an impenetrable ægis. Partial injuries and occasional mortifications we may be subjected to, but a million of armed freemen, possessed of the means of war, can never be conquered by a foreign foe.

I read again from Jackson's farewell address on the 3d of March, 1837:

But the Constitution can not be maintained, nor the Union preserved, in opposition to public feelings by the mere exertion of the coercive powers confided to the General Government. The foundations must be laid in the affections of the people; in the security it gives to life, liberty, character, and property in every quarter of the country; and in the fraternal attachments which the citizens of the several States bear to one another as members of one political family mutually contributing to promote the happiness of each other.

If we can not enforce the laws of our various States, then self-government is a failure. If the people of the United States in every State of this Union can not enforce the local laws, and if then the President, having the right to call forth the militia of every State in the Union to back the authorities of the States and aid them, can not maintain order, preserve peace, enforce rights, and redress wrongs, then self-government is a failure. There can be no reason on earth for an increase of the Army because of any apprehended domestic trouble.

DO OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS DEMAND AN INCREASE OF THE ARMY?

Then is there any necessity for an increase of the Army on account of any foreign foe? Why, suppose that to-day, as the Senator from Maine has indicated, we should be precipitated into an armed collision with a foreign foe, what would be the remedy? Under the Constitution and existing laws, and even with a much smaller army than we have, ample power is given. Hear sections 1642, 1643, and 1644 of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

SEC. 1642. Whenever the United States are invaded, or are in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, or to suppress such rebellion, and to issue his orders for that purpose to such officers of the militia as he may think proper.

SEC. 1643. When the militia of more than one State is called into the actual service of the United States by the President, he shall apportion them among such States according to representative population.

SEC. 1644. The militia, when called into the actual service of the United States for the suppression of rebellion against and resistance to the laws of the United States, shall be subject to the same rules and articles of war as the regular troops of the United States.

There is ample authority given. Suppose we should come in contact with the British lion upon the coast of Maine, are not the brave, chivalrous militiamen of Maine, the patriotic citizens of that State, able and organized to come forth as militia under their State officers and repel all the foreign foes that can land upon Maine's soil in the next twelve months. Remember, Mr. President, neither the regular Army nor the militia can go upon the waters and meet the enemy even in armed vessels, We have had some foreign wars. Who did the main fighting? The militia, the volunteer soldiers of the United States. We had the greatest civil war the world has ever beheld. When Americans met Americans upon the ensanguined field, then came the tug of war. It was the volunteer soldiers who fought the war and made a character superior to that enjoyed by the soldiers of any country on earth to-day.

Our great people, isolated as we are, knowing the right from the wrong, and daring always to do the right, conscious of the purity and justness of all our national aspirations, content upon our own public domain, under our own vine and fig tree, coveting nothing which belongs to our neighbors, and on terms of peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, with no national animosities or fancied grievances or wrongs to avenge, absolutely bearing, as a nation, "charity to all and malice toward none," need no standing army to oppose foreign foes or aggressions. There is no possible danger to this great country from any foreign nation. The true, noble, brave, and patriotic people of all our indestructible States, composing our indissoluble Union, the people of the United States of America can successfully resist the combined nations of earth. There is no need for an increase of the Army on account of foreign foes.

We have seen that there is no necessity for the increase because the officers of the Army want it, none because of our relations with the Indians, none because of any domestic troubles, none because of any foreign danger.

DOES THE PUBLIC SENTIMENT OF OUR COUNTRY DEMAND THIS INCREASE?

Is there to-day in public sentiment a demand for this increase of the regular standing Army on the part of the people of the United States? Is this legislation such as they desire? Have they asked for this legislation? Is this in pursuance of any public sentiment among the masses of the American people who bear the burdens of this great Government? I say that you can point to no necessity in the public sentiment of the country. There has been no petition sent here from the tax-paying citizens of this country for an increase of the burdens they bear in supporting a regular Army.

But, Mr. President, is there anything requiring this increase of the Army because of the condition of public sentiment and feeling in the United States requiring this increase in order to inspire respect, confidence, and good-will, or the patriotism of our people toward our systems of government, national and State, or fraternal feelings among our own people? There is no reason for it. To-day there exists among the people of the United States a fraternal feeling which never has existed since the foundation of this Government. There is to-day more perfectly and absolutely fraternal concord, peace, and good-will between the people from the Gulf to the lakes, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, than ever existed before; and to-day there is a stronger sentiment in favor of lawful, peaceful methods and procedures than ever existed in this country before. There may be turbulence, there will be in a great country like this, but the public sentiment of the country will suppress it; and there is no public sentiment to-day demanding the passage of this bill, and there is no reason for it. It will be an unnecessary burden imposed upon the tax-payers; it will be an unnecessary increase of the regular standing Army. It will take over five thousand able-bodied American citizens from the walks of civil life where they are adding to the wealth, the grandeur, and the glory of this great country, and it will place them upon the shoulders of the balance of the people of the United States as consumers of their earnings, as burdens, costing probably from $750 to $1,000 apiece for every one added to the Army in all the expenditures—I count the officers, too—in all the expenditures that may be made for them, not their wages alone, but the expenditures for clothing, subsistence, medical attendance, quartermaster and commissary supplies, transportation of troops, and the other thousand expenses which are necessary for the support and maintenance of officers and soldiers.

Mr. President, with these views and feelings I can not consistently or conscientiously vote for this bill. I have opposed it in committee always from the beginning to the end. I am opposed to any increase of the regular standing Army upon any principle.

The measure proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], which is to make the infantry arm of the service three-battalion regiments, is a good measure in itself, but it is an increase of the standing Army. I will favor that measure if you will consolidate the existing regiments until you can have each one that is left in the consolidation having twelve companies of soldiers.

What does this country need? It needs a small, compact military organization, simply that we may have a few men along the borders of our country, that we may have a few soldiers near the Indian reservations until the Indians become more civilized, and that is all the use in the world we have for them. The Army should be compact; the companies should not be less than seventy men, while now we have less than fifty. We have an officer to about every eleven men. There ought not to be a commissioned officer to less than from fifteen to eighteen men. If we had that kind of an army, a small compact army, each regiment with twelve companies and each company with not less than seventy privates, then we should have the best military organization that has yet been suggested by the experience of war and the wisdom of soldiers. I would vote for that kind of a proposition, but never for any proposition to increase the officers of the Army or the soldiers of the regular Army, and thereby increase the annual expenditure from the public Treasury and the burdens the people bear.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I simply wish to call attention to some statements made in connection with this bill which are to my mind extravagant in their character.

The Military Committee reported this bill at this time because it had been under consideration for some period and had had a very full and free discussion, and had many items of merit in it besides the section which increases the Army five thousand men. I believe in that increase. I believe in it on an economical basis. I believe in it because I think that where you have so much money invested in the present plant, twenty-five thousand men, divided into twenty-five infantry regiments, ten cavalry regiments, and five artillery regiments, in order to make the force efficient they ought to have, at a small additional expenditure, additional enlisted men.

The organization at present is full in officers, full in everything that would make it an army in the field. The expense of the post, the expense of the staff corps, the quartermasters, commissaries, adjutant-general, &c., is full in every sense; but when you come down to parade the enlisted men at the different posts you find a very meager number. You find that the details for the ordinary routine duties of the camp and the post and the march, taking men for the quartermaster and the commissary departments and for the ambulances and the details for hospitals, besides the sick, so reduce the numbers that when you parade your three or four companies at a post on the ordinary duty required of them, or when they are ordered out on scout, you see a miserable, meager little company of ten or fifteen men with a couple of officers. You have but twenty-five thousand men in all now. You have all these details which reduce them down to this number, and by a little additional expense of not over 10 per cent. you would increase the efficiency of the companies at the various posts at least 40 per cent. over what it is at the present time.

The expenditure of the Army establishment for the past year is between twenty-five and twenty-six million dollars. The private soldier receives $13 a month, a pay of $156 a year. The average of his subsistence amounts to about 30 cents a day for his rations, or $9 a month, which is $108. His clothing allowance is $3 per month, which amounts to $36. Thus the cost to the Government to-day of a private soldier or enlisted man is $300 per annum.

Now, Mr. President, I deny that it is possible that the statements made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] can be correct that the additional force proposed in this bill would add the additional expense it is calculated a soldier costs now by simply dividing the number of soldiers into the amount of money the whole Army costs. Of that expenditure of twenty-five or twenty-six million dollars the Senator from Kansas arrives at a thousand dollars cost per man per annum by simply dividing the twenty-five thousand into the $25,000,000. There is paid to the Army $12,276,000, and of that amount the pay of officers takes $5,226,730; the pay of officers on the retired-list takes $1,113,352. So that the pay of the enlisted men of the Army takes less than $6,000,000 per annum.

The only additional item of cost that would be added to the Army over and above the $300 per annum for each soldier by the proposed addition made in this bill of five thousand men would be the transportation to the posts, and I venture to assert that that would be very much more than offset by the reduction of the transportation charges for the movement of the men from one station to another to meet the Indian raids on the frontier, and, in fact, I think the general transportation, which is now over $3,000,000 a year, would be very materially reduced.

There would be in addition proposed by the bill the increased pay of men, $1,600,000, and for the increased allowance to non-commissioned officers of three or four dollars a month, about $800,000. So that the bill in that respect would increased the expenditures of the Army in round numbers $2,500,000 per annum.

The troops are now spread out from one end of this country to the other, from Maine to Texas, and from Texas to Oregon and Washington Territory, and are located at one hundred and nineteen different posts. I would say in addition that there are a number of posts with not even a man at them, posts along the seacoast, that are comparatively unmanned, though they have guns. The posts run from forty to six hundred or seven hundred men, the largest post in the Army being Fort Leavenworth, in Kansas.

By that division of twenty-five thousand men spread out over such a space, covering one hundred and nineteen posts, you reduce the efficiency to such an extent that, as I said, when you come to parade your men you have a very meager show. A few days ago I was down at Fortress Monroe, that grand old post which used to be the pride of the Army before the war and which in time of war would require a garrison of, say, six thousand men, and five companies were there. I witnessed their parade one Sunday afternoon and I saw about fifteen to twenty men to a company. There is a fortress mounting three hundred or four hundred guns, half of which are now dismounted, and the others entirely obsolete, and while the fort itself is in a good state of preservation, there is not absolutely enough of a garrison there to keep the grounds in order.

This is the state of affairs you will find from one end of the seacoast to the other, and many of the best posts not occupied at all.

Right opposite Fortress Monroe is Fort Wool, one of the strongest forts on the Atlantic coast, created for the purpose of the protection of the Chesapeake Bay. That is perfectly silent, deserted, not even a man to haul up the flag. So you will see it all along the Atlantic coast. The Army of twenty-five thousand men, taking the extent of our territory, taking our northern boundary and our seacoast line, our Gulf line and the line of the Rio Grande and the Gulf of California and the Pacific, would hardly furnish a man as an outpost within sight of each other to surround the whole country.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who is now absent, endeavored to create the impression that the Army was being increased for some special object. I know what my vote in the Military Committee was based upon, and it was certainly on getting a better state of efficiency in the Army. I believe that the increase of a few men would be the proper thing to do, would be what I should do in any other branch of life. If I wanted to increase the efficiency of even a business project I would be willing to put more money into it. I believe that by the addition of five thousand men you will increase the efficiency of the Army 40 per cent.

The Senator also desired to create the impression that there were a great many troops in Washington, in New York, all along the seashore; that it was a mere holiday procession, that they had nothing to do, that the Army was useless anyhow. Now there are on the whole Atlantic seaboard, from the northern part of Maine around to Florida and in the Gulf, two thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine officers and men, and a large proportion of these are there because they belong to the staff corps at the arsenals, &c. There are in the Department of the Missouri, where our Territories are and where the Indian is, fifteen thousand three hundred and thirty-six officers and men, many of whom, during the service of their enlistment and during the term the officers are assigned to duty at posts in that department, never see Washington and never see their homes in the East. You may find a few Army officers in Washington, but if you are going to hunt them down, as I have on former occasions as a member of the Military Committee, you will find them, as I found them, all under orders, attending to their business, and very few, if any of them, here for rest. Thus the largest part of this Army, three-fourths of it, is located where they are required, near the Indian reservations, and guarding the different posts on our frontier lines.

A good deal of stress has been laid on the pay of officers of the Army, particularly by the Senator from Kansas. A second lieutenant in the Army, having received an ordinary, fair academic education, going to West Point, studying four years, and certainly getting a very high-class education, enters the corps as second lieutenant, and he receives $1,400 a year—not as much as the doorkeeper at that door, not anywhere as much as the clerk of a committee of this body. He spends probably eight years as second lieutenant and he becomes a first lieutenant, when he gets $150 a year more. In twenty years he may be a captain, when he gets up to $2,000. I submit that for a gentleman who will devote himself to a service like this, take himself away from his family, devote his whole lifetime to his profession, the pay is not near, nay, it is not half, what the same amount of talent, the same amount of energy, the same amount of application would receive in the ordinary business walks of life. Many of these officers who have been twenty and twenty-five years in the service, receiving $2,000 or $2,500 a year, could quadruple it if they were pursuing other avocations.

Mr. President, there are many features in this bill that are of great interest to the Army and that add very greatly to its efficiency in addition to the section to which I have referred.

The first section proposes a field-officers' court for minor offenses at post, which now takes the time of a large number of officers on detail as members of courts-martial. We have in the Army the astonishing state of affairs that in an Army of 25,000 men there were by regimental courts-martial tried 11,851 persons last year, and by general courts-martial 2,528, making trials by courts-martial 14,179 in an army of 25,000 men. There is some reason for this, and it has been the feeling and the desire of the Military Committee to find out why it was that with a small army of 25,000 men we should find the necessity in one year to try over 14,000 men by court-martial.

There are many reasons for it. One is that in this country the pay of the private soldier is not in proportion to what the same man would earn in business—$13 a month and clothing and allowance, amounting to $300 per annum, as I stated, but he serves at a point where other pay is very much higher, and it has been the habit of men who enlist and go West near mining camps where they could get from five to ten dollars a day to desert. That has been one reason. Another reason has been that the discipline of the service is not what they expected, that they expected to be soldiers, and drill and dress up, look clean and bright, and when they got to their posts they found they became practically laboring men. If there was not a quartermaster's corps to do the work, they had to put up quarters, build huts, cut wood, &c., so that there was very little soldier life for them. So in enlisting in the Army they simply became laborers for the Government at a pay of $13 a month. The committee concluded that some other mode of punishment ought to be invented besides that cumbersome one of court-martial that took so many officers to carry it out, and they concluded to report this section, under which the second in command becomes a sort of committing magistrate at a military post and relieves the necessity of a court-martial if his action should be approved by the commanding officer. During the war we had a trial of this and it worked very well, indeed. It was perfectly satisfactory, so that it was adopted throughout all the armies.

As I remarked, one of the difficulties that we found was the pay to the private soldiers and non-commissioned officers. It was thought desirable to increase this pay, and the committee agreed on $3 per month additional, with an addition to the non-commissioned officers of a larger amount in some instances.

Section 4 provides:

That officers of the Army stationed at military posts apart from settlements may, with the approval of the department commander, each employ one private soldier as a servant.

It is against the law to do this in the service now; but the law is evaded, and I think Congress had better legalize the actual practice. In some of the posts that are so far away practically from civilization, and particularly those that are near mining camps, it is impossible to get a servant at any reasonable price or at all. An officer's pay in many instances would not pay for the hire of a servant. I do not think the Government of the United States should have an officer in its service who is not assisted in the ordinary duties of camp life by a servant. When a soldier is used as a servant the sum of $20 a month is authorized to be deducted from the officer's compensation, which is more than the pay proper of the soldier, and he still remains a soldier of his company, subject to the order of its captain. The Government does not lose his services. He is liable to be put on guard duty and always liable for service when the company is ordered on the march.

Section 5 provides:

That officers serving away from their stations as members or judge-advocates of courts-martial or courts of inquiry, or as members of military boards, shall receive a per diem allowance of $2.50.

That was looked upon by the committee as just and fair and right. When what is termed "extra duty" takes an officer away from his mess, where his expenses go on, it was thought that $2.50 a day would pay in part the expenses of his hotel bill in addition to the ordinary mess charges.

Section 6 relates to the employment of "civilian clerks in place of the general-service clerks now authorized for such employment, at rates of compensation not to exceed those paid to other civilian clerks employed at such headquarters." The Senator from Kansas instanced this as one of the great errors of the bill from which there would be a great increase in the expenditure. The clause itself provides that the expense shall be no more than that now existing.

Section 8 provides:

That officers of the line, except regimental quartermasters, detailed for duty as acting assistant quartermasters shall be allowed the same additional compensation as is now allowed by law to acting commissaries of subsistence.

The present law allows an officer detailed as acting commissary of subsistence $10 a month extra pay, and that is extended to regimental quartermasters. There is every reason why this should be done. If you take an officer of the line away from his company and make him responsible for a large amount of material and a large amount of money, for which he has got to give bond, there is no reason why the Government should not make him a small additional compensation for that additional service and additional risk.

Section 9 provides:

That fuel in kind only shall be issued to the officers of the Army, without cost, by the Quartermaster's Department, in quantities as prescribed by the Army Regulations and general orders.

This is going back to the state of affairs which existed a few years ago and which was changed by some enterprising Senator in an appropriation bill, if I remember aright. Some of our distinguished friends here, who assume to know all about regulating the Army, are not satisfied to have it done by an ordinary act of Congress, which is discussed and which is made palpable to everybody, but carry out their views by putting a line or two in an appropriation bill and thereby upset the legislation of a committee that is particularly well organized to frame it.

The injustice of the present mode of issuing fuel is that there is no distinction between a hot climate and a cold climate. A young officer, or an old one for that matter, in Montana with the thermometer 40° below zero can buy just so much fuel from the Government at $3 a cord, probably 2 or 3 cords a month; and if he wants any more, which he will in that climate, he has got to give $10 or $15 a cord for it, or go without it entirely and freeze. If the Government sends officers to places or establishes posts, which they must necessarily do and will have to do, in a climate of that kind, it certainly ought to furnish enough fuel to keep the officers warm.

Section 13 provides:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to cause the enlistment of competent instructors for post schools, who shall have the rank and pay of ordnance-sergeants.

Ordnance-sergeants get $34 per month, amounting with their rations and clothing to $50 or $60 a month. It was supposed that that section would commend itself heartily to a Senate which passed a bill giving $77,000,000 for the education of colored people in the South. A large number of the posts are established at points where there are no schools and where around the post grows a little settlement—the quartermasters, commissaries, a few Indians, and all that—and there is an absolute necessity that there should be somebody whose business it is to teach the children, as much or more so than the men, in my opinion. It was not intended, according to my view, as a school for soldiers; it was intended for the children of the officers, of the men, of the employés, of the Indians, and of everybody about the posts; and in that sense it seems to me it is as much worthy of an appropriation from Congress to keep it up as any educational matter can be.

As to the section which refers to the inspection of the pay accounts by a paymaster, I should be in favor of amending that myself, and I ask the Senator from Illinois to so amend that section as to provide that that inspection shall be an additional one to the present inspection of the Inspector-General's Department.

Mr. President, this bill has received fair consideration by the Military Committee. It was not a thing of a day or a month. It is the same bill which we brought before the Senate last year. It was here last year reported by the committee favorably. It is not an increase of the Army that is gotten up to meet any present emergency; it was gotten up solely for what we consider the best interests of the service.

In this connection I should like to say that from my own observation—I very seldom speak, but I listen to a great deal that is going on—the work of the Military Committee has as little appreciation before this body as the work of any committee in it. It is a laborious office. It has as many or more bills probably referred to it than any other committee of the body except the Pension Committee. It gives a great deal of attention to the measures that it reports. It is composed of gentlemen who, if they are not, ought to be familiar with the subjects they act upon. There is probably no committee of this body, except the great committee that gives laws to the nation, which is so well constituted to act on the measures that are brought before it as the Committee on Military Affairs. Four-fifths of the members of that committee have held the rank of general officers in actual service and in opposition to each other. There is not an item about a soldier's equipment, either in quarters or on march, that is not familiar to them. They have seen it, handled it, and used it, and know.

It is not so with all the committees of the Senate. With so many gentlemen belonging to the legal profession here a great many of them are not familiar with the matters with which they deal; but when the Military Committee bring forward a measure of this kind, while of course every Senator has a right to be the judge of his own actions, and particularly with reference to the matter of the desirability of the increase of the Army, it seems to me that the recommendation of the Military Committee ought in all matters pertaining to the details of the Army to command the full respect of this body.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, my wish is not to detain the Senate unnecessarily, as it does seem to me that this bill has been sufficiently discussed. I would not utter one word or sentence further were it not for the fact that I am satisfied I can show from the records and the reports made by those in authority and who have a knowledge as to the expenses of the Army, as well as to its organization and that which pertains to it, the benefits of this bill so clearly that the mist or fog that has been thrown around it by those who seem to know more about the Army than those who have been and are now in command of it will disappear. And I will show that Senators with all their knowledge have been unfortunate in their statements both in reference to the organization and the expense of the Army.

I will commence with the statement made by the Adjutant-General of the Army in answer to one insinuation made by a Senator who is opposed to this bill. In substance his statement was that many of the officers of the Army were absent at all times from their commands and were not performing duty, but were merely parading around this city. I may not use his words but that was clearly the inference.

Let me give the statement of the Adjutant-General so as take up seriatim the different objections which have been made and see upon what they are founded.

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Number authorized by law	2,178
Number actually in service	2,131
Number of vacancies	47
Number on duty with their regiments or corps	1,781
Number on duty at colleges	39

It will be observed that on all the duties mentioned in this list the officers are acting under positive statutes. The detail of thirty-nine officers to various colleges was made under a statute requiring the Secretary of War to make them for the benefit of the youth at the colleges, that they may be taught something of military discipline and movement.

Number on duty at the Military Academy	57

That is in accordance with law.

Number on recruiting service	51

That is under the statute.

Number on other detached duty	61

That is by law.

Number on ordinary leave of absence	58
Number on sick leave	50
Number incapacitated for duty	31
Number without leave	1
Number awaiting orders	2
Total	2,131

So, sir, you will find from this statement that all are acting under lawful authority.

Let us see whether the statement made by Senators in reference to the number of officers who were exhibiting their tinsel around Washington city is correct:

Officers on detached duty in Washington, D. C., not connected with the bureaus of the War Department:

Maj. William Ludlow, Corps of Engineers, engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia.

He was appointed by the President of the United States to that office by virtue of law.

Capt. F. A. Mahan, Corps of Engineers, assistant to the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia.

By order of the Secretary of War.

First Lieut. C. McD. Townsend, Corps of Engineers, assistant to the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Capt. C. E. Dutton, Ordnance Department, on duty in the office of the United States Geological Surveys.

He was detailed by virtue of the laws of the United States and by order of the Secretary of War.

Capt. S. E. Blunt, Ordnance Department, lieutenant-colonel and aid-de-camp to the Lieutenant-General, and inspector of rifle practice.

Under the law.

Capt. S. E. Kellogg, Fifth Cavalry, lieutenant-colonel and aid-de-camp to the Lieutenant-General.

By virtue of the law.

First Lieut. W. P. Duvall, Fifth Artillery, on duty in connection with the Army Mutual Aid Association.

Second Lieut. H. T. Allen, Second Cavalry, preparing his report upon explorations in Alaska.

Now take that report from the Adjutant-General and you will find that every officer in the city of Washington is here under orders and by virtue of the statutes of the United States. That being true, I desire to know why it is that those officers should be accused of exhibiting their tinsel and parading around Washington city without authority of law. So then that statement falls without facts to sustain it.

I desire now to call the attention of the Senate, for I may not have an opportunity of doing so later on, to one or two of the objections which have been made to this bill by the Senator from Kansas in his argument to-day. One of his objections was that officers detailed as assistant quartermasters and commissaries were to receive $10 per month for the extra service. I have the best of authority for this recommendation in the bill. Let me read from a report made to the Congress of the United States on the 12th day of December, 1875. In the bill reported then I find a provision "providing that these officers when detailed on this duty by the post commanders should receive $10 per month."

Another objection was made by the Senator that, as he said wood cost $200,000 to the Government of the United States, because it was to be issued in kind and not to be paid for by the cord so much for each officer. In 1870, in the reorganization of the Army, a statute was passed providing for the issuance of fuel and quarters in kind to the officers and soldiers of the Army. A committee was appointed in 1875 by the Congress of the United States, a portion representing the Senate and a portion representing the House of Representatives, and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the language of their report. In that report they say:

> That fuel be issued in kind within given amounts, but that all surplus fuel shall belong to, and at stated periods be turned into the Quartermaster's Department; and that under no circumstances shall commutation be allowed.

Now, Mr. President, who signed that report in favor of the same provision that is in this bill and is so fiercely assailed by the Senator from Kansas?

Here are the names:

A. E. Burnside—

An honorable and noble patriot.

P. B. PLUMB—

The Senator from Kansas recommending the very proposition that I have incorporated in this bill which he now so bitterly opposes. The remainder of the joint committee were:

M. C. Butler, H. B. Banning, G. G. Dibbrell, H. B. Strait, Harry White—

A joint committee on the part of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Has the Senator from Kansas so soon forgotten what he conceived to be right then? And does he believe that recommendation wrong now? If I follow his recommendation then he opposes. I suppose new light has broken in upon his judgment since his report.

Let me go a little further. He says that the increase in the Army proposed by the bill would embarrass the Government by an immense expenditure, so much so that it would be considered extravagant on our part, and therefore should not be thought of or recommended. We have recommended five thousand additional private soldiers, it is true, and at the same time I, following in the wake of the Senator from Kansas, have followed the recommendations of the General of the Army, the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and Secretaries of War in what? In recommending that the organization shall be so perfected that the infantry arm of the service shall be in character the same as the artillery and cavalry arm of the service—that is to say, that there shall be three battalions and twelve companies in each regiment. This proposition is not in the bill, but I argued in favor of it because I thought it was the best organization for the Army of the United States.

Let me read from the same able report of the Senator from Kansas on this subject:

That each regiment of the line shall consist of four battalions.

He goes us four companies better! We say three battalions, but he says four—that is to say, four battalions with three majors. He has four battalions with three majors, and one battalion not to be organized, but to be kept for the purpose of forts, &c., I suppose, to be organized when a necessity arises. That was the report of the committee. Eighteen regiments of infantry was the proposition, with four battalions in each regiment. Now count. Let any man take a pencil and make the calculation. Take fifty soldiers to a company, and take four battalions, making sixteen companies to a regiment instead of ten, as in the service to-day, and make your calculation and see which is the more extravagant.

The proposition reported by General Burnside and signed by the Senator from Kansas increased the Army more than we propose now to increase it, if the companies were then made up to what they reported in favor of doing—seventy-five men to each company, with the power of the President to increase to a hundred. The law now is fifty men to the company, with the power of the President in times of emergency to increase it to a hundred; but those Senators reported in favor of seventy-five men to a company. Make your calculation, sixteen companies to the regiment, eighteen regiments, and you will find that their proposition exceeded the proposition which is found in the bill now before the Senate.

Let me ask, Mr. President, how is it that a proposition of this kind when reported by those Senators was a proper one but now fraught with such evils that it strikes terror even to the minds and souls of some Senators who seem to have charge of the entire interests of the country. This same committee reported a bill to Congress then. Let me read some of its provisions. What did they propose?

SEC. 15. That one battery of each artillery regiment shall be habitually equipped as light artillery and as a school of instruction for the regiment, and may have two additional sergeants and four corporals, and enough privates to complete the battery organization; and whenever the President deems it necessary he may direct that additional batteries be equipped as light artillery. The instruction light battery of each regiment shall be under the command of one of the majors of the regiment, and the captains and lieutenants shall be detailed for duty with it, according to the roster and under the direction of the commanding general of the Army.

SEC. 16. That the corps of cavalry shall consist of eight regiments. Each regiment shall consist of four battalions.

Now mark the language—

Each regiment shall consist of four battalions, of four troops each, and shal have one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, three majors, one chaplain, twelve captains, twenty-four first lieutenants, &c.

We find in the very bill introduced by that committee, that they proposed the whole organization of the Army should be sixteen companies to a regiment, and that a regiment should have three majors each. The very proposition which has been made on this floor by other Senators has been denounced, criticised, and opposed by the very men, or one of the very men, who made the proposition to Congress a few years ago to do the same thing. Was there any necessity then? How is it that those men then found that to be the correct organization of the Army but now say it would be a failure if it was passed in this particular bill at present? Then the bill which they proposed provided:

SEC. 17. That each troop of cavalry shall, in addition to its proper officers, consist of one orderly sergeant, four sergeants, four corporals, two artificers, two musicians, and, except as hereinafter directed, of not exceeding seventy privates.

SEC. 19. That each company of infantry shall, in addition to its proper officers, consist of one orderly sergeant, four sergeants, four corporals, two artificers, two musicians, and, except as hereinafter directed, of not less than seventy-five privates.

"Of not less than seventy-five privates." There is a proposition of sixteen companies to the regiment, and eighteen regiments, with not less than seventy-five privates, besides the officers, and in an exigency the President might increase the companies to one hundred.

I have been surprised, I must confess, in listening to the debate here, with this book on my table, and with the knowledge I had of that report and of the bill then introduced.

Mr. President, I wish to state this case fairly, and for that purpose I desire to call the attention of Senators to the different recommendations which have been made at different times in the direction in which this bill attempts to travel, and in consonance and harmony with its advocacy.

Let us examine the organization of the Army from the time of the conclusion of the late war and see what have been the different views of officers in reference to it from that time to the present. By the act of July 28, 1866, the peace establishment was fixed, and to an appropriation bill passed March 3, 1869, there was attached a clause as follows:

That there shall be no new commissions, no promotions, and no enlistments in any infantry regiment until the total number of infantry regiments is reduced to twenty-five.

By the same act the period for enlistment was changed from three to five years, but at that date all the enlisted men of infantry were in for three years, beginning mostly in 1866 and 1867.

By the act of 1869 the present infantry organization, that is to say, the establishment at twenty-five regiments, was made. The number of men has varied at different times in the twenty-five regiments according to legislation. I read now from the report of the Secretary of War of November 20, 1869:

By the present organization of the Army the artillery and cavalry have, to each regiment, one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, three majors, and twelve companies, whereas the infantry regiments have one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, one major, and ten companies. I am satisfied that all regiments should have the same organization, namely, one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, two majors, and twelve companies, for this organization admits of a subdivision into three battalions of four companies each, commanded by a lieutenant-colonel or major. Moreover, the artillery companies have each two first lieutenants, whereas the cavalry and infantry have but one.

I desire to follow the organization with recommendations from the time Congress brought it down to the existing condition and to show that every man connected with the Army, either as Secretary of War, with one exception, or as General or Lieutenant-General of the Army, has made invariably the same recommendations.

Ah, but my friend from Missouri says these are mere requests of officers, mere suggestions of officers. If men connected with the Army do not understand the organization that it now has, or how the organization would be benefitted, I should like the Senator from Missouri to tell me where our information is to come from. If you inquire about the amount of circulation of the national banks in this country where do you go for the information? To the Secretary of the Treasury. If you inquire about the Army where do you go? To the Secretary of War and the general commanding the Army, to those having to deal with the subject. I know of no other way of obtaining information as to numbers in the Army, as to its location, as to where it is doing duty, as to what character of duty it is performing and who is performing it, how many officers are on detail, how many are with their companies, with their regiments, at their posts. I have no means of obtaining that information save through the Department which has control of the Army, and if I were to inquire what number of men would be best in order to constitute an efficient army, an efficient battalion, regiment, brigade, or division, it seems to me that those who have charge and who deal with the different organizations day after day should at least know as much about them as those who do not deal with them.

In the same report the Secretary of War says:

I herewith submit a table showing the organization as proposed; and assuming the number of regiments to remain unchanged (namely, forty)—

At that time. The law was passed authorizing the reduction to twenty-five regiments of infantry, ten of cavalry, and five of artillery, forty regiments in all—and allowing a maximum of seventy-five privates to each company, it would give us for the line of the Army twenty-one hundred and thirty-five commissioned officers and forty-two thousand four hundred and ninety men.

That was the organization then proposed. That was on an appropriation bill afterward reduced, as I have said.

It is well known that no army can be kept up to its legal standard, and that two-thirds is as large a proportion as can be relied on for actual service. Applying this ratio, we will have for actual service about twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and fifty officers and men—a number that no one acquainted with the subject can declare to be above the necessities of the country.

I desire to call the attention of Senators to the fact that on a careful examination by the General of the Army and by the Secretary of War, when we had forty thousand men in the Army, they then decided that no more than two-thirds of the Army could be fit for duty or relied upon. Why? It might be well right here to call the attention of Senators to some matters that perhaps have escaped their notice. The Senator from Missouri, well versed in military affairs, spoke about needing no Army. I shall not discuss that proposition at this time. It is so novel that I will not now stop to reply to it.

But suppose you have twenty-five thousand men to-day in your Army, you never will have twenty-two thousand ready for duty. Suppose you order that twenty-two thousand men to congregate at any one point, at two points, or three points; you have one hundred and nineteen posts. Let me ask those Senators who are so alarmed at the extra expense, what will you do with your one hundred and nineteen posts, with millions of dollars' worth of property, being protected and guarded to-day by your soldiers? Do you propose to remove every officer and every soldier away from those one hundred and nineteen posts and leave the property of the Government there to be sacrificed by marauders, by Indians, or by any other class of people who might desire to profit by taking Government property? Is that what you propose? When you move your Army to the coast, if necessity requires, will you leave with your one hundred and nineteen posts less than a company at a post? Do you propose to guard a fortification or a post with less than a small company of men against Indians or anybody else who might desire to assault it? If you do that, how much of an Army have you that you can throw together as a movable force, either to protect your border or to defend against assault, come from where it may?

When Senators talk about this Army of twenty-five thousand men for service they certainly have not examined the question; they certainly do not understand that all the property of the Government has to be protected, no matter whether in time of war or in peace. If you undertake to move your Army you can only move a certain portion of it. The General of the Army and the Secretary of War in 1869 said that of forty thousand men twenty-nine thousand effective men were all they could rely on. Why? They took into consideration the sick, the details for other service, and those who should be left to garrison forts or posts and protect the property of the Government within those garrisons when the Army was to be moved for defensive purposes. So when these Senators are speaking of an Army of twenty-five thousand men moving I do not think they have ever moved very many men, or they would not say what they do.

Let me take the report of the Secretary of War of 1871. In 1871 we came under another act of Congress, an act passed the 15th of July, 1870. That act of Congress was also a proviso upon an appropriation bill. The Secretary of War said:

In accordance with the same act the number of enlisted men was on July 1 reduced to thirty thousand; indifferent soldiers were discharged, the standard of recruits was raised with a view to improving the character of the rank and file, and the following table of organization was established:

Enlisted men of engineers	301
Enlisted men of ordnance	475
Ordnance sergeants at posts	200
Military Academy band	24
60 enlisted men per company for 55 companies artillery	3,300
84 enlisted men per battery for 5 batteries light artillery	420
84 enlisted men per company for 120 companies cavalry	10,080
60 enlisted men per company for 250 companies infantry	15,000
Non-commissioned staff of regiments	200

Making thirty thousand men all told. That in the establishment created in 1870 thirty thousand men including the engineer battalion, including the men employed in the Ordnance Department, including details, including officers of the line, including bands, &c.; and so to-day the Army includes all the men of every service to make up twenty-five thousand or twenty-three thousand. So in 1870 the organization was brought down to thirty thousand men.

I do not wish to skip about and, therefore, I will proceed on this line. I find many things connected with this bill which I have marked here and which I shall read hereafter. I desire to read from the report of the Secretary of War made in 1874.

I now read from the report of the Secretary of War for 1874, as follows:

In the act making appropriations for the support of the Army approved June 16, 1874, $105,000 was allowed for recruiting purposes, and it was provided that "no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts."

There we get the incorporation of this particular provision for the Army reducing it to twenty-five thousand.

The Secretary of War says:

This prohibition fell in an unfortunate time and manner. The demands for the service of United States troops have been increased, and have been imperative for Indian and other service ever since the adjournment of Congress; serious consequences might easily have attended the manifest want of any considerable reliable force. There was no margin for emergencies, such as have arisen in connection with Indian Affairs and the troubles in the South. I was opposed to the reduction at the time it was made, and have since had no reason to change the opinion then formed. The reduced appropriations for Army purposes have been too heavily taxed by the necessity of movement of troops; for, when obliged to be scattered at points on sudden emergencies, they have been moved from other points where their presence was needed, and had to be returned at the earliest possible moment. The reduction proposed and insisted on by Congress would, when it was accomplished, save alone—save alone the pay, subsistence, and clothing of five thousand men.

Now mark the language—

Why did he say that? We desire to increase the Army five thousand, and insist that the expense will be their pay, their clothing, and their subsistence. We are mistaken in our estimates.

But this amount can not all be considered as having been saved, for when troops were needed at points where the force was found, in consequence of the reduction, to be too small for real service, other troops from other points were required to be transported at an expense almost large enough to equal in amount the saving from the sources named.

After you had reduced the Army from thirty thousand down to twenty-five thousand, the Secretary of War says you have saved what? You have only saved the pay, subsistence, and clothing, and that the expense incident to that reduction on account of having to move troops from places farther away has been equal to the amount saved by Congress. So this is in the same direction that I argued a few days since. If you have troops enough you may have large forces near the lines of transportation, and can throw them together much more easily and at much less expense than where they are scattered all over the country and you have to draw them in from all parts of the land. There is not a man conversant with military affairs in the Army of the United States to-day who will not give you this same opinion.

If the Army is increased five thousand soldiers, their pay, subsistence, clothing, and the other incidental expenses connected with those men would not be as much as the saving to the Government of throwing larger bodies together at convenient places. The General of the Army and the Secretary of War will say the same.

I suppose Senators who insist that this is merely the desire of officers of the Army that they may have larger commands will not attribute the same feeling perhaps to those men who are retired. General Sherman, who is a retired officer, will say the same thing. He has no interest in having the Army increased on account of increasing his command.

Go to the Quartermaster-General, go to any of the men who have the moving of troops, as the Quartermaster-General, and ask him the question whether when troops are in larger bodies they are not more easily moved and at less expense than when scattered or in smaller bodies and you have to concentrate and move them one company or two companies at a time, as they may be thrown together.

I desire to read from the report of the Secretary of War for 1876. I do this, sir, because it was asserted that I could find no one in authority who was either recommending or demanding in any way whatever this increase in the Army at any time. I have gone back to 1869, and propose to follow the proposition to the present time. The Secretary of War said on the 20th of November, 1876:

It is unnecessary to speak here of the size or organization of the Army, for the whole subject of reform and reorganization of the Army has been referred by the act of July 24, 1876, to a commission consisting of two members from each House of Congress, the Secretary of War, and two officers of the Army.

That was after the committee of 1875, of which I spoke a while ago, of which our friend the Senator from Kansas was a member, was organized to report a bill, which they did. Then in 1876 there was another commission made up by Congress and the officers of the Army for that purpose. They made their report, and their report was not adopted at that time.

Now, let me call attention to the report of the Secretary of War, of November 19, 1877:

In accordance with the terms of the act of Congress of August 15, 1876, the Army was reduced to a maximum of twenty-five thousand men. The same act requiring that no reduction be made in the cavalry, it was found necessary to reduce the other arms of the service to very scant dimensions. By General Orders No. 47, of date May 9, 1877, the maximum strength of all organizations, except cavalry, was fixed as follows:

Enlisted men of engineers	200
Enlisted men of ordnance	350
Ordnance sergeants at posts	114
Commissary sergeants at posts	148
Hospital stewards	200
West Point detachments	200
Recruiting parties	300
Indian scouts	600
Guard at military prison	74
65 enlisted men per battery for 5 light batteries of artillery	325
48 enlisted men per battery for 5 batteries at the artillery school	240
38 enlisted men per battery for 50 batteries of artillery and 5 enlisted men for non-commissioned staff at each of 5 regimental headquarters of artillery	1,925
37 enlisted men per company for 250 companies of infantry and 5 for non-commissioned staff at each of 25 regimental headquarters of infantry	9,375

You see, when the reduction had to be made and was made finally on account of Indian troubles, it was provided that the reduction should not be made in the cavalry, but must be made in the other arms of the service. What condition were your companies left in? Thirty-seven men to a company of infantry, and thirty-eight to a battery. That was the condition of your Army under the workmanship of your Appropriation Committees. The Committee on Military Affairs were not consulted, nor are men now willing that they shall be. Your distribution of the Army then amounted to thirty-seven in a company all told. Then on account of casualties, sickness, and other causes, as the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] has well said, you find now fifteen or twenty men in your companies at the different posts. The Secretary of War, in the same report, goes on and says:

In ordinary times our forces are necessarily scattered over a vast territory, engaged in guarding the frontiers or protecting and preserving our vast and valuable military stores and property. The necessary consequence is that when hostilities occur in any portion of the country it becomes necessary to transport troops from distant places to meet them. For example, when the recent Indian hostilities broke out in Idaho the available force under General McDowell was so inadequate that it was necessary to transport the Second Infantry from Atlanta, Ga., to the scene of the disturbance.

Will the Senator tell me when our troops are scattered, where the companies are so small and your numbers in the Army are so limited, why must you transport companies from Atlanta, Ga., to Idaho Territory? Because, sir, they are scattered over the country to such an extent that you can not concentrate quickly, and when you can have the transportation you have not the forces. Will any Senator tell me that the transportation of those troops from Atlanta, Ga., to Idaho did not cost more money during their transporting than the pay of the soldiers themselves who were transported? I will venture the assertion that it did, or nearly as much, at least. The Secretary of War continued:

It may also be mentioned that when the recent disturbances occurred in Pennsylvania, involving serious loss both of life and property, there could not be found within that great State so many as fifty Federal soldiers, so that when the call was made by the State upon the President in order to answer it troops were necessarily transported at heavy expense from other parts of the Union.

The very thing that the Senator from Missouri was speaking of, "the State having the right to call through their governor or Legislature. Nobody ever disputed that; but when the call was made by the State through their governor for Federal troops there were not fifty to be found in the whole great State of Pennsylvania.

The Secretary of War continued:

A similar state of affairs was found in all the great States of the interior where these disturbances occurred.

Will any man tell me that we ought not to have at least a sufficient number of troops so that when an exigency arises under the law and the Constitution where troops are demanded, where you are bound to obey the command, that we shall not be prepared to meet the emergency? Yet these gentlemen say that we must rely upon the citizen. Of course we rely upon the citizen. These soldiers are made up of citizens, made up of men that we find on the streets and everywhere else. But do they say how we must rely upon a citizen? I believe in relying upon our citizens in time of great trouble, in time of war, in times when you must have a large army, but what is the use to talk about relying upon citizens who are not organized, citizens on the street? Is that your reliance? You call them together for what? You must call them together, organize them, fix up the rolls, elect their officers, issue muskets, issue rations, issue clothing, issue blankets, issue tents, and by the time you get through the trouble will be over, perhaps; the Indians are gone. Is that the way? Is that the logic of these gentlemen? Is that their doctrine?

Senators talk about relying upon citizens and appeal to me that I too should rely upon citizens, and talk about the volunteer soldier. No man has a higher regard for the volunteer soldier than I have, I care not where you may find him. But, sir, we have no volunteer soldiers to-day. They are all ex-soldiers; they have been soldiers, but they are not in the Army now. Who are you now relying upon? If we had a war and had to call men to the field, these old soldiers would come to the music of the Union in a moment, they would enlist under the old banner and fight for their country; but they are not organized; they are not in the Army; we are not in war; we are not asking for volunteers; we are asking to increase the efficiency of this little regular Army that we have, and nothing else.

In this very proposition in 1877 we find the Secretary of War says, "by your law you provided that the companies should not exceed fifty men except in a great emergency." If there had been a war or something of that kind then perhaps Congress would not be in session, and could not pass a law, and the power was given to the President to increase the company to one hundred in a great emergency. But no great emergency has arisen. So the Secretary of War says:

In view of these considerations it is respectfully recommended that authority be given to the President to increase the strength of the depleted companies now embraced within the Army organization.

Sir, this suggestion was even unheeded.

He recommends that the President be given power then to increase to a hundred; that is to say, in 1877, soon after the reduction. Follow that up and you will find in nearly every report of the General of the Army and the Secretary of War the same character of recommendation has been made in reference to the efficiency of the Army by filling it up.

On November 19, 1878, the Secretary of War reports the grand total of the Army, including everything, at 24,761, and he speaks of the desertions, in 1873 over 7,000, in 1874 4,000 and upward, in 1875 over 2,000, in 1876 eighteen hundred and something, in 1877 two thousand and odd, in 1878, 1,678, and so on.

We find in this report the very provision that the Senator referred to in reference to mileage, and I intend to call attention to it. However, I shall pass on now to another proposition and call attention to that at another time.

I will take the report of the Secretary of War for 1879. In it he said:

The report of the General of the Army gives in detail the strength of the several branches of the service, and shows the aggregate, as exhibited in the latest returns, to be 2,127 officers, 24,262 men, and 388 officers, retired. A portion of this force, however, being necessarily employed in detached or special service, constitutes no part of the force available for actual operations in the field.

The General of the Army then makes this statement:

The enlisted men of the Signal Corps, Engineer and Ordnance Corps, ordnance sergeants, commissary sergeants, and hospital stewards, the prison guard at Fort Leavenworth, and the recruiting detachments amount in the aggregate to three thousand four hundred and sixty-three men, and are employed in the performance of important duties connected with the military establishments, but these duties bring but few of them into active service in the field. The statute now authorizes a total force of twenty-five thousand men, not including the Signal Corps, which has by law four hundred and fifty-six men. I join most heartily with the General of the Army in recommending that the effective force of the Army available for field-duty be raised to twenty-five thousand men, exclusive of the above-named detachments.

After they had recommended it to be raised to thirty thousand and could not get it done, they then wished it raised to twenty-five thousand effective men—that is, that number of men exclusive of the details and detachments, which amounted at that time to three thousand four hundred and sixty-three men.

So you find in every report for years back. Take the report of 1880. I desire to call attention to this report to what the General of the Army and he himself recommend, or what their statement was in reference to the number of men:

The organization of the Army provides for 11 general officers; 555 officers and 1,286 enlisted men for the staff; 1,989 officers and 24,214 enlisted men for the line. Of these latter 694 are detailed as clerks, or are recruits unassigned to regiments, reducing the possible force for military service to 23,520 enlisted men.

The General of the Army in his report, to which, with the accompanying reports of division and department commanders, attention is invited, notes the fact that the actual force must, at all times, be kept below that figure; that there must always be allowed for "sick," "detached service," and other unavoidable causes, at least 10 per cent., reducing the available force to about twenty thousand enlisted men. The General and Lieutenant-General of the Army concur in the opinion that the Army is too small in enlisted men to fulfill the heavy duties now imposed on it, and that it is overworked. The General renews his recommendation of last year, that Congress be requested to give twenty-five thousand enlisted men.

He means by that twenty-five thousand men carrying muskets, that the Army be increased so that the details and extra men shall all be taken from it and leave twenty-five thousand effective men in the Army. He says that with the details and everything 10 per cent. is not efficient or effective. He continues as follows:

It is believed the full legal strength is the least possible force at which the present organization can be maintained, having in view efficiency, discipline, and economy. While the enlistment of this force would add somewhat to the appropriation for pay of the Army, the saving made in other directions would be very considerable, and the efficiency of the Army largely increased.

Mr. President, I am detaining the Senate, but I am reading these reports to show that the statements I have made in reference to this bill from the beginning have been justified and supported by reports for years and years, as far back as I said, and further, by the Secretary of War and the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and in fact by all the generals of the Army. As that was denied on this floor by Senators who perhaps had not looked into it as far as they might, I desire to show that I did not mistake the facts as to their recommendations. In 1881 the General of the Army made his report and the Secretary of War adopted it. The Secretary of War says:

The report of the General of the Army contains recommendations of the highest importance. He again calls attention to public necessity of legislation authorizing the Army to be recruited to a strength of thirty thousand enlisted men as provided by section 1115 of the Revised Statutes. As is remarked by the General, our companies are too small for efficient discipline and for economical service. There are in the Army four hundred and thirty companies, which are necessarily widely scattered over our vast domain to guard property, and to prevent, as far as foresight can, complications and troubles of every variety and kind, at one time protecting the settlers against Indians and again, Indians against the settlers. When these occur, re-enforcements have to be hurried forward from great distances, and always at heavy cost for transportation of men, horses, wagons, and supplies.

This cost in the aggregate is probably more than sufficient to supply an increase of 20 per cent. of private soldiers, which will add little, if any, to the annual cost of the Army, and yet give great relief to our overtaxed soldiers. In the last ten years our frontiers have so extended under the protection of our small Army as to add at least a thousand millions of dollars to the taxable wealth of the nation. This protection has enabled emigrants to settle up remote parts of the country, and is a principal cause of the great prosperity which is felt throughout all parts of our vast domain.

It should be remembered that of the enlisted force of any army a large part, not far from 15 per cent., is for many causes not available at any one time as a fighting force; so that the legislation recommended would, after proper allowances, give an actual combatant force of about twenty-five thousand men.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will give way for a motion to go into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I will yield.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 807) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business according to the understanding.

The SECRETARY. The bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes,

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate this 5th day of April, 1886.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNOR.

Caleb W. West, of Kentucky, to be governor of Utah Territory, vice Eli H. Murray, resigned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Job H. Lippencott, of New Jersey, to be attorney of the United States for the district of New Jersey, vice A. Q. Keasbey, whose commission expires April 12, 1886.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL.

Benjamin T. Ledbetter, of Louisiana, to be surveyor-general of Louisiana, vice James Lewis, resigned. The nomination of Mr. Ledbetter, which was sent to the Senate on the 10th of December last, is this day withdrawn.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Edward R. Fogg, of Nebraska, to be receiver of public moneys at Beatrice, Nebr., vice William H. Somers, commission expired.

UNITED STATES CONSULS.

Louis D. Beylard, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States at Kingston, Jamaica, vice George E. Koskinson, suspended.

L. J. Du Pré, of Alabama, to be consul of the United States at San Salvador, vice J. Maurice Duke, recalled.

J. Cecil Legaré, of Donaldsonville, La., to be consul of the United States at Tampico, vice Augustus J. Cassards, resigned.

Moses H. Sawyer, of Mystic Bridge, Conn., to be consul of the United States at Trinidad, vice John Towler, recalled.

POSTMASTERS.

Wesley E. Hughes, to be postmaster at Fresno City, Fresno County, California, vice N. W. Moody, resigned.

John McCann, to be postmaster at Martinez, Contra Costa County, California, the office having become Presidential.

James Tyron, to be postmaster at Placerville, El Dorado County, California, vice Albert J. Lowry, resigned.

Frank Abt, to be postmaster at Lead City, Lawrence County, Dakota, vice Thomas D. Edwards, resigned.

Matthew Weismarthe, to be postmaster at Naperville, Du Page County, Illinois, whose commission expires April 26, 1886.

John H. Saxton, to be postmaster at De Witt, Clinton County, Iowa, vice F. P. Kettenring, commission expired.

George W. Clark, to be postmaster at Lyons, Rice County, Kansas, vice Harry C. Taylor, whose commission expires April 11, 1886.

W. H. L. Pepperell, to be postmaster at Concordia, Cloud County, Kansas, vice Burton S. Williams, resigned.

Eugene C. Wilson, to be postmaster at Clay Centre, Clay County, Kansas, whose commission expires April 21, 1886.

Granville R. Rider, to be postmaster at Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland, vice John P. Owens, commission expired.

Asahel Willison, to be postmaster at Cumberland, Alleghany County, Maryland, vice Henry J. Johnson, commission expired.

William Buttrick, to be postmaster at Concord, Middlesex County, Massachusetts, vice Henry L. Whitcomb, whose commission expires April 26, 1886.

Theodore H. Fenn, to be postmaster at Lee, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, vice Joseph C. Chaffee, whose commission expires April 26, 1886.

Lemuel L. Keith, to be postmaster at Bridgewater, Plymouth County, Massachusetts, vice Lewis Holmes, whose commission expires April 26, 1886.

Jeremiah Murphy, to be postmaster at Beverly, Essex County, Massachusetts, vice Francis E. Porter, whose commission expires April 26, 1886.

Andrew Shanahan, to be postmaster at Rockland, Plymouth County, Massachusetts, vice Joshua S. Smith, commission expired.

Rollin C. Ward, to be postmaster at Northfield, Franklin County, Massachusetts, the office having become Presidential.

J. H. Woodman, to be postmaster at Northville, Wayne County, Michigan, the office having become Presidential.

Clayton F. Collins, to be postmaster at Homer, Calhoun County, Michigan, the office having become Presidential.

G. J. Evans, to be postmaster at Hastings, Adams County, Nebraska, vice C. H. Paul, commission expired.

Thomas Hill, to be postmaster at Haddonfield, Camden County, New Jersey, the office having become Presidential.

Alice M. Crabtree, to be postmaster at Belmont, Allegany County, New York, the office having become Presidential.

William J. Moses, to be postmaster at Auburn, Cayuga County, New York, vice E. D. Woodruff, commission expired.

Hartford D. Nelson, to be postmaster at Oneonta, Otsego County, New York, vice C. B. Pepper, resigned.

Frederick P. Newkirk, to be postmaster at Oxford, Chenango County, New York, vice Benjamin M. Pearne, whose commission expires April 28, 1886.

Benjamin F. Vail, to be postmaster at Warwick, Orange County, New York, vice William H. Pelton, whose commission expired March 31, 1886.

Shannon Clements, to be postmaster at Bucyrus, Crawford County, Ohio, vice Matthew H. Fulton, commission expired.

John W. Davis, to be postmaster at New Richmond, Clermont County, Ohio, the office having become Presidential.

Charles F. Young, to be postmaster at Columbia, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, vice Henry Mullens, commission expired.

Herndon C. Travers, to be postmaster at Rockdale, Milan County, Texas, vice Herndon C. Travers, whose commission expires April 14, 1886.

Samuel Chamberlain, to be postmaster at Waupun, Fondu Lac County, Wisconsin, vice John H. Brinkerhoff, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate, March 31, 1886.

POSTMASTERS.

Mattie K. Chisman, to be postmaster at Hampton, in the county of Elizabeth City and State of Virginia.

John N. Shepherd, to be postmaster at Berryville, in the county of Clarke and State of Virginia.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate April 5, 1886.

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

William L. Trenholm, of South Carolina, now a Civil Service Commissioner, to be Comptroller of the Currency.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 5, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. RICE, who was called home by a death in his family, supposed that he was paired upon the labor-arbitration bill, and desired me to say that if present he would have voted "ay" on the passage of that bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the Chair will proceed to call the States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

WEIL & MOORE.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. 7482) for the relief of Weil & Moore; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

W. W. SCREWS.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 7483) for the relief of W. W. Screws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALGERNON M. COOK.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 7484) for the relief of Algernon M. Cook; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. KIRK.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 7485) to grant a pension to James M. Kirk; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION COURT OF CLAIMS, ETC.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7486) to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster stores and for subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MARY E. REED.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7487) for the relief of Mary E. Reed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM J. DULEY.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7488) granting a pension to Capt. William J. Duley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH L. MASSIE.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7489) granting a pension to Sarah L. Massie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MILTON WILLIAMS.

Mr. WHEELER (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7490) for the relief of Milton Williams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

W. T. H. FORMAN.

Mr. PEEL (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7491) for the relief of W. T. H. Forman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JACOB LAVENDER.

Mr. McRAE introduced a bill (H. R. 7492) for the relief of the estate of Jacob Lavender; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH BEAN.

Mr. McRAE also introduced a bill (H. R. 7493) for the relief of Joseph Bean, of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, PENSACOLA.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, introduced a bill (H. R. 7494) making an appropriation for the construction of a macadamized road to the national cemetery near Pensacola, Fla.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET A. M'CORMICK.

Mr. PAYSON (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7495) for the relief of Margaret A. McCormick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT ENGINEERS UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. KLEINER introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 150) for the purpose of temporarily increasing the number of assistant engineers in the United States Navy by restoring certain cadet-engineers named therein to their legal rights and to their proper office and rank in the United States Navy, authorizing and directing the President to appoint such cadet-engineers (graduates) assistant engineers, to commission them as such, and to antedate their commissions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT E. M'CONNELL.

Mr. KLEINER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7496) granting a pension to Robert E. McConnell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM JENKINS.

Mr. KLEINER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7497) for the relief of William Jenkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES PLATZ.

Mr. FORD introduced a bill (H. R. 7498) granting a pension to Charles Platz; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JOHN W. WEST.

Mr. FULLER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7499) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION IN 1889 AND 1892.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH (by Mr. RYAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a joint select committee of five on the part of the House of Representatives, and three on the part of the Senate, be appointed to consider the subject of a celebration in 1889 at Washington of the centennial anniversary of the formation of the Government under the Constitution of the United States, and also of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America in 1892, and to report what, if any, action by Congress is advisable in relation thereto.

LAURA A. WATSON.

Mr. RYAN introduced a bill (H. R. 7500) granting a pension to Laura A. Watson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 604 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (H. R. 7501) to amend section 604 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PORT OF ENTRY AND DELIVERY AT ATCHISON, KANS.

Mr. MORRILL also introduced a bill (H. R. 7502) to establish a port of entry and delivery at Atchison, Kans.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES E. SCOTT.

Mr. PETERS introduced a bill (H. R. 7503) granting a pension to Charles E. Scott; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LARKIN DELPH.

Mr. TAULBEE introduced a bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DR. JOHN R. HALL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 7505) for the relief of Dr. John R. Hall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NICOLAS LEVEMBER.

Mr. GAY (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7506) for payment of pension-money to Nicolas Levember; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. HOGAR.

Mr. DINGLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 7507) for the relief of James M. Hogar; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN FISHING REGULATIONS.

Mr. DINGLEY also submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas the minister of marine of the Dominion of Canada has issued a proclamation directing the enforcement of an act of the Dominion Parliament which prohibits any fishing vessel of the United States from entering any dominion harbor except for the purpose of shelter, repairing damages, and purchasing wood and obtaining water; and

Whereas press dispatches announce that, under this proclamation, dominion officers have denied to fishing vessels of the United States the right to enter ports of entry in said dominion for the purpose of purchasing supplies or landing fish caught in deep water for shipment in bond to the United States or doing other acts which Canadian and other British vessels are freely permitted to do in ports of the United States; and

Whereas these acts of the authorities of the Dominion of Canada are in contravention of the principles which regulate the intercourse of friendly civilized nations and in direct conflict with a legislative arrangement between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain which went into effect the 1st day of January, 1850, by which Great Britain, in view of similar privileges conditionally conceded to her vessels by the United States, placed the vessels of the United States on the same footing in British ports, including British colonies, as that on which British vessels are placed in the ports of the United States, the coasting trade only excepted: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to furnish the House, if compatible with the public interests, with any information in his possession relative to the exclusion of American fishing vessels from the ports of entry of the dominion of Canada for the purpose of trading, purchasing supplies, or landing fish caught in deep water for shipment in bond to the United States, or doing other acts which Canadian and other British vessels are freely permitted to do in ports of the United States; and also to inform the House what steps have been taken or are proposed to bring such unwarrantable and unfriendly acts of the dominion authorities to the attention of the British Government.

RIGHT OF WAY AT ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. COLE introduced a bill (H. R. 7508) granting the right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short Line Railroad Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CECILIA C. M'KENNA.

Mr. COLE also introduced a bill (H. R. 7509) granting a pension to Cecilia C. McKenna; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM FOARD.

Mr. SHAW introduced a bill (H. R. 7510) granting a pension to William Foard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET LUCY.

Mr. HAYDEN introduced a bill (H. R. 7511) granting a pension to Margaret Lucy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE G. BODFISH.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (H. R. 7512) granting a pension to Catharine G. Bodfish; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

KATHARINE NICKERT.

Mr. FISHER introduced a bill (H. R. 7513) granting a pension to Katharine Nickert; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LUCY HALE.

Mr. O'DONNELL introduced a bill (H. R. 7514) granting a pension to Lucy Hale, daughter of a soldier of the Revolutionary army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ISRAEL C. WELLS.

Mr. O'DONNELL also introduced a bill (H. R. 7515) granting a pension to Israel C. Wells; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PERRY CHILDS.

Mr. STRAIT introduced a bill (H. R. 7516) for the relief of Perry Childs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WARREN L. RICE.

Mr. STRAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. 7517) for the relief of Warren L. Rice, late private Company F, Sixth Michigan Heavy Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE A. PERKINS.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, introduced a bill (H. R. 7518) for the relief of George A. Perkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ISAAC N. HAWKINS.

Mr. GILFILLAN introduced a bill (H. R. 7519) to increase the pension of Isaac N. Hawkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE A. PERKINS.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, introduced a bill (H. R. 7518) for the relief of George A. Perkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ISAAC N. HAWKINS.

Mr. GILFILLAN introduced a bill (H. R. 7519) to increase the pension of Isaac N. Hawkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTS.

Mr. VAN EATON offered resolutions instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to examine certain questions of law in reference to proposed forfeiture of land grants; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H CHATTIN.

Mr. HATCH introduced a bill (H. R. 7520) for the relief of H. Chattin, and asked unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLOUNT objected; and the bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES D. COTTON.

Mr. HATCH also introduced a bill (H. R. 7521) granting a pension to James D. Cotton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE AT SAINT LOUIS, MO.

Mr. GLOVER introduced a bill (H. R. 7522) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo., and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM H. FINCH.

Mr. GLOVER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7523) for the relief of the heirs of William H. Finch; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

STREETS AND AVENUES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. HEARD (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7524) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend and widen certain streets and avenues of the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ALVIN A. AYERS.

Mr. HEARD also introduced a bill (H. R. 7525) for the relief of Alvin A. Ayers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS CAMERON.

Mr. HEARD also introduced a bill (H. R. 7526) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Cameron; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AARON STERNES.

Mr. HEARD also introduced a bill (H. R. 7527) granting a pension to Aaron Sternes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ASHFORD A. STONE.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (H. R. 7528) granting a pension to Ashford A. Stone; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK C. CONRADS.

Mr. HALE also introduced a bill (H. R. 7529) granting a pension to Frederick C. Conrads; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committe on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES F. WILLHIDE.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. 7530) granting a pension to James F. Willhide; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK BACKOF.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri (by request), also introduced a bill (H. R. 7531) for the relief of Frank Backof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JACOB BRENNINGER.

Mr. BURNES introduced a bill (H. R. 7532) granting a pension to Jacob Brenninger; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HULDA HINER.

Mr. BURNES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7533) granting a pension to Hulda Hiner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY B. CUSHING.

Mr. BURNES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7534) granting a pension to Mary B. Cushing; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN FURLONG.

Mr. BURNES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7535) for the relief of John Furlong; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. DOCKERY introduced a bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES PACE.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, introduced a bill (H. R. 7537) for the relief of James Pace; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CATHERINE HOFFERMAN.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7538) granting a pension to Catherine Hofferman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN ALBRECHT.

Mr. DORSEY introduced a bill (H. R. 7539) granting a pension to John Albrecht, late a private Fourth Battery, New Jersey Light Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FRANKLIN SWEET.

Mr. DORSEY also introduced a bill (H. R. 7540) to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet, late a captain Company E, Sixty-second Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE STOCK.

Mr. DORSEY also introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas it is charged that the present system of transporting live stock by railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce is barbarous and destructive, that 10 per cent. of the animals perish in consequence of this treatment, and the flesh of the remainder is rendered unfit for human food; and

Whereas it is charged that the flesh of animals so treated, including that of the dead and dying, is sold to the people, and can not, when dressed, be distinguished from sound meats, and is the source of many and various diseases; and

Whereas it appears by the report of the Committee on Agriculture of this House, January 1, 1875, that the loss by shrinkage alone in the weight of animals, caused by this system of transportation, amounted to the immense sum of $8,000,000 on the business of 1870, and must now be nearly or quite $16,000,000 per annum; and

Whereas it has been charged that said railroad companies, by a system of favoritism, give to a small number of persons, known as the Association of Eveners, a bonus or gift of about $15 upon every car-load of beef-cattle shipped from West to East, said sum being no part of the actual legitimate cost of transportation, but is, on the contrary, collected by the transporters and paid over to the so-called eveners as a mere gratuity; and

Whereas the losses and charges alone constitute in the aggregate an enormous tax upon a necessary article of food, which must be borne by the producer and consumer alike, diminishing the just profits of the meat-growers in the West, and placing meat-food in many instances beyond the reach of the poor man in the East; and

Whereas it is charged that the act of Congress requiring railroad companies to unload stock in transitu at least once in every twenty-eight hours to be fed, watered, and rested, unless carried in cars in which the animals are adequately fed, watered, and rested without unloading, is habitually violated: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire whether these evils do in fact exist, and to what extent they may be remedied by law, with power to send for persons and papers, and with direction to report at any time, by bill or otherwise.

BRIDGET RYAN.

Mr. DORSEY also introduced a bill (H. R. 7541) granting a pension to Bridget Ryan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES PURINGTON.

Mr. GALLINGER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7542) for the relief of Charles D. Purington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ABRAM BROWN.

Mr. PHELPS introduced a bill (H. R. 7543) granting an increase of pension to Abram Brown; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AMEND SECTION 3893 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. MERRIMAN (by Mr. BEACH) introduced a bill (H. R. 7544) to amend section 3893 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relative to the transmission of obscene matter through the mails; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. BEACH introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this session the morning hour for making reports by committees shall be dispensed with, except on Mondays and Thursdays of each week, and in its stead the Speaker shall call the States in alphabetical order; upon which call each State, when called, shall be entitled for the period of one hour to call up for consideration such bills or resolutions affecting such State, or any section thereof, as the delegation from such State may determine: Provided, That no bill or resolution shall be designated which shall not have received the unanimous sanction of a committee of this House: And provided further, That all debate upon any one bill or resolution shall be confined to ten minutes, the time to be equally divided among those favoring and those opposing the measure.

PROTESTS OR APPEALS OF IMPORTERS, ETC.

Mr. BELMONT introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be directed to prepare and report to this House a bill to provide for the creation of a board of experts, consisting of three persons to be appointed by the President, on the advice and consent of the Senate, two of whom shall be merchants who have had experience in the importation of merchandise, and one of whom shall be skilled in the practice of law in the courts and learned in the law, who shall have their offices in the Treasury Department, with an appropriate annual salary for each, and to whom shall be referred by the Secretary of the Treasury all questions arising on protests or appeals made by importers against the liquidation of entries, of the levy of duties or fees, and no decision of any question thus arising and presented to the Treasury Department shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury till a report from those officers, or a majority of them, shall have been received by him. The Secretary of the Treasury shall also be authorized to refer to those officers, and require their opinion on any other question or matter concerning the customs revenue, and shall be authorized to require them to visit any of the collection districts; but the said bill shall not impair the existing power and duty of the head of the Treasury Department to supervise all officers of the customs revenue and prescribe regulations for their conduct and the collection of duties.

And that the Committee on Ways and Means be also required to prepare and report to this House a bill to create for the port of New York a reappraising board, as recommended by Secretary Manning in his special report to Congress of February 16, 1886 (page xli), which board shall consist of three general appraisers for the reappraisement of the value of merchandise at that port.

LEGATION BUILDINGS IN CHINA, JAPAN, ETC.

Mr. BELMONT also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. 151) authorizing the President to purchase grounds and erect buildings thereon at Peking, China, for the legation of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BELMONT also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. 152) authorizing the President to accept the gift of the Government of Japan of grounds at Tokio, Japan, and to erect thereon buildings for the legation of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BELMONT also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. 153) authorizing the President to purchase building and grounds at Seoul, Corea, for the legation of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BELMONT also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. 154) authorizing the President to accept the gift of the King of Siam of buildings and grounds at Bangkok, Siam, and to repair and improve the same, for the legation of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CELIA L. JENNINGS.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (H. R. 7545) granting a pension to Celia L. Jennings; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

POST NO. 343, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC, NEW YORK.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (H. R. 7546) granting condemned cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 343 of the Grand Army of the Republic of the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LIVINGSTON CLARK.

Mr. SAWYER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7547) granting a pension to Livingston Clark, of Company G, Twenty-first New York Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELEANOR H. RICHARDSON.

Mr. SWINBURNE introduced a bill (H. R. 7548) for the relief of Eleanor H. Richardson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AMELIORATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE SYSTEM.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Corolina, introduced a bill (H. R. 7549) to ameliorate the harshness of some of the worst features of the internal-revenue system of legislation, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I wish the bill to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Does it affect the internal-revenue system?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. It does not.

The SPEAKER. It simply affects judicial proceedings?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. That is all.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF LETTER-POSTAGE, ETC.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7550) to reduce letter-postage from 2 cents to 1½ cents, and the price of postal cards from 1 cent to one-half cent each; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ANDERSON W. YOUNG.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. 7551) granting a pension to Anderson W. Young; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEGED HOMICIDES, CARROLLTON, MISS.

Mr. O'HARA submitted resolutions asking for a committee of investigation of the alleged homicides at Carrollton, Miss.; which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

EMALINE HARRIS.

Mr. GEDDES introduced a bill (H. R. 7552) granting a pension to Emaline Harris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. CATHERINE REED.

Mr. GEDDES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7553) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine Reed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

STABILITY OF PAPER CURRENCY.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. 7554) to better secure the stability of paper currency; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID BROWN.

Mr. ELLSBERRY introduced a bill (H. R. 7555) granting a pension to David Brown; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE GANTS.

Mr. ELLSBERRY also introduced a bill (H. R. 7556) granting a pension to George Gants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM T. MATLOCK.

Mr. HERMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 7557) for the relief of the heirs of William T. Matlock, late receiver of public moneys at Oregon City, Oreg.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SHIP-CANAL TO LAKE ERIE.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. 7558) authorizing survey of ship-canal from Franklin, Pa., on the Allegheny River, to Lake Erie, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

AGNES ALLISON.

Mr. BRUMM introduced a bill (H. R. 7559) to increase the pension of Agnes Allison; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. BLANCHE WENDEL WOODWARD.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I submit a joint resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated and paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Blanche Wendel Woodward, widow of Surg. Joseph J. Woodward, late a major and brevet lieutenant-colonel of United States Army, as an assistant to the Surgeon-General, compensation for his services as medical and surgical attendant to the late President James A. Garfield during the period of his illness.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask to have that joint resolution referred to the Committee on Appropriations with jurisdiction to include it in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). Under the rules the joint resolution will go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But I ask, by unanimous consent, that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPRINGER and others. Let the resolution be read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations with leave to incorporate the appropriation in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent could not be given to change the rules of the House.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I can move to refer it to the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly; but not with leave to change the rules of the House. The joint resolution goes to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I then withdraw the resolution.

JACOB MINNICH.

Mr. ERMENTROUT introduced a bill (H. R. 7560) for the relief of Jacob Minnich; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID DONEBERGER.

Mr. BOUND (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7561) granting a pension to David Doneberger, late of Company E, Seventeenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES J. WYATT.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. 7562) for the relief of James J. Wyatt, Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OIL CITY, PA.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (H. R. 7563) to provide for the erection of a public building at Oil City, in the State of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. DIBBLE introduced a bill (H. R. 7564) relating to the district courts of the eastern and western districts of the district of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT D. ALEXANDER.

Mr. HEMPHILL introduced a bill (H. R. 7565) for the relief of Robert D. Alexander, of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM SHANNON.

Mr. DIBBLE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7566) for the relief of William Shannon, of Elizabeth City, N. C.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DENVER AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD.

Mr. REAGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish to the House of Representatives copies of the correspondence and documents submitted to the Railroad Commissioner by the president of the late Denver and New Orleans road, the Denver, Texas and Gulf Railroad Company, as described in his letter to the Commissioner of Railroads of February 25, 1886, relating to the discriminations against the Denver and New Orleans Railroad by railroads, to which the United States has granted land.

WILLIAM C. HERRIDGE.

Mr. SAYERS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7567) granting a pension to William C. Herridge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IRA COLBURN.

Mr. GROUT introduced a bill (H. R. 7568) granting a pension to Ira Colburn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PIEDMONT RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. CABELL introduced a bill (H. R. 7569) to authorize the Court of Claims to take jurisdiction of and adjudge the claim of the Piedmont Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY B. KIRBY.

Mr. CABELL also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7570) for the relief of Mary B. Kirby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. BLAIR.

Mr. O'FERRALL introduced a bill (H. R. 7571) granting a pension to James W. Blair, late of Company B, Second Vermont Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY MINOR HOXEY.

Mr. O'FERRALL also introduced a bill (H. R. 7572) increasing the pension of Mary Minor Hoxie, widow of Bvt. Maj. Benjamin W. Hoxey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MIRANNA JENNINGS.

Mr. PETTIBONE introduced a bill (H. R. 7573) for the relief of the legal heirs of Miranna Jennings; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

L. W. LOWE.

Mr. PETTIBONE also introduced a bill (H. R. 7574) for the relief of L. W. Lowe; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

W. W. GREEN.

Mr. DAWSON introduced a bill (H. R. 7575) for the relief of W. W. Green; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. RANDALL.

Mr. DAWSON also introduced a bill (H. R. 7576) granting a pension to John A. Randall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. DALE.

Mr. DAWSON also introduced a bill (H. R. 7577) for the relief of John M. Dale; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. CATHARINE ODLAM.

Mr. BRAGG introduced a bill (H. R. 7578) for the relief of Mrs. Catharine Odlam; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUNISHMENT OF MINOR OFFENSES, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. BRAGG also introduced a bill (H. R. 7579) authorizing the summary punishment of enlisted men in the Army of the United States for minor offenses heretofore cognizable by garrison courts-martial; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGE-ADVOCATES.

Mr. BRAGG also introduced a bill (H. R. 7580) regulating the practice of judge-advocates before courts-martial of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. BRAGG also submitted a resolution setting apart May 4 and 5 for consideration of general bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SYDNEY B. FULLER.

Mr. CASWELL (by Mr. LA FOLLETTE) introduced a bill (H. R. 7581) granting a pension to Sydney B. Fuller; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALBINO ORTEGA.

Mr. JOSEPH introduced a bill (H. R. 7582) for the relief of Albino Ortega; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCISCO VIGIL.

Mr. JOSEPH also introduced a bill (H. R. 7583) for the relief of Francisco Vigil; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TOMAS C. DE BACO.

Mr. JOSEPH also introduced a bill (H. R. 7584) for the relief of Tomas C. de Baco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MAXWELL LAND GRANT, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JOSEPH also submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas because of the final action of the Land Department the entire Maxwell grant tract in New Mexico was in 1874 thrown open to pre-emption settlement as public land; and

Whereas this final action of the Land Department has not been annulled by any direct proceeding for that purpose, but has simply been defied and overridden to the injury of the United States and the private and vested rights of the pre-emption claimants to the public lands; and

Whereas the settlers are now being evicted by the Maxwell Land Grant Company in defiance of said final and valid action of the Land Department requiring the entire Maxwell grant tract to be treated as public land: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker to investigate the grievances of the settlers with a view to immediate relief by bill or otherwise; and that said committee shall have power to subpœna witnesses, administer oaths, and do all other acts necessary to a full investigation of the subject-matter; and that the expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House, not to exceed —— dollars.

TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (H. R. 7585) relating to taxation in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. VOORHEES also submitted a resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to demand from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company a statement of the facts in connection with certain alleged violations of the law by said company; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

SCHOOL LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. CAREY (by Mr. LYMAN) introduced a bill (H. R. 7586) to authorize the leasing of the school lands of the Territory of Wyoming for the support of public schools; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PLATTE LAND DISTRICT, WYOMING.

Mr. CAREY (by Mr. LYMAN) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7587) to establish the Platte land district, in the Territory of Wyoming; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

RAILWAYS IN WYOMING.

Mr. CAREY (by Mr. LYMAN) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7588) relating to certain railways in the Territory of Wyoming; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of States and Territories. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

There was no objection.

MRS. JUDITH DIEG.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (H. R. 7589) granting a pension to Mrs. Judith Dieg; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 2133 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. WELLBORN introduced a bill (H. R. 7590) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARY H. NOONAN.

Mr. MCADOO introduced a bill (H. R. 7591) for the relief of Mary H. Noonan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHESAPEAKE BANK.

Mr. FINDLAY introduced a bill (H. R. 7592) for the relief of the Chesapeake Bank, of Baltimore, Md.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WALTER SORRELL.

Mr. FINDLAY also introduced a bill (H. R. 7593) for the relief of Walter Sorrell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD T. BRYAN.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (H. R. 7594) for the relief of Richard T. Bryan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SUPREME COURT OF DISTRICT.

Mr. HEMPHILL introduced a bill (H. R. 7595) to provide for the appointment of an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and for an additional term of the circuit court of said supreme court; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN EXECUTORS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7596) to enable foreign executors and administrators to sue in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PATRICK F. O'KANE.

Mr. ROGERS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7597) for the relief of Patrick F. O'Kane; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CYRENIUS W. SMITH.

Mr. ROGERS (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7598) granting a pension to Cyrenius W. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PETER GREENFIELD.

Mr. ROGERS (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7599) granting a pension to Peter Greenfield; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SAINT AUGUSTINE AND LAZARETTO CREEKS.

Mr. NORWOOD introduced a bill (H. R. 7600) to authorize the building of railroad bridges across Saint Augustine and Lazaretto Creeks, in the State of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ADOLPHUS M. COHEN.

Mr. NORWOOD also introduced a bill (H. R. 7601) for the relief of Adolphus M. Cohen, of the city of Savannah, Ga.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM DUFOUR.

Mr. HOLMES introduced a bill (H. R. 7602) for the relief of the personal representative of William Dufour, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL T. THOMSON.

Mr. SYMES introduced a bill (H. R. 7603) for the relief of Samuel T. Thomson, his heirs or legal representatives; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE BAGGS.

Mr. SYMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7604) for the relief of George Baggs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. MURRAY.

Mr. SYMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7605) for the relief of John W. Murray; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SYLVESTER JOHNSON.

Mr. SYMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7606) for the relief of Sylvester Johnson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

W. P. ALEXANDER.

Mr. SYMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7607) for the relief of W. P. Alexander; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. AKINS AND JACOB D. FELTHOUSEN.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. 7608) for the relief of William H. Akins and Jacob D. Felthousen; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

JENNISON MYERS.

Mr. WADSWORTH (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7609) for the relief of Jennison Myers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. DUNCAN.

Mr. WADSWORTH (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7610) for the relief of James H. Duncan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR HONORABLY DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

Mr. STEELE introduced a bill (H. R. 7611) providing for the sale of public lands to honorably discharged soldiers under certain conditions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN STUCKEY.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (H. R. 7612) granting a pension to John Stuckey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

F. A. SEARS.

Mr. PERKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7613) for the relief of F. A. Sears; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HEZEKIAH TILLMAN.

Mr. PERKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7614) granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah Tillman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

F. L. ROCKWELL.

Mr. PERKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7615) for the relief of F. L. Rockwell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

W. D. HAVELY.

Mr. PERKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7616) for the relief of W. D. Havely; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SOLOMON J. GRISSOM.

Mr. PERKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7617) granting a pension to Solomon J. Grissom; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RE-EXPORTATION OF IMPORTED BOTTLES, ETC.

Mr. FELTON introduced a bill (H. R. 7618) for the allowance of drawbacks on the re-exportation of imported bottles, corks, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN P. CLUM.

Mr. BEAN introduced a bill (H. R. 7619) for the relief of John P. Clum, late postmaster at Tombstone, Ariz.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ABEL MARSHALL.

Mr. WHITING introduced a bill (H. R. 7620) for the relief of Abel Marshall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL TRADES UNIONS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. 7621) to legalize the incorporation of national trades unions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. CADWALLADER.

Mr. SPRINGER introduced a bill (H. R. 7622) for the relief of John F. Cadwallader; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SAFETY OF PASSENGER STEAMERS.

Mr. LAWLER introduced a bill (H. R. 7623) to increase the safety of passenger steamers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INSANE ASYLUM IN UTAH.

Mr. CAINE introduced a bill (H. R. 7624) to convey to the Territory of Utah, for the use of the Territorial insane asylum, certain lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAINE also introduced a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, asking that certain lands be granted to said Territory for the use and benefit of the Territorial insane asylum; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I was compelled to be absent from the House last week in consequence of the sickness of a business partner. Had I been present on Saturday last, I should have voted for the passage of the bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON JUDICIARY.

Mr. TUCKER submitted a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, April 24, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented or indicated by the Committee on the Judiciary; this order not to interfere with the consideration of general appropriation and revenue bills.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask the immediate consideration of this resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will indicate what bills it is proposed to consider under this order.

Mr. TUCKER. I can not indicate all. If the gentleman wishes to be informed whether any particular bill will be brought up I will try to answer him.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the salary bill?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or the bankruptcy bill?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would prefer that the resolution should except business of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TUCKER. We only ask one day.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; which was adopted.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred sundry proposed amendments to the rules and orders of business, having had the same under consideration, report: First, the committee reports with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the following resolution, submitted by Mr. BALFOUR, namely:

"Resolved, That the second Monday of each calendar month hereafter during the continuance of the Forty-ninth Congress, after the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions, be, and the same hereby is, set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia."

The Committee on the District of Columbia, on the 8th day of May, 1864, was assigned the third Monday of each month from 2 o'clock for the consideration of its business, and was omitted in the call of committees for reports. That provision was stricken out in the revision of the rules in the second session Forty-sixth Congress, but was practically restored in the following session. In the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, toward the close of the long sessions, the committee was given two days in each month.

The Committee on Rules is of opinion that the District Committee should have a day assigned it, and accordingly report the resolution with the following amendment, namely:

Add as clause 3, Rule XXVI, the following, namely:

"The second Monday of each month, after the call of States and Territories until the adjournment of that day, shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee."

Second. The committee recommend that clause 6 of Rule XXIII be amended by inserting the following after the word "only," in line 5, namely, "which motion shall be decided without debate."

There is no rule of the House prohibiting debate on a motion to close debate in Committee of the Whole, and although it is not usual to debate such a motion in the House, the right apparently exists, which the committee are of opinion is somewhat inconsistent with the purpose of the motion.

Third. The committee recommend the repeal of clauses 4 and 6 of Rule XXI.

The first-named clause was adopted on the 15th of September, 1837, and was as follows:

"No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith any other bill or resolution pending before the House."

As reported by the Committee on Rules the following words were contained in the last paragraph, namely:

"Nor by any proposition containing the substance, in whole or part, of any other bill or resolutions pending before the House."

These words were stricken out by a large majority, thus making it in order to incorporate by way of amendment the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House. The rule and practice so remained until the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, when it was changed to its present form.

The committee are of opinion that the rule subserves no useful purpose, but, on the contrary, prevents the consideration of carefully matured and prepared propositions by way of amendment. The rule as it now stands is calculated to discourage and prevent the careful formulation of legislative propositions by members, and in the judgment of the committee should be repealed in the interest of good legislation.

The repeal of clause 6 is recommended for the reason that since its adoption nineteen general appropriation bills have passed the House without a single negative vote and twenty-three bills with less than ten negative votes. The constitutional provision that the yeas and nays shall be entered on the Journal on the demand of one-fifth of the members present is, in the opinion of the committee, all that is requisite on the subject, as there seems to be no good reason why the bills named should be voted on in any other manner than other bills appropriating money.

Mr. MORRISON. The short statement made by way of explanation in the report explanatory of the several changes proposed to be made in the rules is, I think, sufficient to indicate to the House what changes are intended and what their effect will be. The amendments are four in number. One gives the District Committee a day for District legislation. Another cuts off debate on a motion to close debate. Another, or third, allows the substance of a pending, may be a better, bill to be offered as an amendment. And a fourth repeals the rule requiring the yeas and nays on appropriation bills, unless demanded by the constitutional one-fifth.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that these several propositions be taken up and considered separately.

Mr. BURROWS. From the hurried reading of this report there appeared to be a great many amendments proposed. I suggest whether it would not be well to have the report printed and allow it to lie over for one day, so that members may examine it. I have no doubt it is all right; but I would like very much to see it in print.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not think the gentleman will have any difficulty in understanding the report of the committee. If he insists upon it, he can have it laid over for a day.

Mr. BURROWS. I should like very much to see it in print.

Mr. MORRISON. The changes proposed are simple, contained in a few words, and easily understood. The gentleman from Michigan will have no difficulty in understanding them once they receive his attention.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let the Clerk again read the report, and then perhaps the gentleman from Michigan will not want it to be laid over. When it is again read he may see no objection to it at all.

The report was again read.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, does the present consideration of this require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is made that it shall lie over for one day, the Chair will be compelled to recognize it.

Mr. HENLEY. Then I make that point of order, that this report lie over one day for consideration.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask also that the report be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CHARLES BUSS.

Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent (for his colleague, Mr. VAN SCHAICK), introduced a bill (H. R. 7625) to remove the charge of desertion from the army record of Charles Buss; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUFFERERS BY OVERFLOW.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 155) for the relief of the sufferers by the overflow of the rivers in Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF MEXICAN WAR.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on the first Monday of last month a motion was pending to suspend the rules to pass the bill (H. R. 807) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war. When the House adjourned debate had been exhausted on this motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to substitute for that bill (H. R. 807) the proposition introduced by myself, and known as bill 6482, which I ask to be read. When it is read I do not think there will be any objection to it on the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the proposed substitute had better be read; after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men, including marines, militia, and volunteers, of the military and naval service of the United States, who, being duly enlisted, actually served sixty days with the Army or Navy of the United States in Mexico, or on the coast or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, in the war with that nation, or were actually in a battle in said war, and were honorably discharged, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried.

SEC. 2. That pensions under section 1 of this act shall be at the rate of $8 per month, and payable only from and after the passage of this act, for and during the natural lives of the persons entitled thereto: Provided, That section 1 of this act shall not apply to any person who is receiving a pension at the rate of $8 per month or more, nor to any person receiving a pension of less than $8 per month, except for the difference between the pension now received (if less than $8 per month) and $8.

SEC. 3. That before the name of any person shall be placed on the pension-roll under this act, proof shall be made, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, of the right of the applicant to a pension; and any person who shall falsely and corruptly take any oath required under this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stricken from the pension-roll the name of any person whenever it shall be made to appear by proof satisfactory to him that such name was put upon such roll through false and fraudulent representations, and that such person is not entitled to a pension under this act. The loss of the certificate of discharge shall not deprive any person of the benefits of this act, but other evidence of enlistment and service and of an honorable discharge may be deemed sufficient: Provided, That when any person has been granted a land warrant, under any act of Congress, for and on account of service in the said war with Mexico, such grant shall be prima facie evidence of his honorable discharge; but such evidence shall not be conclusive, and may be rebutted by evidence that such land warrant was improperly granted.

SEC. 4. That the pension laws now in force which are not inconsistent or in conflict with this act are hereby made a part of this act, so far as they may be applicable thereto.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any attorney, claim agent, or any other person to demand or receive a fee greater than $10 for services rendered in behalf of a claimant under this act, which shall not be demanded or received until such claim is allowed; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be subject to the provisions of section 5485 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 6. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed, so far as the same relates to this act or to provisions under this act.

SEC. 7. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any person while under the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the Speaker to say that under the circumstances it required unanimous consent to introduce this substitute proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ELDREDGE].

The SPEAKER. The Chairs thinks so, because the House has by a vote seconded the motion to suspend the rules and pass the other bill.

Mr. RANDALL. In substance this is a new bill, and I think in asking for unanimous consent there ought to be a request also for unanimous consent, this being a new proposition, that the rule allowing fifteen minutes for debate on each side should be applied to it. [Cries of "That is right!"] It is almost impossible to follow what would be the effect of such legislation as it is read from the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the spirit of the rule of the House, allowing debate for fifteen minutes on each side, would require, when a new proposition is substituted for an old one, the same debate should be had. It is not the same bill the House heretofore debated.

Mr. RANDALL. My suggestion is in the direction of a proper understanding of the measure we are going to be called to vote upon.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to know what the request before the House is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it.

The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to substitute the bill which has just been read for the bill pending on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. What will be the effect of this substitution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just said that in his opinion the spirit of the rule would require the same privilege of debate would exist on this as on the other, for it is a new proposition.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I object, unless it simply effects a substitution with the same right of debate as on the previous bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That, of course, would be the result.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BAYNE. I object.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then I withdraw the substitute.

The SPEAKER. It is not before the House, objection having been made.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I now send to the desk to be added to the pending bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is a motion in order to withdraw the original bill?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order. It could only be done by unanimous consent, as the House has so far acted upon it as to second the motion by a vote.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1270) to authorize the Mississippi Water-Power and Boom Company of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River.

Also, that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution (H. Res. 18) for the further distribution of the report of the Public Lands Commission.

Also, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested, a joint resolution (H. Res. 89) providing for the distribution of the Official Register of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a resolution of the following title:

Concurrent resolution providing for the binding of the schedules of the second, third, fourth, and tenth censuses of the United States.

MEXICAN PENSION BILL.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Speaker, I now ask that the amendment I have sent up be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Would it be in order to move to reconsider the vote seconding the previous question, and by that means put us back where we were when the motion was made calling for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. There was no demand made for the previous question. This is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill; and under the rules of the House all such motions must be seconded by a vote of a majority of the House. But under another rule of the House motions to reconsider a vote must be made on the same or succeeding day, so that it is now too late to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Michigan, that if he could be permitted to withdraw the pending proposition, which came from his committee on his motion or by the direction of the committee, this being a day for individual recognition for suspensions of the rules—if he could be recognized immediately thereafter by the Chair in his individual right, he could then present the substitute which has been already presented by him and read from the desk.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Michigan has not asked permission to withdraw the bill.

Mr. WOLFORD. I object to its withdrawal. I want to vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. As we can have neither debate nor amendment, we may as well have the regular order.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to know if any gentleman rose in his place and addressed the Chair objecting to the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan?

The SPEAKER. Which proposition?

Mr. HATCH. To offer a substitute for the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left [Mr. BAYNE] rose in his seat and objected; and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] now demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection to the proposed amendment.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. As the committee by offering this resolution has indicated its dissatisfaction with the former bill, could we not vote down that bill, and then under a recognition of the Chair get the new bill before the House for its action?

The SPEAKER. Of course the House can vote as it chooses on the bill. It was not offered, however, by a committee, but by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ELDREDGE] in his individual capacity as a Representative.

The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 73, noes 45.

Mr. ELDREDGE and Mr. MCMILLIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being 35 in the affirmative and 106 in opposition to the demand.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask that the bill be again read. It has been some time since it was read, when this motion was first submitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If this is the bill which was read some weeks ago when this motion was first submitted, I object to its being read again.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the gentleman from Indiana is too late in making his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that the objection comes too late, having announced that there was no objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan; and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the names of all the surviving officers, soldiers, and sailors who enlisted and served in the war with Mexico for any period during the years 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848 and were honorably discharged, and their surviving widows, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month, from and after the passage of this act, during their lives.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry this act into effect: Provided, That where it shall appear that a discharge is lost, secondary evidence may be permitted; and where it shall apper an applicant has received a land warrant, that shall be sufficient evidence of an honorable discharge, unless the evidence shows that he procured it by fraud: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to persons under political disabilities.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 156, nays 68, not voting 99; as follows:

YEAS—156.

Allen, C. H.	Eldredge,	Jones, J. H.	Ryan,
Anderson, C. M.	Ellsberry,	Jones, J. T.	Sadler,
Baker,	Farquhar,	King,	Sayers,
Ballentine,	Findlay,	Kleiner,	Seney,
Barbour,	Fisher,	Laird,	Seymour,
Barksdale,	Fleeger,	Landes,	Shaw,
Barnes,	Foran,	Lanham,	Singleton,
Barry,	Ford,	Lawler,	Skinner,
Beach,	Forney,	Le Fevre,	Smalls,
Bennett,	Fuller,	Lore,	Snyder,
Blanchard,	Funston,	Lovering,	Sowden,
Bland,	Gay,	Lowry,	Springer,
Bound,	Geddes,	Markham,	Stahlnecker,
Boyle,	Gibson, C. H.	Martin,	Stewart, Charles
Brady,	Glass,	Matson,	Stone, W. J., of Mo.
Breckinridge, C. R.	Glover,	McAdoo,	Storm,
Breckinridge, W. C. P.	Goff,	McCreary,	Swope,
Burnes,	Green, R. S.	McMillin,	Symes,
Bynum,	Green, W. J.	McRae,	Taulbee,
Campbell, J. E.	Hale,	Morrill,	Taylor, J. M.
Candler,	Hall,	Morrow,	Thompson,
Catchings,	Halsell,	Murphy,	Tucker,
Clardy,	Hatch,	Neal,	Viele,
Clements,	Hayden,	Neece,	Wade,
Cobb,	Heard,	Negley,	Wadsworth,
Cole,	Henderson, D. B.	Nelson,	Wakefield,
Conger,	Henderson, J. S.	O'Ferrall,	Ward, J. H.
Cooper,	Henley,	O'Hara,	Warner, William
Cowles,	Herbert,	O'Neill, J. J.	Weaver, A. J.
Cox,	Herman,	Owen,	Weaver, J. B.
Crain,	Hiestand,	Payson,	Wellborn,
Crisp,	Hill,	Peel,	Wheeler,
Croxton,	Holman,	Peters,	White, A. C.
Curtin,	Holmes,	Plumb,	White, Milo
Davidson, A. C.	Howard,	Randall,	Wilkins,
Davidson, R. H. M.	Hutton,	Reid, J. W.	Willis,
Dibble,	Irion,	Richardson,	Wilson,
Dockery,	Johnston, J. T.	Robertson,	Wolford,
Eden,	Johnston, T. D.	Rogers,	Worthington.

NAYS—68.

Adams, G. E.	Dunham,	James,	Reagan,
Arnot,	Ely,	La Follette,	Reed, T. B.
Bayne,	Everhart,	Long,	Romeis,
Blount,	Felton,	Lyman,	Scranton,
Boutelle,	Gallinger,	McComas,	Sessions,
Bragg,	Gilfillan,	McKinley,	Steele,
Browne, T. M.	Grout,	Millard,	Stephenson,
Brumm,	Guenther,	Norwood,	Stewart, J. W.
Buck,	Hammond,	O'Donnell,	Stone, E. F.
Bunnell,	Harris,	O'Neill, Charles	Swinburne,
Burleigh,	Haynes,	Osborne,	Taylor, E. B.
Cutcheon,	Hemphill,	Parker,	Thomas, O. B
Daniel,	Henderson, T. J.	Payne,	Tillman,
Davis,	Hewitt,	Perkins,	Turner,
Dawson,	Hiscock,	Perry,	Wait,
Dingley,	Hitt,	Phelps,	Warner, A. J.
Dorsey,	Hopkins,	Price,	Whiting.

NOT VOTING—99.

Adams, J. J.	Dargan,	Louttit,	Rowell,
Aiken,	Davenport,	Mahoney,	Sawyer,
Allen, J. M.	Dougherty,	Maybury,	Scott,
Anderson, J. A.	Dowdney,	McKenna,	Spooner,
Atkinson,	Dunn,	Merriman,	Spriggs,
Belmont,	Ermentrout,	Miller,	St. Martin,
Bingham,	Evans,	Milliken,	Stone, W. J., of Ky.
Bliss,	Frederick,	Mills,	Strait,
Brown, C. E.	Gibson, Eustace	Mitchell,	Struble,
Brown, W. W.	Grosvenor,	Moffatt,	Tarsney,
Buchanan,	Hanback,	Morgan,	Taylor, I. H.
Burrows,	Harmer,	Morrison,	Taylor, Zach.
Butterworth,	Hepburn,	Muller,	Thomas, J. R.
Cabell,	Hires,	Oates,	Throckmorton,
Caldwell,	Houk,	Outhwaite,	Townshend,
Campbell, Felix	Hudd,	Pettibone,	Trigg,
Campbell, J. M.	Jackson,	Pidcock,	Van Eaton,
Campbell, T. J.	Johnson, F. A.	Pindar,	Van Schaick,
Cannon,	Kelley,	Pirce,	Ward, T. B.
Carleton,	Ketcham,	Pulitzer,	Weber,
Caswell,	Laffoon,	Ranney,	West,
Collins,	Lehlbach,	Reese,	Winans,
Compton	Libbey,	Rice,	Wise.
Comstock,	Lindsley,	Riggs,	Woodburn.
Culberson,	Little,	Rockwell,

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

The following members were announced as paired on all questions until further notice:

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. SPOONER.
Mr. HUDD with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.
Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.
Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, with Mr. PIRCE.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. LEHLBACH.
Mr. DARGAN with Mr. STRUBLE.
Mr. MORGAN with Mr. HEPBURN.
Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. MILLIKEN.
Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. LOUTTIT.
Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. WEST.
Mr. CABELL with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. STRAIT was announced as paired with Mr. BUCHANAN, until April 8.

Mr. WISE was announced as paired with Mr. HARMER, until Tuesday next.

Mr. OATES was announced as paired with Mr. CANNON, on this vote.

The following members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr BROWN, of Ohio.
Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. ROCKWELL.
Mr. MILLS with Mr. LINDSLEY.
Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. MCKENNA.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR.
Mr. RIGGS with Mr. HIRES.
Mr. PINDAR with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.
Mr. BLISS with Mr. CASWELL
Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr. EVANS.
Mr. DUNN with Mr. ROWELL.
Mr. WARD, of Indiana, with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. COLLINS with Mr. RICE.
Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. PETTIBONE.
Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. ATKINSON.
Mr. MULLER with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. WINANS with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.
Mr. CARLETON with Mr. LIBBEY.
Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. KETCHAM.
Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. LITTLE.
Mr. VAN EATON with Mr. GROSVENOR.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. HOUK, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PETTIBONE, for this day, on account of ill health.

To Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, until Wednesday, April 7, on account of important business.

To Mr. MITCHELL, for three days, April 8 inclusive, on account of important business.

SETTLERS ON LANDS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. LAIRD. I move that the rules be suspended, that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and that the same be passed with an amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of reimbursing persons, and the grantees, heirs, and devisees of persons, who, under the homestead, pre-emption, or other laws, settled upon or purchased lands within the grant made by an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas Railroad and Telegraph," approved July 23, 1866, and to whom patents have been issued therefor, but against which persons, or their grantees, heirs, or devisees decrees have been or may hereafter be rendered by the United States circuit court on account of the priority of said grant made in the act above entitled, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as shall be required for said purpose, is hereby appropriated: Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be paid to any one of said parties until he shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of the said decree, duly certified, and also a certificate of the judge of said court rendering the same, to the effect that such a decree was rendered in a bona fide controversy between a plaintiff showing title under the grant made in said act and a defendant holding the patent or holding by deed under the patentee, and that the decision was in favor of the plaintiff on the ground of the priority of the grant made by said act to the filing, settlement, or purchase by the defendant or his grantor; and said claimant shall also file with the said decree and certificate a bill of the costs in such case, duly certified by the clerk and judge of said court. Thereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the amount due to each defendant on the basis of what he shall have paid, not exceeding $3.50 per acre for the tract his title to which shall have failed as aforesaid, and the costs appearing by the bill thereof. He shall then make a requisition upon the Treasury for the sum found to be due to such claimant, or his heirs and devisees or assigns, and shall pay the same to him, taking such release, acquittance, or discharge as shall forever bar any further claim against the United States on account of the failure of the title as aforesaid: Provided further, That when any person, his grantees, heirs, assigns, or devisees, shall prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that his case is like the case of those described in the preceding portions of this act, except that he has not been sued and subjected to judgment as hereinbefore provided, and that he has in good faith paid to the person holding the prior title by the grant herein referred to the sum demanded of him without litigation, such Secretary shall pay to such person such sum as he has so paid not exceeding $3.50 per acre, taking his release therefor as hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add, as an additional section, the following:

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall only apply to the actual and bona fide settlers on the land therein referred to, and no one person shall be entitled to the benefits of this act for compensation for more than 160 acres of land: Provided, That all other persons who purchased any part of said land at $1.25 per acre, and the money was actually paid into the Treasury, shall be entitled to repayment of the money so actually paid by them."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAMMOND. I demand a second for the purpose of getting some explanation. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. LAIRD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands of the last Congress. Under the new rules it went in this Congress to the Committee on Claims, and is now favorably reported from that committee. It grows out of this state of facts: By the act of Congress of July 23, 1866, a grant of land was made to the State of Kansas in aid of the Denver and Saint Joseph Railroad Company. Land to the extent of ten alternate sections upon either side of the road was granted, the title to pass when the line of the road should be definitely fixed. Nothing was done by the railway company under this grant until the 25th of March, 1870, when a map of definite location of the line of the road was filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. Under the law as it then stood, and as it stands to-day, the public lands which were affected by the grant remained open to settlement until this map was filed.

The land lay in a section of the Union which was desirable, and a tide of immigration was then sweeping over the West, so that the land subject to this grant was being rapidly settled down to the time when the map of definite location was filed, which, as I have said, was on the 25th of March, 1870. The notice of the filing of the map did not reach the local land offices until the 13th of April of the same year; and between the 25th of March and the 13th day of April (no notice having reached the section of country affected by the grant) entries of different kinds—homestead, pre-emption, and private entries—were of course permitted by the local land offices. The lands affected by this bill lie in six counties of the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and during the period between the two dates which I have mentioned one hundred and ninety-six different entries were made.

The question was presented to the Interior Department as to whether or not entries which were made in ignorance of the fact of the filing in the Interior Department of this map of definite location were valid and would be recognized. Upon that question being presented, the local land offices held, and so did the Secretary of the Interior, that the map of definite location did not affect the title to lands entered up to the time when notice of the filing was received at the local land offices. On appeal that opinion of the local land offices was sustained in the Interior Department, and was acquiesced in by the railroad company. In that way matters went along until 1879.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. LAIRD. I give the gentleman a few minutes more.

Mr. PAYSON. These entries were made in 1870, and matters ran along without change until 1879. The decision of the Interior Department remained undisturbed, and acquiesced in by the railway company.

In 1879 the railway company became insolvent and went into the hands of a receiver, and the lands to which the company was entitled were sold at receiver's sale A gentleman named Knevals became the purchaser, and he set up the claim that he, as successor to the railroad company, was entitled to these lands which had been entered at the time I have stated. Litigation began. The question was tried in the circuit court and appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is the case of Van Wyck vs. Knevals, which is reported in 106 United States Reports, and the Supreme Court there held, for the first time in a case of this kind, that the map of definite location took effect at the time of its filing in the Interior Department, and that therefore the titles to the lands entered within the period I have stated failed.

Now, this bill simply proposes to allow actual settlers who are in possession of these lands to the amount that they have to pay to buy in the outstanding railroad title, not exceeding $3.50 an acre; and as to those who are not in possession it provides that they may be allowed to receive back the $1.25 per acre which they paid the Government, which was turned into the Treasury and has remained there up to the present time. This bill was practically unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands in the last Congress, and I understand that it is unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims in the present Congress. It has passed the Senate——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAIRD resumed the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I can hardly hope in two minutes to give the House any intelligent idea of this important bill. It appropriates $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of reimbursing certain settlers on lands in Kansas for the sums they were obliged to pay in order to perfect the title which the Government had given them for lands which proved to have been railroad lands at the time when the Government patented them to these settlers. The parties for whose relief this bill is intended located homestead, pre-emption, and other claims, under the land laws of the United States, on certain lands in Kansas during the period between the 25th day of March and the 15th day of April, 1870, a period of twenty-one days, and, as to the claims so located during that period, it became a question whether the lands belonged to the Government of the United States or to this railroad company. The Supreme Court has held that the lands belonged to the railroad company. The Supreme Court afterward decided that the land belonged to the railroad company, although the Government had issued patents for the land and taken the money from the actual settlers for those patents. By a compromise between the settlers, the railroad company, and the grantees of the railroad company, the settlers were compelled to pay from $1.25 to $2.75 and $3 an acre to the railroad company and its grantees in order to perfect the titles which the Government had already undertaken to convey to them, when in fact the Government had no title, as the Supreme Court held. This bill is for the purpose of carrying out the guarantee of the Government of the United States to make good its title to the land which it sold—a thing which any individual would be bound to do in the courts of the country.

Mr. HAMMOND. I know nothing of this bill except what I have learned from the fifteen-minute debate. I asked a second on this motion only to get such information as the House ought to have before voting on the proposition. It seems to me very plain that if by mistake—and nothing but mistake is claimed—no fraud is alleged; if by mistake the Government sold to anybody lands which it did not own and obtained for it $1.25 an acre, the Government ought to pay back that $1.25 an acre. But upon what principle the Government is called on to pay back what these parties paid to somebody else to secure the land, when they found that the Government's patent to them was not good, I am at a loss to understand. Suppose they had paid $150 an acre to these parties, then on the same principle the Government ought to be called on to pay that amount to these settlers. I think the right thing for the Government to do is to pay back the $1.25 an acre, and if the Government ever paid interest I would say it should in this case pay interest upon the $1.25 an acre. But there is, as I understand, no principle upon which the Government can be called upon to reimburse to these persons the money which they have seen proper to pay to the railroad company after finding that their title was not good. If any gentleman can explain upon what principle such a claim rests I will yield to him.

Mr. SPRINGER. Many of these persons are homesteaders, who paid nothing to the Government, but went upon the land and made valuable improvements, and when they discovered that they had acquired no title the land was worth $10 or $15 an acre. The railroad company and its grantees compromised with them by accepting from $1.25 to $3 an acre, and these settlers mortgaged their lands for this money in order to perfect their titles.

Mr. LAIRD. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will allow me to make one suggestion. He says there is no rule by which the Government ought to reimburse these settlers to the extent of more than $1.25 per acre. Now, there are two considerations which necessarily apply here. In the first instance, the private purchasers of this land did get it for $1.25 an acre; but after the railroad was located it became double minimum land and they had to pay $2.50 an acre.

Mr. HAMMOND. Well, whatever amount the Government got from anybody under mistake the Government ought to pay back, and pay it back as quickly as possible. But that which the Government did not get the Government ought not to pay back. Now, it is confessed that this bill covers two propositions: It not only proposes to make good the title of the Government, but to pay back what these persons, in a contract with which the Government had nothing to do, agreed to pay, in order to buy a title, not from the Government, but from the railroad company.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask my friend what would be the measure of damages if an individual had sold land to which he had no title, and was required in a chancery suit to make good his title?

Mr. HAMMOND. There would be no chancery suit about it; there would be an action at law on the warranty, and the measure of damages would be the purchase-money, with interest.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the second section of this bill may be read again, so that the gentleman from Georgia may see that the principle he announces is applied to all the land except where there was actual settlement upon it. I hope he will listen to the reading.

The Clerk again read the second section of the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. One other remark. It is proposed to pay to certain persons who never paid the Government anything as much as those persons paid to the railroad company to buy the lands. These persons went on lands that the Government, when the grant was made, supposed it owned; they staid on those lands for years. There is no evidence that the mesne profits did not amount to as much as, or more than, they expended upon the property. When they found they had no title, they went to the railroad company and bought its title. Now, this bill proposes to pay out of the United States Treasury to these people who never paid the Government a dollar what they paid to the railroad company.

Mr. LAIRD. That is a mistake.

A MEMBER. The bill proposes to reimburse them to the extent of $3.50 per acre.

Mr. HAMMOND. The principle is the same, whether the amount be $3.50 or $300 per acre.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me put a question to the gentleman. Suppose the Government invites settlers to go upon certain land, takes their money, allows them to establish their homes there, and make improvements; and after they have lived there nine or ten years, with their title unquestioned, it turns out upon judicial determination that the Government has no title at all. Does the gentleman say that in such a case the Government ought not to make that title good? Does he commit himself to that doctrine?

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman commits himself against a plain doctrine of the law.

Mr. PAYSON. Permit me to make another inquiry right there.

Mr. HAMMOND. Let me answer that first, and then you may ask another just as long. He who buys from the Government office under the law buys with a knowledge that if the Government had no title at the time of that sale he got no title. He buys with a knowledge the decision in the local district may be wrong, that the Interior Department may be wrong, and the only way finally to decide is by the court. And when the court does finally decide it he is like anybody else, he knows that he has been living on Government land without authority for years and has paid nothing for it.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMMOND. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will yield then for five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. PAYSON. Before the gentleman from Georgia yielded the floor he promised to answer another question.

Mr. HAMMOND. All right.

Mr. PAYSON. Is it not as old as the horn-books of the law itself in reference to real estate that where the party is in possession under warranty whatever he has to pay to mature the vendor's title he may recover back?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not know that from the horn-books or any other source.

Mr. CRISP. That is not the law.

Mr. PAYSON. It is the law in my State, and I have no doubt it is the law in the gentleman's State—Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. No; it is not.

Mr. HAMMOND. There is but one measure of damages on warranty, and that is the purchase-money and interest. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill not only makes the Government liable to those who paid for their lands, but it also proposes to make the Government liable to pay some men who settled on the land and never paid the Government for it. If I understood the reading of the bill correctly—and perhaps I did not; and if I did not some gentleman will correct me—it goes on, after providing for these cases, to say that any other persons in like condition shall be paid under this as a general law.

Mr. LAIRD. No; it does not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Only whatever he had to pay to get his title.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Government is only to reimburse what the party has paid, then I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. LAIRD. That is all.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman understands as well as I do it does provide for paying those who never paid the Government a dollar, and there are numbers in that condition.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask if much of this land was not homesteaded, and of course that nothing but homestead fees were paid upon it?

Mr. LAIRD. They paid $2.50 an acre for the land.

Mr. HOLMAN. A dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. LAIRD. No, $2.50.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana for three minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the general principle announced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] as to the law of warranty is undoubtedly correct, that the amount to be recovered is the purchase-money with interest, and I think that principle is properly applied to those men who purchased and made actual settlement. It was for that reason I suggested to the gentleman from Nebraska an amendment to the second section of the bill, to pay to those who actually settled upon the land the sum paid by them, $1.25 per acre. Nothing but the money actually paid should be refunded, as it is against public policy they should purchase without entry. But the Government held out inducements to settle these lands under the homestead and other laws, and in the case of an actual settler moving his family, which implies improvement of the land, putting up fences, &c., it seems to me the Government should adopt a different rule from that which would apply to a private warranty in a deed; that there the Government should refund within reasonable limits to those persons who entered upon the land under the Government's warranty or patent; that it should pay the reasonable sum required to perfect the title. That rule should apply in that case only, and not the rule of law which only entitles a grantee to recover back the actual sum paid with interest. It was on that principle I suggested in the second section the amendment which has been incorporated into it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The concession is all I desire. That what I stated was the law, and this bill does not therefore conform to the law. It does not conform to the law except as to certain portions of it——

Mr. MORRISON. This bill proposes to make law.

Mr. HAMMOND. And it embraces people who have paid nothing to the Government for their lands. It asks the Government to pay them for what they have had the use and occupancy of without expense. It can not be amended to meet the defects which are manifest in it, since this is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment reported by the committee, and because, while it has much in it which I think is proper, there is a great deal in it also that is bad. I can not support the bill.

Mr. LAIRD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has six minutes remaining.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think this Government is big enough to do precisely what is right, without regard to legal technicalities. When appealed to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] my friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] seemed to shrink from the inequity and injustice of the position he would have the House assume with reference to this bill, namely, to limit this relief to exactly what a court would award were the matter between private individuals.

The gentleman from Illinois asked, "Is this right?" repeating the measure of relief insisted upon by my friend from Georgia. The gentleman would not answer that specifically, but went on to state what was the strict letter of law. But the fact is, sir, the Government told these people to go onto the lands, paying a certain sum of money, and make their homes thereon. They did it under that authority from the Government, and under the sanction of repeated decisions of the Land Department, which the people of this country have a right to regard as sufficiently reliable to act upon. With this understanding they went to work and made their homes. Some doubtless expended the fruits of years of toil in improving what they thought was their own, and to which many of them had obtained United States patents, and all had paid for in good faith. Then here comes this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, by which it is held that these patents that purported to convey title to this property by the Government are invalid, and that the Government had no title to convey.

The position then is this: They have made large expenditures—all they could afford—thinking and being told by the Government that they had title to the land. They did not calculate on being called upon to pay an additional sum to a railroad company to validate the title which they supposed they had from the Government, or which had been theretofore conveyed by the Government; and the Public Lands Committee thought it a hardship to hold them to the strict letter of the law, and to limit the amount of money to be paid them simply to the sum paid by them to the Government. Upon the faith that they had title from the Government many of them had gone in debt and encumbered their property. As to the legal proposition, I believe the gentleman from Georgia has stated correctly the rule of law as to the measure of damages to be recovered on eviction by the grantee from the grantor, which is the purchase-price with legal interest. But the Public Lands Committee considered this as a matter of justice and right, and came to the conclusion that these people ought to be reimbursed for their expenditures in validating their title, and upon this construction the Committee formulated this bill.

Mr. MCRAE. Before my colleague takes his seat, let me state to him that this bill does not come from the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HENLEY. That is true. I erroneously stated the Public Lands Committee. At the last session of Congress it was before the Public Lands Committee, and I got the action of that committee at the last Congress confounded with this. At this session this bill went to the Committee on Claims; but was heretofore, in the Forty-eighth Congress, reported favorably by the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. LAIRD. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I know that this is one of the most meritorious bills that has ever been brought before the American Congress for its consideration. I know that no rule of law as laid down by the gentleman from Georgia ought to prevail in this case which would deprive these people of their rights. But conceding that he has stated what the law is, here are the facts in the case: That these settlers have been upon these lands as required for five years. During the whole of these five years the decisions of the Government have been with the settlers; first by the local land office, and second a reversal of that by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and then by the Secretary of the Interior was a confirmation of the original judgment of the local land office; and for five years the Government was behind the settler, and that is the compensation after he paid for the land and five years of occupation.

Mr. SPRINGER. And after that it went to the courts and was there for several years.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. And for five years the Government of the United States was behind the settlers, and not until this railroad had gone into bankruptcy, not until there had been an assignment, was the case ever adjudicated in the courts of the United States. I know that no rule as laid down by the gentleman from Georgia, notwithstanding that was the law as between grantor and grantee, ought to prevail in this case.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAIRD. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, during the last two days of the Forty-eighth Congress I had charge of the contested-election case of Frederick vs. Wilson, and under the vote of the House that was entitled to the right of way. Believing it to be a just and equitable contention on the part of Mr. Frederick, and deeming it proper to defeat every measure which came in the way of Mr. Frederick's contention, when the member from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] obtained recognition and asked that this bill be called up I made objection, because I thought it was a measure which would come in conflict with Mr. Frederick's case. I have considered the question presented by this bill and the report thereon since then with care, and have made deep scrutiny into its merits. I am satisfied that I did a wrong to the member from Nebraska at that time, and embrace the earliest possible opportunity of repairing that wrong. [Applause.]

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, in 1870 from two hundred to two hundred and fifty heads of familes took up and settled upon some 50,000 acres of the public domain in six counties of the second Congressional district of Nebraska. They improved these lands in compliance with the law, perfected their settlement, and obtained patents. They were in peaceful occupation of the lands for ten years. At the end of that time they were subjected to a suit by the grantees of the Saint Joseph and Denver Railroad, who laid claim to these lands by reason of a grant of Congress made in 1866. In this suit judgment was rendered against the settlers, and on appeal that judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The settlers to-day stand subject to a judgment of ouster, banished from their homes by a decree of the court, and a master's deed is on record conveying their lands, held by the patents of the United States, to the grantees of the railroads. They are subject at any moment to forcible eviction.

The equity in their case consists in this: These lands were open to entry and were entered by them while ignorant of the existence of this grant. When the grant became known, the question whether the lands went to the railroad under the grant or to the settlers under their claims was contested in the local land office and a judgment rendered favorable to the settlers. Those claiming under the railroad appealed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and a judgment against the settlers was rendered. From this the settlers appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, who rendered a final judgment favorable to the settlers. In compliance with this judgment and the law the settlers obtained patents to the lands and held them peaceably for ten years, only to be subject to judicial eviction at the end of that time by the Supreme Court of the United States. Had the Government decided in 1870 that the lands passed to the railroad under the grant, the settlers could have obtained other claims as good without expense. To-day they can not obtain other lands of the Government anywhere on the continent that are the equal of those which they will be compelled to abandon if this bill shall not pass.

Gentlemen say the Government is not bound to make good its patents. I say the Government is bound to do justice by its citizens, and if the gentlemen of the South ask for precedents they are not wanting.

In the case of the Mississippi territory, the Government of the United States paid $5,000,000 to settle a case exactly parallel with this. In Virginia it paid $25,000 to quiet titles arising from a conflict between a grant and a land warrant, and this has been the rule from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] limits the liability of the Government to the restoration of the money received and the interest. This is the rule that would be applied to a breach of warranty in an action on the covenants. The relations between a citizen and his government is not to be measured by the narrow rules of a nisi prius court. The one owes allegiance, the other protection. It is not the province of this Government to oppress its citizens, to avoid its liabilities, or to measure out justice by the fraction. This is not a court of law. We are not construing or administering law—we are making law; and while we are at it, it is advisable to make it big enough to fit the case. We are bound to do this or nothing.

In the sense of the rules and the courts the Government warrants nothing. In the great sense of its relation of Government to the governed it warrants everything, for it is a guarantee of justice to its citizens; it is justice, or it is nothing. To pay these settlers what they have paid the Government and call that justice is to ignore their years of toil and hundreds of thousands of dollars of improvement. Those who took homesteads, for instance, paid only $14 and $18 in money—the land-office fees. They paid, in fact, what was more precious than dollars and cents. They paid years of time and labor, they mixed hope and courage with their sweat, and they conquered a desert with their toil. They built their homes upon it, and to-day those homes are filled with families that love not only the land they live upon, but the Government that gave them that land, and they hold themselves and all they have in trust for the good of the country they love, and which owes them what no man or nation can leave unpaid—it owes them justice. What they ask of you to-day is that this Government—their Government—will make good its patent, which has failed to their damage, not by the fault of the settlers, but by the fault of the officers of the Land Department of the Government.

Had the Land Office, at the time these lands were taken and contested, decided that the settlers had no claim and could get no valid title by completing their settlement, then they could have taken other lands equally as good and absolutely unaffected by this or any other grant. But as the officers charged with the administration of the land affairs of the Government said their claims were good, they were compelled to go on; and now that they have lost their homes by the decision of another branch of the Government, it becomes Congress to do equity, and the measure of that equity is what it will cost those settlers to make good the title which the Government gave them, and that can only be done by buying in the better title of those who claim through the grant of Congress to the railroad in question.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate under the rule has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment which has been read.

The question was taken.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 16.

Mr. HAMMOND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. LAIRD, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HAMMOND.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 145, noes 22.

So the rules were suspended (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to suspend the rules and that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 44) providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex., and that the same be passed with the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of San Antonio, Tex. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $200,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are as follows:

In line 11, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$150,000."

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodation for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plans for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $150,000 for site and building."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STORM. Yes; I ask for a second.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for the debate—fifteen in favor of the proposition and fifteen against it.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. DIBBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 44) to provide for a public building at San Antonio, Tex., submit the following report:

A bill similar to the present measure passed the Senate of the Forty-eighth Congress at its first session, and one of like character was favorably reported to the House about the same time, but, from some cause unknown to the committee, was not called up in the House.

San Antonio, according to the census taken by the city authorities for scholastic purposes, about a year since, had then a population of more than 39,000. This population is rapidly growing, and shows an increase over the census taken in 1880 of near 20,000. The assessment-rolls of the city for the year 1885 show the valuation of the property, within the city limits, to be $15,075,054 subject to taxation, being an increase of $6,638,498 over the assessment of 1880.

The long lines of railway—the one connecting Saint Louis, Mo., and Laredo, Tex., and forming direct connection with Monterey and Saltillo, Mexico; the other known as the Southern Pacific, and connecting New Orleans, La., with the Pacific coast—intersect each other at this place, and a third railroad is now being rapidly built from San Antonio to Aransas Pass on the Gulf of Mexico, to be afterward extended to the northwest.

The business of the city is rapidly accumulating, and each year adds largely not only to its population, but also to its taxable property. San Antonio is well supplied with a good system of street railways, and is the headquarters of the Military Department of Texas, with quartermaster, commissary, and ordnance stores for general distribution, and a post is being built to accommodate twelve companies of troops. The United States circuit and district courts are also held at this place.

The excess of the receipts over the expenditures of the post-office for the year ending November 15, 1885, was $19,573.70; the number of money-orders and postal notes issued was 14,449, and covered the amount of $212,506.81; and the number of money-orders and postal notes paid was 20,177, and covered the amount of $366,700.85; the number of post-offices depositing surplus money-order funds at San Antonio is twenty-six.

The circuit and district courts of the United States were established at San Antonio on the 24th day of February, 1879, and the first civil business filed therein was on the 9th day of August, 1879, and from that date until November 25, 1885, there were instituted in said courts 779 criminal and 331 civil cases, and there were pending on the day last mentioned in said courts 101 criminal cases and 54 civil cases. The territorial jurisdiction of said courts embraces thirty-seven counties, containing a population of not less than 300,000, and embracing an area of at least 35,000 square miles.

The Government pays an annual rent of $2,500 for the use of such buildings as are necessary for court-house and post-office purposes. The courts and the post-office occupy separate buildings. These buildings are very insecure and are subject to be destroyed by fire at any time, and are inconvenient for the purposes used. The Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General both recommended the erection of a public building at this place to the Forty-eighth Congress, and the Treasury Department estimated the cost of the ground for site and of the building at $200,000. But in the opinion of the committee the sum of $150,000 is sufficient for this purpose.

A report similar in its particulars to this report has been made during the present session by this committee, and the committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments

(1) Strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty" between the words "sum of" and "thousand."

(2) Add to the bill the following words: "Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodation for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site or plans for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $150,000 for site and building."

The SPEAKER. If there is no further debate, the question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments which have been read.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5550) to provide for the erection of a public building at Duluth, Minn., and that the same be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults extending to each story, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, land-office, custom-house, signal-office, and the courts of the United States, at Duluth, in the State of Minnesota. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor place for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building independent and unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Minnesota shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the services of civil processes therein.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask a second, that we may have some explanation or else have the report read.

By unanimous consent the second was considered as ordered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HENLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1268) for the erection of a public building at Duluth, Minn., beg leave to report:

Duluth is situated at the westernmost extremity of Lake Superior, in the State of Minnesota, and is next to the cities of Saint Paul and Minneapolis in population and commercial importance. It has a large and commodious harbor, on which the city has expended over $100,000 and the Federal Government over $400,000. It is the terminus of four important lines of railroad, namely: the Manitoba, the Omaha, the Saint Paul and Duluth, and the Northern Pacific. Two other important lines of railroad, with Duluth for terminus, are in process of construction and will be completed at an early day. It is the water outlet, down the lakes and through the canals, to the seaboard for the produce of the Territories of Dakota and Montana and the State of Minnesota. During the year 1884 there was an arrival and clearance of 1,791 vessels, with a tonnage of 1,167,192 tons, and during 1885 there was a large increase in this respect, but the exact figures are not yet at hand nor made up In 1881, 2,915,567 bushels of wheat were received and handled; in 1882, 4,199,133 bushels; in 1883, 7,636,379 bushels; in 1884, 11,500,000 bushels, and in 1885 about 16,000,000 bushels; and the larger portion, indeed nearly all, of this wheat is shipped by water down the lake to the seaboard.

The gross receipts of the post-office at Duluth for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, were in excess of $20,000 per annum, thus entitling the city to mail-carrier or free-delivery service, which was established and has been in existence since the beginning of the present year. The growth of the town has been marvelous, rapid, and incessant since 1882, and there is no abatement or cessation in the growth. In 1880 the city had less than 4,000 people, while in 1885, by the State census then taken, it appears to have a population of 18,000.

Duluth is a port of entry, and has a custom-house, post-office, United States signal office, and the United States land office. The Government pays an annual rental for public offices as follows:

Custom-house	$600
Land office	300
Signal office	300
Post-office	1,350
Total	2,550

The offices occupied by the custom-house and post-office are wholly insufficient, and larger, more commodious, and more ample quarters will soon have to be secured.

In view of the foregoing facts, your committee are of the opinion that a public building should be erected at Duluth, and therefore recommend the passage of substitute for said bill.

Mr. NELSON. I reserve my time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. On account of the confusion I was unable to learn from the reading of the report whether there was a Federal court in Duluth or not.

Mr. NELSON. No Federal court is held there at present. But there is a United States post-office and a custom-house for all that upper lake region, through which all the traffic between this country and the western part of Canada passes. There is a United States land office and a signal office. The custom-house is the main thing. The Government is at present renting buildings for all these purposes, as the report shows.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If I recollect, it is stated that the rents amount to over $2,000.

Mr. NELSON. It is nearer $3,000. The Government rents a building as an office for what is the chief custom-house on Lake Superior.

Mr. STORM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. Is this the same Duluth that was described by Governor Knott in his celebrated speech?

Mr. NELSON. I suppose it is; but now it is a place of 18,000 inhabitants.

A MEMBER. Then it is not the same Duluth.

Mr. NELSON. We had a State census last year, and from that census Duluth appears, as I have said, to have a population of 18,000. I am unwilling to take up the time of the House unless further information is desired.

Mr. MCMILLIN. One trouble is that sometimes the cost of keeping up a public building will be about what the Government has to pay for rent. I have no particular statement to make about this bill, except that it seems not very wise to erect public buildings where the rentals are no more than the cost of keeping up the building would be if you should erect it. I believe this is the place where Judge Knott said "the sky came down equidistant all around." [Laughter.]

Mr. NELSON. It is the same place.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further debate, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT WAYNE, IND.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3775) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase an additional strip of ground on the east side of the United States court-house and post-office building at Fort Wayne, Ind., to be paid for out of the appropriation already made, and that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase, out of moneys already appropriated for the construction of the United States court-house, post-office, &c., building at Fort Wayne, Ind., a strip of land adjacent to the present site of the said building and on the east thereof, having a frontage of 60 feet on Berry street and running back with same width to an alley: Provided, That in no event shall the cost of said additional land exceed the sum of $9,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; but let it be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection a second will be considered as ordered. Under the rule there are thirty minutes allowed for debate; fifteen minutes in support of the bill and fifteen minutes in opposition.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply provides for the acquisition of an additional strip of ground in order to afford sufficient accommodation for the public building in the city of Fort Wayne and sufficient space between these and other grounds to satisfy the requirements of the law. The bill does not involve any expenditure whatever, no appropriation is made; and, by the terms of the bill, it is expressly provided that this additional ground shall be paid for out of the appropriation already made. I reserve the balance of my time in case there should be any observations made in opposition to the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The motion was agreed to; the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1297) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, and that the bill be now passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] to act as tellers.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. That is objected to.

The tellers reported 150 votes in the affirmative and 15 in the negative.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes in support of the bill and fifteen in opposition to it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I propose that we now take the vote. This matter is thoroughly understood.

Several MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. SINGLETON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my time, and let gentlemen say what they have to say in opposition to the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have demanded a second upon this question because I think that a bill involving the amount that is involved here should receive more careful consideration than this is about to receive. This session being but little more than half exhausted, and one other session of this Congress remaining before its expiration, I think that we could well afford to take more time for the consideration of this bill before we decide to pay from eight to ten dollars a volume for storage room for the Library. This proposition, when simmered down, is a proposition to give more for a place to put the Library than the Library itself has cost.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman does not wish to make any misstatement. The Library, according to the report of the Librarian, has cost $750,000, and this bill proposes to appropriate only $550,000.

Mr. MCMILLIN. This is a proposition to buy the ground on which to build the Library, and does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] claim that the proposed building will cost only $550,000?

Mr. SINGLETON. I understood the gentleman to speak of the cost of the ground.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am talking about the Library building. I say it is proposed by this bill, and what is to follow, to give more for a place to put the books than the books themselves have cost. The gentleman himself now says that the books have cost $750,000, and this, when carried to its ultimate limits, is a proposition to expend from three million to six million dollars for a place to put them. I undertake to say that no man would practice such economy in his own affairs. It is something like the action of a boy when he gets his first pocket-money by donation, and spends more money for his pocket-book than he has left to put in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. It is not unusual for a stable to cost more than the horse that is kept in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is very true, Mr. Speaker; but the gentleman will not claim that his horse-and-stable doctrine will apply to book-cases or a library.

Mr. STEELE. There is no estimating the value of books.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The proposition in this bill is just what I have stated, and now it is proposed to rush the bill through here without discussion, under a suspension of the rules, and without the possibility of amendment.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It has been discussed for ten years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It has been discussed for ten years and the gentleman does not understand it yet.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understand it as well as you do.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have stated a proposition, and gentlemen find it more easy to fire in on that proposition than to deny it or justify the denial.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It is very easy.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is far more easy to do as the gentleman does than to give any sensible reason why we should pay four or five millions for a place to put seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of books in.

But, Mr. Speaker, aside from that, I believe the true policy on this question of a Library is to build, at some point convenient to the Capitol, a place that will be sufficient to accommodate the newspapers, periodicals, and the books of least frequent use, and to keep where they are now a select library of good books such as are needed all the time for use here, for I believe it will turn out to be the fact that 300,000 books where they now are will be of more practical use to Congress (in this Congressional Library) than twice the number half a mile or a mile from the Capitol building. Every one who has had experience knows how convenient it is when time is precious to go to a library immediately at hand and make an examination which often can not be postponed.

Mr. Speaker, no man takes more pride in our Library than I do. I foresee in ours the foundation for one of the greatest collections of books in the world. I would add to it constantly and contribute yearly to its greatness. But when we have many acres of unoccupied Government lands in the city, why go and spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in the purchase of a site on which to build the Library?

Mr. Speaker, as we have but fifteen minutes of time allowed each side in this debate, I will not consume more of it, but yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that no hasty action on this bill will precipitate us into the large, unjustifiable expenditure proposed. This bill, it is true, does not appropriate a very large sum of money, judged by the standard that Congress is now accustomed to consider in appropriations from the Treasury; the great accumulations in the Treasury invite extravagance. One million and fifty thousand dollars is the amount covered by the bill. The building proposed to be erected, according to the plans submitted, will, it is said, cost $2,300,000. Gentlemen, under these speculative estimates can any gentleman tell the ultimate cost? Within twenty-five years a very heavy expenditure has been incurred to enlarge, complete, and make fire-proof the present Congressional Library structure in this Capitol, a Library having many historical memories gathered around it, a Library which our predecessors in the years gone by deemed important for the convenience and information of Congress. It is proposed virtually to abandon that Library, which has been found in past years so exceedingly convenient and valuable to Congress in the current duties of its members, and erect a national library building at great cost at a place not conveniently accessible to Congress during the hours of the session, remote from the center of this national capital, and remote from the greater body of its population, and to expend vast sums of money for that purpose. It is proposed by this bill to appropriate $550,000 for the purchase of a site.

But gentlemen of course are not deceived by that proposition. The site of this building is to cover not merely the ground proposed to be paid for now at $550,000, but as much more to be acquired afterward. You will expend more than $1,000,000 upon the site alone, because it is absolutely certain that additional land will be purchased to complete the plat of land in contemplation. No gentleman who will examine the plat of the land proposed to be taken can be deceived on this point. You will pay more than $1,000,000 for the site alone, yet you have in this capital lands more centrally located owned by the Government—large bodies of land upon which a site can be selected—a site more convenient to the people of the District, and as convenient to Congress as the site proposed in this bill east of the Capitol. What is the object of all this?

I approve, sir, of the view expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], and which I embodied in a substitute for this bill, that the present Congressional Library should be kept up, that the books required for the use of Congress should remain there, that this old Library should not be disturbed, but that a suitable Library building should be erected upon one of the numerous sites now owned by the Government, to be selected by the commissioners of the District; that a reasonable sum of money—$1,000,000, or $2,000,000 even if necessary—be employed in erecting a suitable Library building there, in which the books not required for the use of Congress may be placed for the convenience of the public of this city. This, I think, is a practical plan. That now before us is one of great and unexampled extravagance, and defeats the most important object for which the Congressional Library was established.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this bill for two reasons especially. One is that it proposes to condemn valuable improved property and appropriate it for the site of a Library, when property better situated, more central to the people of the city, and more appropriate for this building is now in the possession of the Government. I shall vote against it for the further reason that I think when we are asked to vote so large a sum of money there ought to be presented to us estimates showing the amount necessary to be expended, and the bill ought to prescribe a limitation upon the expenditure.

This bill makes an appropriation, but it is only for the purchase of the site or possibly for the purchase of a part of the site and for the beginning of the building, without any statement in the bill as to what the Library building is to cost. We have had estimates all the way from two millions and a half to eighteen million dollars for the construction of a Congressional Library.

Mr. Speaker, this subject has been before the House frequently; and I have not been able to comprehend why it has been impossible to get consideration for any site for the Library that has not a "job" in it. Why should we select for this site valuable improved property which is not so convenient for such a building as public grounds which we already have in other parts of the city?

This Library, sir, will be more than a Congressional Library. Whatever we may now suppose about it, it will be a national Library. I am ready, I have been ready all the time, to vote for the necessary appropriation to construct a good Library building if those interested or those managing the subject were willing to consent to the expenditure upon land now belonging to the Government, more central and better suited to the purpose than the land proposed to be purchased under this bill. But I certainly will not consent to vote for a bill presented from session to session which insists continually on the destruction of valuable property, the tearing down of houses, and the appropriation of half a million or a million of dollars to buy a site, when we have already ample grounds better situated on which to erect a Library building.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Many MEMBERS. "Vote!" "Vote!"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, on which he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SINGLETON. I will not say a word except to demand a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 159, nays 63, not voting 101; as follows:

YEAS—159.

Adams, G. E.	Ely,	Kleiner,	Seymour,
Allen, C. H.	Ermentrout,	La Follette,	Shaw,
Anderson, J. A.	Everhart,	Laird,	Singleton,
Arnot,	Farquhar,	Lanham,	Smalls,
Baker,	Fisher,	Lehlback,	Snyder,
Barksdale,	Fleeger,	Long,	Sowden,
Barnes,	Foran,	Lore,	Stahlnecker,
Barry,	Fuller,	Lovering,	Steele,
Bayne,	Funston,	Lyman,	Stephenson,
Beach,	Gay,	McComas,	Stewart, Charles
Belmont,	Geddes,	McKenna,	Stewart, J. W.
Bound,	Gibson, C. H.	McKinley,	Stone, E. F.
Boutelle,	Gilfillan,	Millard,	Strait,
Brady,	Glover,	Moffatt,	Struble,
Breckinridge, C.R.	Goff,	Morrill,	Swinburne,
Breckinridge, WCP.	Green, R. S.	Morrow,	Symes,
Browne, T. M.	Green, W. J.	Negley,	Taulbee,
Brown, W. W.	Grout,	Nelson,	Taylor, E. B.
Brumm,	Guenther,	Oates,	Thomas, O. B.
Buck,	Hall,	O'Donnell,	Thompson,
Bunnell,	Hayden,	O'Ferrall,	Tillman,
Burleigh,	Haynes,	O'Hara,	Tucker,
Burrows,	Hemphill,	O'Neill, Charles	Van Eaton,
Campbell, J. E.	Henderson, D. B.	O'Neill, J. J.	Wade,
Cannon,	Henderson, T. J.	Osborne,	Wadsworth,
Catchings,	Henley,	Owen,	Wait,
Cole,	Herman,	Parker,	Wakefield,
Conger,	Hewitt,	Payne,	Warner, William
Cooper,	Hiestand,	Perkins,	Weaver, A. J.
Cox,	Hill,	Peters,	Weaver, J. B.
Crain,	Hiscock,	Phelps,	Weber,
Curtin,	Holmes,	Plumb,	Wellborn,
Cutcheon,	Hopkins,	Price,	White, A. C.
Davidson, R. H. M.	Irion,	Ranney,	White, Milo
Davis,	Jackson,	Reed, T. B.	Whiting,
Dibble,	James,	Rogers,	Wilkins,
Dingley,	Jones, J. T.	Romeis,	Willis,
Dorsey,	Kelley,	Ryan,	Wilson,
Dunham,	Ketcham,	Sawyer,	Wolford.
Ellsberry,	King,	Scranton,

NAYS—63.

Anderson, C. M.	Davidson, A. C.	Johnston, J. T.	Reagan,
Ballentine,	Dawson,	Johnston, T. D.	Reid, J. W.
Barbour,	Dockery,	Jones, J. H.	Richardson,
Bennett,	Eden,	Landes,	Sadler,
Bland,	Eldredge,	Le Fevre,	Skinner,
Blount,	Ford,	Lowry,	Springer,
Bragg,	Forney,	Martin,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Burnes,	Glass,	Matson,	Storm,
Bynum,	Halsell,	McCreary,	Swope,
Candler,	Hammond,	McRae,	Taylor, J. M.
Clements,	Harris,	Morrison,	Turner,
Cobb,	Hatch,	Neal,	Ward, J. H.
Cowles,	Henderson, J. S.	Neece,	Warner, A. J.
Crisp,	Herbert,	Peel,	Wheeler,
Croxton,	Holman,	Perry,	Worthington.
Daniel,	Hutton,	Randall,

NOT VOTING—101.

Adams, J. J.	Dowdney,	Mahoney,	Rowell,
Aiken,	Dunn,	Markham,	Sayers,
Allen, J. M.	Evans,	Maybury,	Scott,
Atkinson,	Felton,	McAdoo,	Seney,
Bingham,	Findlay,	McMillin,	Sessions,
Blanchard,	Frederick,	Merriman,	Spooner,
Bliss,	Gallinger,	Miller,	Spriggs,
Boyle,	Gibson, Eustace	Milliken,	St. Martin,
Brown, C. E.	Grosvenor,	Mills,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Buchanan,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Tarsney,
Butterworth,	Hanback,	Morgan,	Taylor, I. H.
Cabell,	Harmer,	Muller,	Taylor, Zach.
Caldwell,	Heard,	Murphy,	Thomas, J. R.
Campbell, Felix	Hepburn,	Norwood,	Throckmorton,
Campbell, J. M.	Hires,	Outhwaite,	Townshend,
Campbell, T. J.	Hitt,	Payson,	Trigg,
Carleton,	Houk,	Pettibone,	Van Schaick,
Caswell,	Howard,	Pidcock,	Viele,
Clardy,	Hudd,	Pindar,	Ward, T. B.
Collins,	Johnson, F. A.	Pirce,	West,
Compton,	Laffoon,	Pulitzer,	Winans,
Comstock,	Lawler,	Reese,	Wise,
Culberson,	Libbey,	Rice,	Woodburn.
Dargan,	Lindsley,	Riggs,
Davenport,	Little,	Robertson,
Dougherty,	Louttit,	Rockwell,

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, stated that his colleague, Mr. FREDERICK, was confined to his house by illness.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. FINDLAY with Mr. MCMILLIN, on this bill. If present, Mr. FINDLAY would vote for the bill, Mr. MCMILLIN against it.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. HANBACK.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I wish to state that I was necessarily absent when the vote was taken on the bill providing for measures for the settlement of differences between common carriers and their employés. I was paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. BURLEIGH, and if present would have voted in the affirmative.

On the bill (H. R. 807) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war I was paired with Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, or otherwise I would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 72.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. G. E. ADAMS: Petition against the passage of bill to increase postage on fourth-class matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BOUND: Petition of the Grand Army of the Republic, to place Andrew J. Smith on the retired-list with the rank of brigadier-general—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Knights of Labor of Watsontown, Pa., for the construction of the Hennepin Canal—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. BRADY: Petition of Mrs. B. F. Childrey, of Dinwiddie County; of Peyton A. Tenney, of Prince George County, Va., and of Abraham Eichburg, of Petersburg, Va., asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Remonstrance of 86 citizens of Titusville, Mercer County, New Jersey, against increase of postage rates on fourth-class matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BYNUM: Petition of 500 business men and citizens of Indianapolis, Ind., for the appointment of a committee to investigate whether the telephone service in said State is being discontinued to influence legislation in other States—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, petition of Women's National Indian Association, of Indianapolis, Ind., for the passage of Senate bill No. 52—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COBB: Petition of citizens and soldiers, for the pensioning of all Union soldiers and sailors of the late war at the rate of $8 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, memorial asking Congress to investigate to what extent the National Government may be legally or equitably liable for obligations issued in the name of any of the States, and what it can properly do, with or without the co-operation of the delinquent States, to remove from the country the discredit consequent upon the repudiation or violation of their contracts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Benjamin C. Bowman, for invalid pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: Petition of Knights of Labor Assembly No. 3282, of Raliegh, N. C., against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. CROXTON: Petition of Samuel Fitzhugh, administrator of Henry Fitzhugh, deceased, of Spottsylvania County, Virginia, asking that his claim for property taken by and for the use of the United States Army be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Henry Fitzhugh, of Stafford County, Virginia—to the same committee.

By Mr. CURTIN: Petition of Elizabeth S. De Kraft, praying for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Remonstrance of Local Assembly No. 2363, Knights of Labor, Ludington, Mich., against the passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Also, memorial of Local Assembly No. 3080, Knights of Labor, of Manistee, Mich., favoring liberal appropriations for public works, in the interests of the laboring class—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, papers in the case of Andrew Lafferty, of Muskegon County, Michigan—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DAVIDSON: Petition of citizens of Hornellsville, N. Y., relative to temperance education in schools—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. DORSEY: Petition of Bridget Ryan, for a widow's pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUNHAM: Petition of J. H. Randall, master workman Knights of Labor Assembly No. 1307, of Chicago, Ill., favoring the Hennepin Canal scheme—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, petition of J. M. Foley, recording secretary Knights of Labor Assembly No. 1307, of Chicago, Ill., and of J. Thompson Gill and 8 others, of the first Congressional district of Illinois, favoring the unlimited coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. DUNN: Petition of Maria L. Pettit, praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, for a pension to Jacob Munich—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, memorial asking Congress to investigate to what extent the National Government may be legally or equitably liable for obligations issued in the names of any of the States, and what it can properly do, with or without the co-operation of the delinquent States, to remove from the country the discredit consequent upon the repudiation or violation of their contracts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FELTON: Petition from brewers and wine merchants of San Francisco, Cal., for the allowance of drawbacks on re-exportation of imported bottles, corks, and metallic bottle capping, by bottlers of domestic beer, wine, and brandy—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FISHER: Memorial of Knights of Labor of Salzburg, Mich., asking for liberal appropriations for public improvements—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Sworn statement of James W. Rice, of Garnett, Kans., praying for the passage of a joint resolution requiring the Postmaster-General to obey the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, remonstrance of Knights of Labor of Rosedale, and of Ransomville, Kans., against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. GALLINGER: Petition of Charles D. Purington, for removal of charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GROUT: Testimony in support of House bill granting a pension to Ira Colburn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HATCH: Affidavits in the case of George M. Ochiltree—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, letter relating to claim of H. Chattin, of Glenwood, Mo.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Paper from Van Patten & Marks, from Riderbecke & Miller, from William Thompson, from G. W. Kerker, from Glaspell & Holligan, and from M. J. Eagal, of Davenport, Iowa, showing that the price of vinegar has been reduced since the vaporizing act of 1879 from 50 to 60 per cent.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HISCOCK: Petition of manufacturers of rufflings, cotton laces, and ruchings in New York city—to the same committee.

By Mr. HOLMES: Remonstrance of Knights of Labor of Monigona, of Angus, and of Lehigh, Iowa, against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. JAMES: Memorial of Garrett Erkson—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. J. T. JOHNSTON: Petition of James J. Wyatt, Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, asking relief from charge of desertion, to accompany bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. T. D. JOHNSTON: Petition of Anderson W. Young, for a special-act pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of Mrs. E. C. Ingersoll and 22 others, of Austerlitz, N. Y., for the passage of the temperance-education bill—to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of Mrs. Julia E. Wilkinson and 55 others, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., praying for the passage of Senate bill 52, known as the Sioux bill—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KING: Petition of Arthur Miller, of Madison Parish, Louisiana, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KLEINER: Petition to accompany bill for the relief of William Jenkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of citizens of Colorado and Abeline, Tex., relative to a bill to regulate the transportation of live-stock—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, memorial of Paris Cox and others, relating to the bill to promote peace among nations—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of M. L. Van Barkalon and 69 others, citizens of Kent County, Delaware, for the further improvement of the Saint James River, Delaware—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of James C. Beebe and 155 others, citizens of Lewes, Del., for the passage of a law making qualifications without respect to age the test of right to hold office, and repealing all restrictions because of age only—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Knights of Labor Assembly No. 2067, of Wilmington, Del., in favor of Government aid to Hennepin Canal—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. MORRILL: Remonstrance of the Knights of Labor of Hamlin, and of Wamego, Kans., against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. MORRISON: Memorial of Knights of Labor of Lebanon, Ill., for appropriations of public moneys for improvements on public works—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MORROW: Protest of associations and firms of citizens in California, against the repeal of the duty on salt—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Ladies' Silk Culture Society of California—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of Local Assembly No. 1580, Knights of Labor of San Francisco, Cal., concerning the construction of the Hennepin Canal by the General Government—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. MURPHY: Protest against the repeal of the vaporizing law of 1879—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Knights of Labor of Davenport, Iowa, against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. NEAL: Petition of Elizabeth F. Carter, of Warren County, Tennessee, for invalid pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'DONNELL. Petition of Lucy Hale and 21 citizens of Lansing, Mich., to have Lucy Hale, daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, placed on the pension-rolls—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of Mary Minor Hoxey, widow of Bvt. Maj. Benjamin W. Hoxey, for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'HARA: Memorial asking Congress to investigate to what extent the National Government may be legally or equitably liable for obligations issued in the names of any of the States, and what it can properly do with or without the co-operation of the delinquent States to remove from the country the discredit consequent upon the repudiation or violation of their contracts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PETERS: Petition of citizens of Caldwell, Kans., favoring allowance of rent, &c., to post-offices of third and fourth class—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, affidavits in case of H. E. Van Trees, of Kansas, favoring the allowance of his pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETTIBONE: Testimony to support bill for the relief of L. W. Lowe, of Grainger County, Tennessee—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of citizens of Sea Island City, N. J., for an appropriation to dredge a channel from Cape May City to the Great Bay, north of Atlantic City—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of James L. Holderfield, for back pay—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Patrick F. O'Kane, heir of Patrick O'Kane, deceased, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of Knights of Labor of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of Thomas Kiddy, of Upshur County, West Virginia, asking to be placed on the pension-roll, with accompanying affidavits—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of George H. Houchins, administrator of James Bram-ner, deceased, and of Jesse Bramner, deceased, of Mercer County; of William R. Linsay, of Greenbrier County; of Henry Gunn, of Pocahontas County; of Sarah A. Busher, administrator of William B. Busher, deceased, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Aso, petition of J. D. Coleman, of Fayette County, West Virginia, praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. STEELE: Petition of certain men employed in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Petition of 14 citizens of Pittsville, Wood County, Wisconsin, favoring the continued coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, memorial from the village board of Baldwin, Wis., on the subject of interstate commerce—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STORM: Papers in the case of La Grange Synodical College, of La Grange, Tenn., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Memorial of C. M. Merwin, president, and John T. Stark, E. H. Keely, and Dr. T. J. Dupree, committee of the West Tennessee Horticultural Society, asking for reduced rates of postage on scions, plants, seeds, &c.—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: Petition of A. B. Rodgers, M. E. Gibson, A. L. Rodgers, heirs of James L. Rodgers, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, asking that their war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TOOLE: Memorial of Knights of Labor of Garrison, Mont., asking liberal appropriations for internal improvements—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. TUCKER: Petition of citizens of Virginia for the increase of salaries of judges—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VAN SCHAICK: Petition of Joseph Case, with evidence supporting his application to be restored to the pension-rolls—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of citizens of Milwaukee interested in the manufacture of window glass, protesting against any reduction of tariff rates—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VIELE: Petition and papers for the relief of Alexander Hamilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Petition of Lewis C. Wescott and 43 others, citizens of Bellaire, Ohio, against reduction of duties on glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. B. WEAVER: Petition of Knights of Labor of Oskaloosa, Iowa, against the passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Also, petition of Edward S. Cramp club of workingmen, of Philadelphia, against admitting foreign ships to registry—to the same committee.

Also, petition of M. C. Randleman, of Iowa, and 50 others, praying Congress to pass the bill paying Union soldiers the difference between gold and the depreciated currency they were paid in—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEBER: Petition of citizens of Erie and Wyoming Counties, New York, asking for legislation to protect the dairy interests against imitation and adulteration—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Louisa Ladd, for the reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILSON: Petition of William R. Cook; of George W. Cockrell; of Coleman Brothers; of George Shaw; of Joseph L. Roberts; of Mildred W. Payne, of Jefferson County; of William C. Price, administrator of E. Butcher, deceased, of Randolph County; and of William H. Stingley, of Hardy County, West Virginia, praying that their claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to the claims of Daniel Coalman; of George W. Cockrell; of John Cook; of Joseph L. Roberts; of Isaac V. Burns, and of George Shaw, of Jefferson County, West Virginia—to the same committee.

By Mr. WOODBURN: Petition of real-estate owners and residents in the District of Columbia, in behalf of the passage of House bill 4694, incorporating the Washington Traction Railway Company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of John B. Williams and 57 others, of Reno, Nev., for an amendment giving the right of suffrage to women—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following petitions, praying Congress to place the coinage of silver upon an equality with gold; that there be issued coin certificates of one, two, and five dollars, the same being made a legal tender; that one and two dollar legal-tender notes be issued, and that the public debt be paid as rapidly as possible by applying for this purpose the idle surplus now in the Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures:

By Mr. J. B. WEAVER: Of T. W. Stone and 150 others, of Kansas; and of J. F. Howman and 150 others, of Iowa.

The following petitions, praying Congress for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in the Military and Naval Academies, the Indian and colored schools supported wholly or in part by money from the national Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. FORAN: Of O. D. Fisher and others, of Chagrin Falls, Ohio.

By Mr. GOFF: Of Rev. L. L. Stewart and others, of Marshall and Brooke Counties, West Virginia.

By Mr. LAIRD: Of Rev. Mark Noble and 170 others, citizens of Fairbury, Kans.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 6, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 807) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HENRY O. HILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 683) granting a pension to Henry O. Hill.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 5, after the word "New Hampshire," to insert the word "Cavalry;" so as to read: "First New Hampshire Cavalry Volunteers."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

MRS. ADALINE M. PUTNAM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 814) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline M. Putnam.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 7, to strike out the word "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to read: "At the rate of $30 per month."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BLAIR. Does that pass the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That passes the bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to an appropriation for payment of damages to Chippewa Indians in Minnesota arising from the construction of reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi River; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. DAWES, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents the petition of Casper Kramer, late a private in Company D, Sixty-first New York Volunteers, written in German, accompanied by his original certificate of discharge, praying for $200 bounty and land. If there be no objection the petition will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of civilian clerks of the Quartermaster's Department of the Army at Saint Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the adoption of certain provisions in the Army appropriation bill reducing their pay; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the A. C. Harmer Club, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition signed on behalf of the Friends' temperance conference held at Kennett Square, Chester County, Pennsylvania, and 34 other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the prohibition of the alcoholic liquor traffic in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition signed on behalf of the Friends' temperance conference held at Kennett Square, Chester County, Pennsylvania, and 24 other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a joint resolution proposing an amendment of the Constitution of the United States to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages throughout the national domain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition signed on behalf of the Friends' temperance conference held at Kennett Square, Chester County, Pennsylvania, and 34 other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I present a resolution adopted by the Saint Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, commending the Cullom Senate bill to regulate interstate commerce to the careful consideration of Congress as in nearly all respects preferable to the Reagan House bill. This resolution, though in the nature of a petition, is not addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, but is evidently intended for the consideration of Congress. I therefore present it as a petition and move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER presented petitions of Knights of Labor of Stout and Williamsburg, in the State of Colorado, praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JACKSON presented a memorial of Knights of Labor at Nashville, Tenn., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Saint Louis, Warrensburg, and Festus, in the State of Missouri, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMDEN presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Cross and Elk Garden, in the State of West Virginia, and memorials of Knights of Labor of Marion and Brooke Counties, in the State of West Virginia, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Rockport, Mass., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Massachusetts, representing 6,000 members, praying for appropriate legislation providing penalties for seduction in the District of Columbia and other localities; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Des Moines, Angus, Lehigh, Davenport, Oskaloosa, and Clarinda, in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Cincinnati and Avery, in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a memorial prepared to represent the sentiments of a mass meeting of the women of Utah, assembled from all parts of the Territory, in which they set forth their grievances in the operation of some existing United States laws, and pray for redress. I find it difficult to epitomize the memorial, and, as it is of very general interest, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. It is not of great length.

The memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: We, your memorialists, respectfully represent that at a mass meeting of the women of Utah, held in the theater, Salt Lake City, March 6, 1886, attended by over two thousand ladies, representing the wives, mothers, sisters, and daughters of the whole Territory, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Preamble and resolutions of the women of Utah in mass meeting assembled.

"Whereas the rights and liberties of women are placed in jeopardy by the present cruel and inhuman proceedings in the Utah courts, and in the contemplated measure in Congress to deprive the women voters in Utah of the elective franchise; and

"Whereas womanhood is outraged by the compulsion used in the courts of Utah to force mothers on pain of imprisonment to disclose their personal condition and that of their friends in relation to anticipated maternity, and to give information as to the fathers of their children; and

"Whereas these violations of decency have now reached the length of compelling legal wives to testify against their husbands without their consent, in violation both of written statutes and the provisions of the common law: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the women of Utah in mass meeting assembled, That the suffrage, originally conferred upon us as a political privilege, has become a vested right by possession and usage for fifteen years, and that we protest against being deprived of that right without process of law, and for no other reason than that we do not vote to suit our political opponents.

"Resolved, That we emphatically deny the charge that we vote otherwise than according to our own free choice, and point to the fact that the ballot is absolutely secret in Utah as proof that we are protected in voting for whom and what we choose with perfect liberty.

"Resolved, That as no wife of a polygamist, legal or plural, is permitted to vote under the laws of the United States, to deprive non-polygamous women of the suffrage is high-handed oppression for which no valid excuse can be offered.

"Resolved, That the questions concerning their personal condition, the relationship they bear to men marked down as victims to special law, and the paternity of their born and unborn children, which have been put to women before grand juries and in open courts in Utah, are an insult to pure womanhood, an outrage upon the sensitive feelings of our sex, and a disgrace to officers and judges who have propounded and enforced them.

"Resolved, That we honor those noble women who, standing upon their rights and refusing to reply to improper and insulting questions such as no true man nor any court with any regard for propriety would compel them to answer, have gone to prison and suffered punishment, without crime, rather than betray the most sacred confidence and yield to the brutal mandates of a little brief authority.

"Resolved, That the action of the district attorney and the chief-justice of Utah in compelling a lawful wife to testify for the prosecution in a criminal case involving the liberty of her husband, and in face of her own earnest protest, is a violation of laws which those officials have sworn to uphold, is contrary to precedent and usage for many centuries, and is an invasion of family rights and of that union between husband and wife which both law and religion have held sacred from time immemorial.

"Resolved, That we express our profound appreciation of the moral courage exhibited by Senators CALL, MORGAN, TELLER, BROWN, and others, and also by Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood, who, in the face of almost overwhelming prejudice, have defended the constitutional rights of the people of Utah.

"Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt thanks to the ladies of the Woman Suffrage Association assembled in Boston, and unite in praying that God may speed the day when both men and women shall shake from their shoulders the yoke of tyranny.

"Resolved, That we call upon the wives and mothers of the United States to come to our help in resisting these encroachments upon our liberties and these outrages upon our peaceful homes and family relations, and that a committee be appointed at this meeting to memorialize the President and Congress of the United States in relation to our wrongs, and to take all necessary measures to present our views and feelings to the country."

The following ladies were selected as a committee to draught and present a memorial to the President and Congress: Mrs. S. M. Kimball, Mrs. E. S. Taylor, Dr. R. B. Pratt, Mrs. M. I. Horne, Salt Lake City; Mrs. Mary John, Provo; Mrs. Mary Pitchforth, Nephi; Mrs. H. C. Brown, Ogden; Miss Ida I. Cook, Logan; Miss Ida Coombs, Payson.

In pursuance of this appointment, we present the following in behalf of the women of Utah:

On the 22d of March, 1882, an act of Congress was passed which is now commonly known as the Edmunds law. It was generally understood to have been framed for the purpose of settling what is called the Utah question, by condoning plural marriages up to that date and preventing their occurrence in the future, and also to protect the homes, maintain the integrity of the family, and shield innocent women and children from the troubles that might arise from its enforcement. But instead of being administered and executed in this spirit, it has been made the means of inflicting upon the women of Utah immeasurable sorrow and unprecedented indignities, of disrupting families, of destroying homes, and of outraging the tenderest and finest feelings of human nature.

The law has been so construed by the courts as to bring its penalties to bear upon the innocent. Men who had honestly arranged with their families so as to keep within the limits of the law have been punished with the greatest possible severity, and their wives and children have been forced before courts and grand juries, and compelled to disclose the most secret and private relations which in all civilized countries are held sacred to the parties.

The meaning of the law has been changed so many times that no one can say definitely what is its signification. Those who have lived by the law, as interpreted in one case, find as soon as they are entrapped that a new rendering is constructed to make it applicable to their own. Under the latest ruling a man who has contracted plural marriages, no matter at how remote a date, must not only repudiate his families and cease all connection with them, but if he is known to associate with them in the most distant manner, support them and show any regard whatever for their welfare, the offense of unlawful cohabitation is considered to have been fully established, and he is liable to exorbitant fines and imprisonment for an indefinite period, one district judge holding that a separate indictment may be found for each day of such association and recognition. In the case of Solomon Edwards, recently accused of this offense, it was proven by the evidence for the prosecution that the defendant had lived with one wife only since the passage of the Edmunds act, but after having separated from his former plural wife he called with his legal wife at the former's residence to obtain a child, an agreement having been made that each party should have one of the two children, and the court ruled that this was unlawful cohabitation in the meaning of the law, and defendant was convicted.

In the case of Lorenzo Snow, now on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the evidence for the prosecution showed that the defendant had lived with only one wife since the passage of the Edmunds law; that he had not even visited other portions of his family, except to call for a few moments to speak to one of his sons; but because he supported his wives and children and did not utterly and entirely cast them off, under instructions of Judge Orlando W. Powers, he was convicted three times for the alleged offense, and sentenced in each case to the full penalties of the law, aggregating $900 fine, besides costs, and eighteen months' imprisonment, the judge stating in his instructions to the jury, "It is not necessary that the evidence should show that the defendant and these women, or either of them, occupied the same bed, slept in the same room, or dwelt under the same roof. The offense of cohabitation is complete when a man, to all outward appearances, is living or associating with two or more women as his wives."

Thus women who are dependent upon the men whom they regard as their husbands, with whom they have lived, as they have regarded it, in honorable wedlock, must not only be separated from their society and protection, but must be treated as outcasts, and be driven forth with their children to shame and distress; for the bare "association" of friendship is counted a crime and punished with all the severity inflicted upon those who have not in any way severed their plural family relations.

In order to fasten the semblance of guilt upon men accused of this offense women are arrested and forcibly taken before sixteen men and plied with questions that no decent woman can hear without a blush. Little children are examined upon the secret relations of their parents, and wives in regard to their own condition and the doings of their husbands. If they decline to answer, they are imprisoned in the penitentiary as though they were criminals. A few instances we will cite for your consideration:

In the third district court, November 14, 1882, Annie Gallifant, having been asked by the grand jury a number of questions which she declined to answer, one of them being as to the name of the man to whom she was married, she was brought into court, and still declining, was sent to the penitentiary, where, although daily expecting to become a mother, she was kept until the grand jury was discharged. On the trial of John Connelly she was again brought into court and asked, "When did you first cohabit with your husband?" "How long after you commenced cohabiting with your husband was it that your child was born?"

Miss B. Harris was sentenced to fine and imprisonment in the second district court at Beaver, by Judge Twiss, because she declined to answer whether she was a married woman, and, if so, who was her husband. She was taken to the penitentiary, a building used for the confinement of criminals of the most hideous types, with her babe in her arms and leaving one behind with her mother. When asked the questions mentioned by the grand jury she answered, "Gentlemen, you have no legal right to ask this question, and I decline to answer it."

The question was an insult and a vile insinuation of departed virtue; and yet were she a public prostitute no such question would ever be asked. She was fined $25 and imprisoned three and a half months, when she was released by Judge Twiss. She is a lady, with strength of character, who was defending a principle; her right as a witness was as sacred as any rights recognized in courts. She was a martyr to personal right and in defense of a vital principle of freedom. The question was not directed to her knowledge of any crime, but to her social relation to another, she not being charged with any crime.

On May 22, 1884, in the same court, Nellie White, for refusing to answer personal questions in regard to her relations with Jared Roundy, was sent to the penitentiary, under the same roof with murderers, burglars, and other convicts, and confined there until July 7, the grand jury being kept over and not discharged for the purpose of protracting her imprisonment until the beginning of a new term.

In the court of United States Commissioner McKay, June 20, 1885, Elizabeth Ann Starkey was brought in as a witness against Charles S. White. On refusing to answer the question, "Have you ever in this country, within the last two years, occupied the same bed with defendant?" she was sentenced to one day's imprisonment and a fine of $50, and placed in the custody of the United States marshal until payment.

On June 22 she again declined to answer, and was fined $100 and committed until payment.

On June 24 she refused to answer similar personal questions to the grand jury, and was committed to the penitentiary until August 21, but was again imprisoned and kept till October 6. While in prison she was approached and grossly insulted by an employé of the marshal.

On the 15th of September, 1885, Eliza Shafer was sent to the penitentiary for refusing to answer the question, "Have you, within three years last past, lived and cohabited with J. W. Snell as his wife?" The court ordered her imprisonment until the question was answered.

On February 15, 1886, Mrs. Martha J. Cannon was brought into the third district court, and the grand jury complained that she would not answer certain questions, among them the following: "Are you not now a pregnant woman?" "Are you not now with child by your husband, George Q. Cannon?" On still declining to answer the court adjudged her guilty of contempt, and pending sentence she was placed under bonds of $2,500, which were subsequently raised to $5,000.

On March 2, 1886, Miss Huldah Winters was arrested by Deputy Marshal Vandercook at her home in Pleasant Grove, 40 miles distant, no charge being preferred against her, but it was suspected that she was a plural wife of George Q. Cannon. She was brought to Salt Lake City and conducted to the court-house, where she was required to furnish bonds for $5,000 for her appearance from time to time as she might be wanted.

Under the suspicion that any woman or young lady is some man's plural wife she is liable at any time to be arrested, not merely subpœnaed, but taken by force by deputy marshals and brought before a grand jury, and examined and browbeaten and insulted by the prosecuting attorney or his minions. But this is not all. In defiance of law and the usages of courts for ages, the legal wife is now compelled to submit to the same indignities.

On February 20, 1886, in the third district court, in the second trial of Isaac Langton, upon whom the prosecution had failed to fasten the slightest evidence of guilt, Prosecuting Attorney Dickson exclaimed, "If the court will allow me, I would like to call Mrs. Langton" (defendant's legal wife). After a strong protest from the attorneys for the defendant the court permitted the outrage, and against her and her husband's consent she was compelled to testify for the prosecution, the evidence, however, completely exonerating the husband, who was discharged.

But this has now been set up as a precedent, and within the past few days a legal wife has been taken before the grand jury, as many have been before, who refused to give evidence, but this time was compelled to answer the questions propounded by the public prosecutor against the lawful husband.

We also direct your attention to the outrages perpetrated by rough and brutal deputy marshals, who watch around our door-yards, peer into our bed-room windows, ply little children with questions about their parents, and, when hunting their human prey, burst into people's domiciles and terrorize the innocent.

On January 11, 1886, early in the morning, five deputy marshals appeared at the residence of William Grant, American Fork, forced the front door open, and while the inmates were still in bed made their way upstairs to their sleeping apartments. There they were met by one of the daughters of William Grant, who was aroused at the intrusion, and despite her protestations, without giving time for the object of their search to get up and dress himself, made their way into his bed-room, finding him still in bed, and his wife en déshabillé in the act of dressing herself.

Early on the morning of January 13, 1886, a company of deputies invaded the peaceful village of West Jordan, and, under pretense of searching for polygamists, committed a number of depredations. Among other acts of violence they intruded into the house of F. A. Cooper, arrested him, and subpœnaed his legal wife as a witness against him. This so shocked her that a premature birth occurred next day, and her system was so deranged by the disturbance that in a few days she was in her grave.

February 23, 1886, at about 11 o'clock at night, two deputy marshals visited the house of Solomon Edwards, about 7 miles from Eagle Rock, Idaho, and arrested Mrs. Edwards, his legal wife, after she had retired to bed, and required her to accompany them immediately to Eagle Rock. Knowing something of the character of one of the deputies, from his having visited the house before, when he indulged in a great deal of drinking, profanity, and abuse, she feared to accompany them without some protection, and requested a neighbor to go along on horseback while she rode in the buggy with the two deputies. On the way the buggy broke down, and she, with an infant in her arms, was compelled to walk the rest of the distance—between 2 and 3 miles.

They could have no reason for subpœnaing her in the night and compelling her to accompany them at such an untimely hour, except a fiendish malice and a determination to heap all the indignities possible upon her because she was a "Mormon" woman, for she never attempted to evade the serving of the warrant and was perfectly willing to report herself at Eagle Rock the next day. She was taken to Salt Lake City to testify against her husband.

On February 23, 1886, Deputy Marshals Gleason and Thompson went to Greenville, near Beaver, Utah. The story of their conduct is thus related by the ladies who were the subjects of their violence:

Mrs. Easton's statement:

About 7 a. m. deputies came to our house and demanded admittance. I asked them to wait until we got dressed and we would let them in. Deputy Gleason said he would not wait, and raised the window and got partly through by the time we opened the door, when he drew himself back and came in through the door. He then went into the bed-room; one of the young ladies had got under the bed, from which Gleason pulled the bedding and ordered the young lady to come out. This she did, and ran into the other room, where she was met by Thompson. I asked Gleason why he pulled the bedding from the bed, and he answered: "By G—d, I found Watson in the same kind of a place." He then said he thought Easton was concealed in a small compass, and that he expected to find him in a similar place, and was going to get him before he left.

Miss Morris's statement:

Deputy Gleason came to my bed and pulled the clothing off me, asking if there was any one in bed with me. He then went to the fire-place and pulled a sack of straw from there and looked up the chimney. One of them next pulled up a piece of carpet, when Gleason asked Thompson if he thought there was any one under there. Thompson said "No," and Gleason exclaimed, "G—d d—n it, we will look anyway!" They also looked in cupboards, boxes, trunks, &c., and a small tea-chest, but threw nothing out.

William Thomas's statement:

The deputies called at our place about daybreak, and came to my window and rapped. I asked who was there, but received no answer. They then tried to raise the window, when I called again, and they said they were officers. I asked them to wait until I was dressed, but they said: "No; we will break in the door." I told them they had better let that alone, and they went around to mother's door, which was opened, and father was summoned. The deputies next went to the bed of Mrs. Elliotts and subpœnaed her. Gleason said, with a frightful oath, that he knew there was another woman in the house, and searched in boxes, trunks, &c.

These are a few instances of the course pursued toward defenseless women, who are not even charged with any offense against the law. We solemnly protest against these desecrations of our homes and invasions of our rights. We are contented with our lot when left unmolested, and would enjoy the peace of quiet homes, the society of our husbands and children, and the blessings that only belong to God-fearing families trained to habits of thrift, temperance, self-restraint, and mutual help, if it were not for these outrages which are committed in the name of law, under the false pretense of protecting home and preserving the family.

We learn that measures are in contemplation before your honorable bodies to still further harass and distress us. We protest against the movement to deprive us of the elective franchise, which we have exercised for over fifteen years. What have we done that we should thus be treated as felons? Our only crime is that we have not voted as our persecutors dictate. We sustain our friends, not our enemies, at the polls. We declare that in Utah the ballot is free. It is entirely secret. No one can know how we vote unless we choose to reveal it. We are not compelled by any men or society or influence to vote contrary to our own free convictions. No woman living with a bigamist, polygamist, or person cohabiting with more than one woman can now vote at any election in Utah. Why deprive those against whom nothing can be charged, even by implication, of a sacred right which has become their property?

We ask for justice. We appeal to you not to tighten the bonds which are now so tense that we can scarcely endure them. We ask that the laws may be fairly and impartially executed. We see good and noble men dragged to jail to linger among felons, while debauched and polluted men, some of them Federal officers who have been detected in the vilest kind of depravity, are protected by the same court and officers that turn all their energies and engines of power toward the ruin of our homes and the destruction of our dearest associations. We see pure women forced to disclose their conjugal relations or go to prison, while the wretched creatures who pander to men's basest passions are left free to ply their horrible trade, and may vote at the polls, while legal wives of men with plural familes are disfranchised. We see the law made specially against our people so shamefully administered that every new case brings a new construction of its meaning, and no home is safe from instant intrusion by ruffians in the name of the law. And now we are threatened with entire deprivation of every right and privilege of citizenship to gratify a prejudice that is fed on ignorance and vitalized by bigotry.

We respectfully ask for a full investigation of Utah affairs. For many years our husbands, brothers, and sons have appealed for this in vain. We have been condemned almost unheard. Everything reported to our detriment is received; our cries to be heard have been rejected. We plead for suspension of all measures calculated to deprive us of our political rights and privileges, and to harass, annoy, and bring our people into bondage and distress, until a commission duly and specially authorized to make full inquiry into the affairs of this Territory have investigated and reported. And while the blessings of Him who will one day deal out even-handed justice to all shall rest upon your honorable bodies, your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Sarah M. Kimball, M. Isabella Horne, Elmina S. Taylor, Romania B. Pratt, Salt Lake City; Mary Pitchforth, Nephi, Utah; Jane S. Richards, Ogden, Utah; May Johns, Provo City; Ida I. Cook, Logan City; Ida Cooms, Agnes Douglas, Payson; Mrs. Emily S. Richards, secretary committee.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Cherokee, Kans., praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Leon, Stockton, Ransomville, Arkansas City, Emporia, Scammonville, and Rosedale, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a petition signed by a large number of colored citizens of the State of Kansas, praying for assistance to enable them to go to Africa. I will venture to ask that the petition itself, with the names of the officers who subscribed it, not the individual subscribers, be read, as it is somewhat remarkable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks the consent of the Senate that the petition may be read. If there be no objection it will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress:

Whereas we, the negroes of the United States, were brought from Africa and sold as slaves in this country and served as such from 1620 to 1865; and

Whereas we were set free without a penny and left at the mercy of our late masters and their brothers, who owned all this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and who for over two hundred years had regarded us as inferiors and slaves; and

Whereas there are sixteen thousand of us who have already returned to Africa; and

Whereas there are thousands of us in humble circumstances who yet wish to return to Africa, and there try to build up a United States in Africa, modeled after this Government, and under the protecting care of the same, for the elevation of the African and for the perpetuity of our race, which is here losing its identity by intermixture with the white races, and other troubles, &c.: Therefore,

We, the members of the African Emigration Association, and such citizens as are willing to aid and encourage us, ask you for an appropriation, to be disbursed through such a channel as in your judgment you may direct.

It is the purpose of this petition to help only those who wish to go to Africa, in whatever parts of the United States they may be found.

The head of this association is for the present situated at Topeka, Kans. It was established September 17, 1881, and approved by the association March 27, 1886.

Officials: George Charles, president; Antony Griffin, vice-president; John Smith, chaplain; W. Johnson, chaplain; Lewis Lee, treasurer; Charles Charles, secretary.

Mr. PLUMB. The petition, I think, perhaps should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am not particular about the reference which is had, but it comes to me accompanied by letters from prominent citizens of Topeka, where these people live, speaking of their character most favorably, and also of the very thorough determination that they have in this matter; and by reason of that sincerity and earnestness which they have manifested I hope that the petition, wherever it goes, will meet with consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of Mrs. Emily P. Collins and 78 other citizens of Hartford, Conn., praying for the passage of a joint resolution submitting to the several State Legislatures a proposition to so amend the Constitution as to give the right of suffrage to women; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Huntington and Derby, in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LOGAN presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Cartersville, Duquoin, Havana, Bloomington, Carbon Cliff, America, Sandoval, Peru, Chicago, New Burnside, and Staunton, in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of G. T. W. Froehlich, late surgeon Company G, Tenth Missouri Infantry, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the Adjutant-General to grant a discharge to all one-hundred-day soldiers who enlisted in response to the first call for seventy-five thousand men; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the State Grange of Illinois, favoring the enactment of a law making the Commissioner of Agriculture a member of the Cabinet; also favoring the coinage of the silver dollar, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Foresty.

Mr. EVARTS presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Corning, Binghamton, Hudson, Coxsackie, Richburg, Buffalo, and Suspension Bridge, in the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL. I report from the Committee on Pensions a bill, as a substitutute for the bill (S. 927), to extend the benefits of the act approved March 3, 1879, and the act of March 3, 1885, to certain pensioners whose disabilities are caused by amputation, and increasing the rate therefor, and for other purposes.

The bill (S. 2056) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service was read twice by its title.

Mr. SEWELL. This substitute increases the pension for the loss of an arm or a foot from $24 to $30 a month, and in the class above the elbow from $30 to $36, and loss at a shoulder-joint or a hip-joint from $37.50 to $45.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL. I report adversely and move the indefinite postponement of three bills relating to the same subject: The bill (S. 927) to extend the benefits of the act approved March 3, 1879, and the act of March 3, 1885, to certain pensioners whose disabilities are caused by amputation and increasing the rate therefor, and for other purposes; the bill (S. 1222) for the relief of soldiers and sailors having lost a leg above the knee or an arm above the elbow-joint; and the bill (S. 1978) to extend the benefits of the act approved March 3, 1885, to certain pensioners whose disabilities are caused by amputation of the right arm.

The motion was agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2196) granting a pension to Sarah A. Gettis;
A bill (H. R. 553) granting a pension to William J. Suffall;
A bill (H. R. 934) granting a pension to Charles W. Minnix;
A bill (H. R. 1564) granting a pension to Phebe Saunders;
A bill (H. R. 928) granting a pension to Lewis A. Thornbury;
A bill (H. R. 936) granting a pension to James T. Caskey;
A bill (H. R. 1988) granting a pension to Peter F. Saeman;
A bill (H. R. 1742) for the relief of Thomas Askew;
A bill (H. R. 1701) granting a pension to Anson B. Sams; and A bill (H. R. 2197) granting a pension to Fidelia A. Cheney.

Mr. SAWYER. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 239) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Briggs, to report it adversely, and to ask that it be indefinitely postponed, as the case is covered by the general law.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1248) granting a pension to John M. Young;
A bill (S. 1836) for the relief of Libbie C. Montis;
A bill (S. 850) granting a pension to Simpson S. Skirvin;
A bill (S. 857) granting a pension to Dudley B. Branch;
A bill (S. 1103) granting a pension to Caroline E. French;
A bill (S. 977) granting a pension to Elizabeth Barker;
A bill (H. R. 2689) granting a pension to Delilah Knill;
A bill (H. R. 2805) granting a pension to Mary S. Douglas;
A bill (H. R. 2804) granting a pension to Clayton E. Rogers;
A bill (H. R. 2802) granting a pension to Sarah A. Lovel;
A bill (H. R. 2798) granting a pension to Bruner D. Hyatt;
A bill (H. R. 2797) granting a pension to John L. Hunter;
A bill (H. R. 2791) granting an increase of pension to George Wells;
A bill (H. R. 2755) granting a pension to Robert Monahan;
A bill (H. R. 2753) for the relief of John W. Robson;
A bill (H. R. 4346) granting a pension to Elijah W. Putney;
A bill (H. R. 2793) granting a pension to Silas James; and
A bill (H. R. 1273) for the relief of Samuel J. Brown.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1630) granting a pension to James C. Chandler, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2022) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. General Ward B. Burnett, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 358) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Emily M. Wyman, to report it without amendment, and submit a report thereon, on behalf of the chairman of the committee [Mr. MITCHELL], who is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. I also report adversely from the Committee on Pensions, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], the bill (S. 1893) for increase of pension of E. M. Wyman, widow of Robert Harris Wyman, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, and I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. By direction of the Committee on Education and Labor, I report back the bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés. The bill is reported by direction of a majority of the committee without amendment, and I desire to say that I shall ask the attention of the Senate to the consideration and passage of the bill at the earliest opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1861) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 784) granting a pension to William A. Griffin, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 777) granting a pension to Frederick Bottjer, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 854) granting a pension to Frederick Bottjer, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 880) granting the right of way to the Schuylkill River East Side Railroad Company through the arsenal and Naval Asylum grounds at Philadelphia, Pa., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 361) granting a pension to John L. Willhoite, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 518) for the relief of John Alexander, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 743) for the relief of Mrs. Martha Vaughn and the legal representatives of Mrs. Louisa Jackman, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely; and he submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2057), for the relief of Mrs. Louisa Jackman and the legal representatives of Mrs. Martha Vaughn; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 668) for the relief of Charles de Arnaud, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1919) to authorize the purchase of additional ground adjoining the United States court-house and post-office building at Saint Paul, Minn., the erection of a bonded warehouse, and the repair of the existing United States building at said place, and appropriating money therefor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. A letter from the Secretary of War concerning a breakwater upon Lake Champlain was accidentally referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, though the printed indorsement thereon referred it to the Committee on Commerce. I ask that an order to direct the proper reference be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be referred to the Committee on Commerce if there be no objection.

PRINTING OF COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 73) authorizing the printing of committee reports, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that the reports of committees, the evidence and papers submitted therewith, or any part thereof, printed by order of Congress, may be reprinted at the Public Printing Office, at the instance of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, upon payment in advance to the Public Printer of the cost thereof with 10 per cent. added, the same as if originally printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 44) providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex., with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1297) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library;

A bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas;

A bill (H. R. 3775) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase an additional strip of ground on the east side of the United States court-house and post-office building at Fort Wayne, Ind., to be paid for out of the appropriation already made; and

A bill (H. R. 5550) to provide for the erection of a public building at Duluth, Minn.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the bill (H. R. 1297) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, which has just been sent from the House of Representatives, be allowed to lie on the table. It is precisely the same bill which the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress has reported already to the Senate, and which is now on the Senate Calendar. There is no necessity therefore for its reference to the committee. I ask that it lie on the table, and give notice now that to-morrow, after the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to take it up and pass it. It has already passed this body substantially three times in the last twelve or thirteen years. I do not suppose it will lead to any debate at all. At any rate, I shall ask the Senate to-morrow, after the morning hour, to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay the bill before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 1297) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie upon the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. COKE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill which has been received from the other House for a public building at San Antonio, Tex., with a view to asking non-concurrence in the House amendments and a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill referred to by the Senator from Texas. The bill will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 44) providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendments of the House of Representatives are, in line 8, to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$150,000," and at the end of the bill to add:

> Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodation for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plans for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $150,000 for site and building.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. COKE, and Mr. SPOONER were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 2058) to complete the public building at Harrisonburg, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2059) for the relief of the estate of Mallity Rose; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2060) to authorize the purchase of a tract of land near Salem, Oreg., for the use of the Indian training-school; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2061) granting a pension to Johanna Sofia Enlind; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I wish to call the especial attention of the Committee on Pensions to this case. It is the case of the needy and infirm mother of a young Swede who entered our armies in the war of the rebellion and there laid down his life. It has gone through the Pension Office and failed because of the lack of technical proof showing that at the time of the death of the soldier he had contributed to the mother's support. The mother is old, growing blind, and is entirely dependent upon what she may get. It would be a generous thing in Congress to pass the bill. I have here a letter, making a brief statement of the case, from the Swedish minister, which I will send to the Committee on Pensions, and I hope that committee may see its way to reporting the bill favorably very soon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2062) to increase the safety of passenger steamers in the domestic and foreign trade of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2063) for the erection of a public building at Oil City, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 2064) for the relief of Robert N. Blake; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2065) to extend the act of June 15, 1880, to all homestead entries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2066) to amend section 3894 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the transmission through the mails of lottery, gift-enterprise, and other circulars; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2067) for increase of pension to Zebulon S. Tompkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2068) for the relief of William H. Simmons; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER and Mr. STANFORD submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the Indian apropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent or other resolutions" are now in order.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I presume under that order it is proper to ask to take up a resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] relating to the question of considering everything in open session except treaties, I believe. I do not think in making this motion that I am out of order in making one observation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution to which the Senator from Virginia refers is on the table. After the ordinary morning business is called for and the introduction of "concurrent or other resolutions" is concluded it will be in order then to move to proceed to the consideration of that resolution.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Would it be in order then for me to call up the resolution which was reported by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] relating to the same subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not until the call for "concurrent or other resolutions."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to call it up before we commence general debate this morning, for the reason, if the Chair will indulge me, that it is not understood that while these resolutions are pending we are going on with discussions in secret session and doing what we try to avoid in open sessions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent or other resolutions" are now in order.

REPORT OF LABOR COMMISSIONER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to the Senate the annual report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor recently transmitted to the Department of the Interior.

I ask this, because the act to establish the Bureau of Labor, approved June 27, 1884, only provides that "the Commissioner shall annually make a report in writing to the Secretary of the Interior of the information collected and collated by him, and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the bureau;" but no provision is made for the Secretary of the Interior to transmit that report to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the passage of the resolution, but it was understood and expected that the report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor would be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, as other reports of bureau officers are transmitted, and that it would be embodied in his general report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand, though, that this report was not made in time to be transmitted with the others.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand, and that is the reason why it should now be called for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the consideration of the resolution the question is on its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

ALASKA LAND TITLES.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Territories be directed to examine into the propriety and necessity of providing by law for the acquisition of title to public lands in Alaska Territory, and report by bill or otherwise.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to say a few words in connection with the resolution. There is no law in Alaska Territory by which title to public land can be acquired except the mining laws. There are at present in the Territory a number of towns, some two or three of them of considerable size. There are various enterprises being conducted in the Territory in which large amounts of capital are invested. One company is engaged in the manufacture of oil; others in fishing, and in trading. There ought to be some way provided by which persons engaged in such enterprises can acquire title to lands occupied by them and be secured in their investments.

Evidently the Committee on Territories suppose that in time the general laws relating to public lands will be extended over that Territory; but I desire to state that those laws never will be applicable to that Territory. It is not an agricultural country. The present system of surveys never can be extended over the Territory. I think that the townsite law might be so modified as to be adapted to the present District government, and extended to the Territory; and there ought also to be some provision made by which title to small portions of the public domain could be obtained by persons engaged in fishing, trade, and in other enterprises in the Territory.

I have received numerous letters from people who are interested there, and who are residents of the Territory, urging Congressional action upon this subject. I hope the Committee on Territories will give it attention and report a bill.

The act providing a District government for the Territory by the twelfth section provided for a commission to report upon this subject, at least to report what provision ought to be made for the protection of persons already in the Territory and having interests there when the general land laws are extended to the Territory; but I repeat that the present system of surveys never can be extended to the Territory. Surveys will have to be made of detached portions of the Territory from initial points established by astronomical observations and laws enacted adapted to the condition of the Territory, as the present land laws are not adapted to the wants of the Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 3775) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase an additional strip of ground on the east side of the United States court-house and post-office building at Fort Wayne, Ind., to be paid for out of the appropriation already made; and

A bill (H. R. 5550) to provide for the erection of a public building at Duluth, Minn.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS AT WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution which comes over from yesterday, submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint select committee of three on the part of the Senate and five on the part of the House of Representatives be appointed to consider the subject of a celebration in 1889 at Washington of the centennial anniversary of the formation of the Government under the Constitution of the United States, and also of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America in 1892, and to report what, if any, action by Congress is advisable in connection therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Senator from Maryland is not now present, the resolution will lie on the table.

CONSIDERATION OF NOMINATIONS IN OPEN SESSION.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move, if it is now in order, to take from the table the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] providing for open sessions for the consideration of the confirmation or rejection of nominations. I ask pardon of the Senator for making this motion, because I know that the Senator who offers a resolution ought to have the control and management of it; but I can not close my eyes to the fact that while that resolution is lying on the table and these days are being consumed in debate executive sessions still recur from day to day, and we are not opening the doors to our debates or nominations. I am particularly not interested, but particularly disturbed, if I may so express it, that we can not have open doors while discussing such matters.

I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I am as much interested in the debate on the Army increase as any Senator on this floor, and, unless something shall be said to change my opinion, I expect to vote for it; but I think it is time, if we mean to open the doors, to open them. A resolution lying on the table accomplishes nothing. A resolution nominated here in this catalogue or calendar of business accomplishes nothing. If we intend to open the doors in these matters we must vote on the resolution; and I now move to take it from the table, and I beg pardon again of the Senator for asking that the yeas and nays shall be taken on it, for we agree so thoroughly on the matter.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion, and I will say to him that at the very first opportunity that can be afforded it will be called up. Indeed, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has already given notice that he will to-morrow morning call up his resolution, which is of the same character, for the purpose of discussing it. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion for the present until we get through with the Army bill to-day in some way or other, and then I will join him most readily in taking up and discussing the proposition and having a vote on it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Certainly. I did not understand that the Senator from Connecticut had given any notice.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, he gave notice yesterday morning, and it will come up to-morrow, so I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw his motion now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That William Webster have leave to withdraw his papers from the files, there being no adverse report.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, yesterday, approved and signed the act (S. 812) granting a pension to Mrs. E. A. Benham.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. 44) providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex., disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. REESE, and Mr. WADE managers at the conference on its part.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. LOGAN. Is the morning business through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the Senate resumes the consideration of the bill which comes over from yesterday.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 777) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, the pending question being on Mr. HALE'S motion to strike out section 2.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I wish to say that I do hope this bill will be voted on to-day and that we may dispose of it in some way. But in order that we may have a clear understanding in reference to all the objections which have been made to it, and which I was attempting to make answer to yesterday evening when the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, I now for a very short time desire to draw the attention of the Senators to the same proposition that I was discussing last evening; and that is in relation to the recommendations made by those in authority, in reference to the increase of the Army and the reports and suggestions made by the same persons in regard to the necessity of this, for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the service.

I was referring to the report of the Secretary of War in 1881 when I concluded yesterday. I now desire to draw the attention of the Senate to the report made in 1882, in order to keep up the connection, and show that this has been continuous for a great many years. You will find on page 4 of the report of the Secretary of War made in 1882 the following remarks:

The report of the General of the Army is very interesting. He urges strongly that the limit of the enlisted strength of the Army be fixed at thirty thousand men instead of twenty-five thousand men, as now established. No increase in the number of officers would be caused, and we would have at each of our numerous posts a force not only larger, but more efficient. Our soldiers are overworked, and the companies are too small for discipline or real economy. I again concur in his recommendation.

There was the concurrence of the Secretary of War in 1882 with the recommendation of the General of the Army, General Sherman, that the Army should be increased to thirty thousand private soldiers, and at the same time suggesting that that would not increase the officers of the Army. The proposition in this bill is precisely in accord with that recommendation of the General of the Army in 1882. The discussion that has occurred incidental to this bill in reference to the organization of twelve companies to the regiment grew out of an amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and is not the proposition that is contained in the bill as it now stands.

In 1883, on pages 4 and 5 of the report of the Secretary of War, you will find the following:

The report of the General of the Army has a special interest in being the last annual report that General Sherman will make. At his own request he has been relieved from the command of the Army, preparatory to his retirement from active service under the act of 1882. He has therefore thought it best to refrain from making any new recommendations in his report, leaving that duty to his successor in the command of the Army, Lieutenant-General Sheridan. He, however, calls attention to and renews a former recommendation that a new organization be adopted for the regiments of infantry so that each shall be composed of twelve companies, making three battalions of four companies each, each company having one hundred men; and that in time of peace two of these battalions shall be maintained on a perfect war footing, while the other battalion may be a mere skeleton, with its complement of officers, and be used as a nucleus for recruits. The great advantage of this change, as suggested by the General, is the important one of being able to put a large and effective force in the field upon short notice by merely enlisting a sufficient number of additional private soldiers, the officers and organization being always ready to receive them.

Passing from that to 1884, on page 6 of the report of the Secretary of War for 1884 you will find still further recommendations. He says:

The Lieutenant-General renews the recommendation of General Sherman that there should be made a uniform organization of the three arms of the service by adding two companies, with the corresponding majors, to each regiment of infantry. The reasons for this change were given at some length in my last report, and I concur in the recommendation of the Lieutenant-General.

In 1885, the report made by the present Secretary of War, on page 4 will be found this:

The Lieutenant-General commanding reports that the Army at the date of the last consolidated returns consists of twenty-one hundred and fifty-four officers and twenty-four thousand seven hundred and five enlisted men.

He goes on with that suggestion and then finally the Secretary of War says:

The Lieutenant-General commends to careful consideration the policy of concentrating troops and putting large garrisons in the vicinity of large cities as a measure of economy, the present railroad facilities being ample to transport them to the frontier speedily when needed; and also again recommends the addition of two companies and two majors to each regiment of infantry, and thus make the three arms of the service uniform. In both these recommendations I concur. The reasons for the last are given in the report of the Secretary of War for 1883, as follows.

Then he calls attention to the report of General Sherman made at that time, from which I have read.

Mr. President, I wish to pursue this a little further, although it will be taking the time of the Senate. On page 79 of the report that I alluded to last evening made by Senator Burnside when in the Senate, and signed by Senator PLUMB and Senator BUTLER, and three members of the House, with a bill introduced as I stated in connection with it, you will find that they report in reference to the reorganization of the Army and make the suggestion that I spoke of last evening. They embody in that report a letter of General Washington, to which I called attention this morning, from the fact that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] last evening spoke of the opposition of our great leading men to standing armies. In fact he spoke of our militia, for which I have great respect, and of our citizen soldiers, and therefore, he said we needed no army; and he referred to the cost of the army in 1800, 1810, 1820, 1850, and so on. He said that in 1810 the Army cost $2,294,323.94. Is it fair or is it applicable to the condition of things now to say that the Army should be so reduced that we are to refer back to the cost of the Army in 1810? But suppose it is a fair argument. The answer to that argument is that soon after 1810, when war between Great Britain and this country occurred, with that small army it is well remembered that even the city of Washington was captured and your public records burned. Our armies were in such a condition then that when we were assailed property in our cities was destroyed; but we are told that we ought to return to those days of economy and decrease the numbers of our Army, that it is all that is necessary and all sufficient. But I desire to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to what George Washington said. He was authority in those days. In September, 1776, he said:

To place any dependence upon militia is assuredly resting upon a broken staff. Men just dragged from the tender scenes of domestic life, unaccustomed to the din of arms, totally unacquainted with every kind of military skill (which is followed by want of confidence in themselves when opposed to troops regularly trained, disciplined, and appointed, superior in knowledge and superior in arms), are timid and ready to fly from their own shadows. Besides, the sudden change in their manner of living, particularly in their lodging, brings on sickness in many, impatience in all, and such an unconquerable desire of returning to their respective homes, that it not only produces shameful and scandalous desertions among themselves, but infuses the like spirit into others. Again, men accustomed to unbounded freedom and no control can not brook the restraint which is indispensably necessary to the good order and government of the Army; without which, licentiousness and every kind of disorder triumphantly reign. To bring men to a proper degree of subordination is not the work of a day, a month, or even a year; and, unhappily for us and the cause we are engaged in, the little discipline I have been laboring to establish in the army under my immediate command is in a manner done away, by having such a mixture of troops as have been called together within these few months.

He was speaking of raw recruits without any training or discipline. His army became better as it endured hardships and had time for making them into good soldiers. Our militia would be better now because of more drill, experience, discipline, and being better provided for.

It will be seen that General Washington made this distinction between raw men called together unorganized and undisciplined and those men who were organized and were disciplined, and so would every other man who speaks fairly and justly in reference to this matter. Men who wish to inspire a different feeling eulogize those who need no eulogy, because their conduct in war is eulogy enough. It is well enough sometimes for such arguments to be made; but when men want to speak of facts as they are there is not a man of mature judgment who knows anything about military affairs but what knows on the spur of the moment that a regular force organized and well disciplined is better than an unorganized and irregular force for the time being. Washington proceeded:

The jealousy of a standing army and the evils to be apprehended from one are remote, and, in my judgment, situated and circumstanced as we are, not at all to be dreaded; but the consequence of wanting one, according to my ideas formed from the present view of things, is certain and inevitable ruin. For, if I was called upon to declare upon oath whether the militia have been most serviceable or hurtful upon the whole, I should subscribe to the latter. I do not mean by this, however, to arraign the conduct of Congress; in so doing I should equally condemn my own measures if I did not my judgment; but experience, which is the best criterion to work by, so fully, clearly, decisively reprobates the practice of trusting to militia, that no man who regards order, regularity, and economy, or who has any regard for his own honor, character, or peace of mind, will risk them upon this issue.

That is the language of George Washington, not my language but his, and I give it that the point may be considered to which he directed it; and that was the immediate discipline and organization of an army for the benefit of the Government and the protection of the people.

Now, sir, I read and I desire to call the attention of Senators to what ex-President Garfield said in reference to the Army. He is more recent authority than that I have just read coming from the pen of George Washington, and under a different condition of things:

It is a significant fact that, while numberless petitions and remonstrances upon almost all subjects of legislation have been constantly pouring into Congress, yet during the last eight years not one petition has been addressed to either the Senate or the House praying for the decrease of our military establishment or for the reduction of the pay of its officers or enlisted men. Our people remember with gratitude the great captains who, in the late war, led their soldiers to victory to save the Republic from overthrow. They thoroughly learned the lesson that in times of extreme peril the preservation of liberty and peace depends upon the disciplined valor of the nation, and that the science and art of war can be acquired only by the thorough and patient study and practice of its elements. This work they expect of the Army; and the annual amount which they cheerfully pay for its support is the cost of national insurance against foes from without and anarchy within. They expect Congress and the Executive to make the Army worthy of a great nation; and this can be done only by the hearty co-operation of Congress with those eminent and patriotic soldiers who have devoted their lives to the study and practice of military science.

And, sir, you can not find a sentence emanating from any man who at least had great experience with large bodies of men, either as Secretary of War or General of the Army, to-day, that does not echo the very same sentiments in reference to our organization and our necessary force.

I read next from the Burnside report on page 145 from John C. Calhoun in a letter when he was Secretary of War. In 1820, the time that our friend from Missouri referred to when our expenditures were so small for the Army, Mr. Calhoun said:

However remote our situation from the great powers of the world, and however pacific our policy, we are, notwithstanding, liable to be involved in war; and to resist with success its calamities and dangers a standing army in peace, in the present improved state of the military science, is an indispensable preparation. The opposite opinion can not be adopted without putting to hazard the independence and safety of the country.

So you will find coming from our great statesmen in this country and the great war leaders in this land, passed away, and those present now, as the heads of our armies and as war ministers, the same appeal to the people of this country and the Congress of the land to give us an efficient standing army, to give us some force necessary to afford us some protection, and prepare us in time of peace for that which must come sooner or later to all nations.

In a letter from West Point by General Schofield, now the senior major-general of the Army, he says:

The President should be authorized by law to determine from time to time, according to the number of enlisted men authorized by Congress from year to year, the number of regiments and the number of battalions of each regiment to be kept organized for active service; provided, no regiment so organized should consist of less than two battalions, or eight companies, these companies to have an average strength of not less than ninety enlisted men for the cavalry, seventy-six for the infantry, and sixty for the artillery.

Further, he says:

As the organization now is, a reduction in the number of enlisted men reduces the effective strength in a far greater ratio.

When this reduction was going on his opinion of it was that the reduction in the strength of enlisted men in the Army reduced the Army's efficiency in a much greater ratio than the reduction itself.

Mr. HALE. What is the date of that?

Mr. LOGAN. July, 1878. General Sherman, in 1876, was asked to prepare a bill to be introduced in Congress for the reorganization of the Army. In his preparation of the bill he made each regiment of twelve companies, and in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry the same organization, and for the infantry he reported that there should not be less than fifty privates to a company, but that the President should have the right at all times to increase the number to one hundred.

So you find in every report and in every bill that has been introduced in Congress and asked for by any committee, by any commission, by any man who has known anything about the organization of the Army, that the report has been in accordance with the proposition made here by the Committee on Military Affairs.

On page 111 of the report are the views of General Hancock in 1876. General Hancock is referred to. In his report General Hancock says:

As a general proposition, it may be said that every arm of the service, in order that it may be a model for the national forces, ought to be large enough to give full development, at whatever cost of time and money, to its own specialty.

The committee say:

In discussing the condition of the infantry and cavalry, General Hancock calls attention to the fact that the number of enlisted men in each company had become too small for effective discipline and instruction, so that in late years it has not been practicable to carry military instruction beyond the school of the individual soldier, or rarely beyond the school of the company. To remedy this evil he recommends that the companies in these arms of the service be filled up to one hundred men each, and to prevent the aggregate increase of the Army which this would occasion, he recommends that the number of companies in each regiment be reduced to eight.

But he wants them to have one hundred men in each company.

Mr. HALE. Not so many of the companies in a regiment.

Mr. LOGAN. Not so many companies. General Hancock continues:

The question of any further reduction of these arms than that just suggested should, I think, be deferred a few years longer, until our Indian frontiers are in a more settled condition. If no other disturbances have arisen, I have no doubt that these arms could, with safety, be still further reduced, if then deemed advisable.

I give you the benefit of his opinion both ways. His idea was that there should be not less than one hundred men in each company. In pursuance of the judgment of these general officers they were asked to propose a bill, and on page 240 you will find the bill proposed by General Hancock. In the artillery he proposed that there be fifty-six privates to a company:

SEC. 7. That when not in service in the field, the batteries of light artillery, or so many of them as may be deemed available for that purpose, shall be concentrated at a military post for instruction in light-artillery tactics, under command of a field-officer of artillery.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 9. That the organization of each company of infantry shall be as follows:

Then he goes on with that organization—

Fifty-seven privates—

In each company, and in the cavalry and so on. Then on page 246 you will find the bill proposed by General Schofield that I read from a moment ago. On page 420 you will find from General Alfred H. Terry the following:

I will endeavor to indicate the difficulties which have arisen in my mind:

As a matter of course, the organization of such a force for active service in one body on a theater of war, characterized by no peculiarities demanding a special organization, is a very simple matter. Twenty-five thousand men would constitute a rather small army corps, of which from one-tenth to one-eighth, according to recent writers, should be cavalry, about eighteen hundred men should be artillerists, and of which the remainder, except perhaps a few engineer soldiers, should be infantry.

Any one at all versed in military matters could prepare almost mechanically a project for an organization of this kind. But it is perfectly apparent that such an organization would not be in any respect adapted to either the present actual or prospective and contingent needs of the country; that it would be utterly unsuited to the existing situation, or to any situation in which the country is likely to be placed. Leaving then such an organization out of consideration the question becomes, What organization is required by present needs, and what is necessary to give a reasonable protection against contingent dangers, and can these two requirements be reconciled within the limits proposed?

Broadly stated, our present need is a force properly organized and sufficiently strong to control the Indian tribes and protect the frontiers and routes of communication through the Indian country. Our prospective or contingent need is a force organized for the protection of the country against invasion and the defense of our seacoast and maritime cities against naval attacks in the event of a foreign war. At least the nucleus of a force for this latter purpose must be maintained, and I assume that it is the purpose of Congress to so organize the Army, if it be possible within the limits prescribed, that it may answer both these ends.

I regret that I have not been able to devise any plan which would accomplish these objects, and that I can be of no service to the committee in this regard.

He says further:

Similar difficulties arise when the effort is made to determine the proportions which the cavalry and the infantry should bear to the whole force. But I will not weary you by discoursing them. I am unable to suggest any method of overcoming them. I am unable to reconcile within the limits prescribed provisions for what I conceive to be present pressing needs with what I believe the most ordinary prudence requires as preparation for the defense of the seaboard in case of a foreign war. Having thus failed to respond to the request of the committee, I do not know that it is proper for me to make any suggestions, but if it be, I would suggest that the present organization be maintained until such time as the restored prosperity of the country shall justify the Government in increasing the strength of the Army sufficiently to make the existing regiments efficient. Or that the plan of organization submitted to the committee by the General of the Army should, with some changes, be adopted.

On page 455 is the opinion of General McClellan. I will read a portion of what he says:

The permanent strength of the regular Army should be sufficient to enable it to perform with promptness, vigor, economy, and certainty all its ordinary duties; and its organization should be so elastic as to permit a rapid, economical, and efficient increase of its numbers. If an army is maintained at all, true economy requires that it should be thoroughly efficient in all respects and adequate to the work devolving upon it. Large posts, that is, posts with large garrisons, if well selected, promote discipline and economy and enable the troops to perform much more efficient and economical service than if scattered among a number of small posts.

The experience of our own and other countries proves that it is false economy to reduce the peace establishment of the Army unduly, for the reason that the employment of large masses of new troops upon the breaking out of war involves an immense expenditure out of all proportion with the savings resulting from reducing the peace establishment too much. For similar reasons it is wise and necessary to furnish in peace due supplies of all war materials not liable to deterioration.

Not only did the committee take the opinion of officers but of private soldiers. The opinions of enlisted soldiers in the Army I will read. I could read all day from the opinions of officers of the Army, and those who have always stood high in the estimation of the people, but I will not do so. I will read though what the private soldiers say. Here is a letter on page 487 of the Burnside report:

The undersigned, enlisted soldiers, desire to represent that the Army is now much too small to perform the services required of it, that it is not a "standing army," but a traveling, working, fighting, and suffering army; and that the pay is now certainly no more than a reasonable compensation for a soldier, and much less than would command men to perform our duties if they knew beforehand what they would encounter.

We first enlisted with the usual ideas of the life of a soldier; willing and anxious to brave its dangers, hardships, and fatigues, expecting a reasonable support and the prospect of change and adventure; but we find in service that we are obliged to perform all kinds of labor, such as all the operations of building quarters, stables, store-houses, bridges, roads, and telegraph lines, involving logging, lumbering, quarrying, adobe and brick making, lime-burning, masonwork, plastering, carpentering, painting, &c. We are also put at teaming, repairing wagons, harness, &c., blacksmithing, and sometimes wood-chopping and hay-making.

This in addition to guard duty, care of horses, arms, and equipments, cooking, baking, police of quarters and stables, moving stores, &c., as well as drilling, and frequently to the exclusion of the latter.

Besides all this labor we have to go on campaigns and long marches and fight Indians, risking our lives and health from bullets, accident, malaria, exposure, and fatigue, and all for wages much less than those current in the regions where we serve for anything like the same labor; and in the performance of these duties there is no eight-hour law for us.

This is what the soldiers say to the Senate. The private soldiers tell you the amount of work they have to perform, and they answer the speech of some Senators here who say a soldier gets more pay than an ordinary laborer. The soldier tells you he is working for less and has no eight-hour law either. He is at work at blacksmithing, at ditching, at hay-making, at stable-building, besides all his other duties, and that he does it for much less pay than the ordinary laborer in the community from which he comes; and yet we are told that he is paid too much. What else do they say?

We desire to say that we are mostly laboring men, that we sympathize with them as a class, and that there is no danger of our being used to oppress them; but that we believe in the ballot-box for the righting of wrongs, are opposed to rioting and mob violence, and will be always ready and willing to put them down and to keep the peace between contending parties until reason can resume its sway.

If there has been a more intelligent letter written to this committee than was written by these poor private soldiers who receive $13 per month I should like to read it. Yet we are robbing the country in increasing the pay of these men! I have also the statements of General Irvin McDowell, General Emery Upton, General George Crook, and General Joseph E. Johnston, who served on the other side, confirming every word that I have uttered in reference to this bill, but I will not take the time of the Senate to read them.

Now, sir, I propose for a few moments to touch some other points. Some of the Senators, as I said yesterday, were raiding on different parts of this bill, and we have been asked to bring forward the recommendations and show wherein these provisions have been indorsed by leading men. One of them is the proposition to give mileage over your land-grant railroads. It was asked, where do we get that provision? The Paymaster-General shows in his report that during the last year his Department has duly accounted for $15,180,160.86. I read from the report of the Secretary of War of 1884:

He again recommends—

This recommendation, as I have stated, has been made more than once—

He again recommends—

With the concurrence of the Secretary of War, and says:

the repeal of the law forbidding payment of mileage to officers for travel over land-grant roads.

Why?

As mileage is given to an officer not merely to pay his railroad fare but to cover other traveling expenses, and as officers of the Army are the only public officers against whom a discrimination is made in this regard, I recommend legislation to correct it.

The Senator from Kansas asked why did we not reduce this mileage so as to save the Government 1½ cents per mile that goes to the railroad. Will he vote for it if we do that? Does that make the bill satisfactory? If so, if that be the only objection, and if other Senators feel the same way, there would be no trouble in amending in that particular; but that is not right that officer should lose it. This applies to officers on particular duty, not traveling with their commands.

But let us go a little further and read what is said on the schools that we propose. Let me read from the report of the Secretary of War, and by continuing this discussion I could show reports recommending every material provision in this bill. The Secretary of War, in his report in 1882, used the following language:

Chaplain Mullins, the officer in charge of education in the Army, reports that considerable progress has been made in the work of organizing and establishing post schools and reading-rooms, and that a constantly growing interest in their success has been exhibited by both officers and enlisted men. The average attendance—

And I call the attention of Senators to this especially, to show how strange the statements are that have been made here in reference to the post schools in the Army—

The average attendance at post-schools of enlisted men during the year was 1,586, and of children—

Mark the language—

And of children of officers, enlisted men, and civilians, 1,769; an increase of 674 in the first of these classes, and of 379 in the latter class.

Does that not prove what I said, that these instructors were not for officers, as was said by certain Senators, but that there are children of soldiers, of teamsters that are called civilians, of blacksmiths and others that are employed at the post, who need education, and these poor people are not able to send their children to the States to educate them, and therefore we made this provision for their benefit, and yet we are told it is for the benefit of officers only. What else does the Secretary of War say in reference to this? He says:

The most pressing necessity for giving effect to a successful educational system in the Army is a supply of competent teachers, the experiment of detailing enlisted men for such duty having proved unsatisfactory and embarrassing. The recommendation made by me in my last annual report that statutory authority be given for the enlistment—for the enlistment of one hundred and fifty competent instructors, with the rank and pay of commissary sergeants, is renewed. Such a measure was favorably reported upon by the House Military Committee at the last session of Congress, which it is hoped may be enacted into a law at an early day.

Mark how many—

The libraries and post reading-rooms have been kept well supplied, and their benefits fairly appreciated. The number of volumes in all the libraries is 45,709, an increase of 1,820 during the year.

There are the libraries that we furnish to the different posts. We furnish libraries but furnish no instructors. Is that the idea? Is that the economy or statesmanship of gentlemen who oppose the proposition in this bill? Libraries are to be permitted, but not the instructors to educate the child to read the books.

Now, I have gone through the objections made by Senators to this bill, and there is not a proposition in it but what has been based on recommendations made by officers of the Army, by Secretaries of War, and by the best instructed men whom we have in the country in reference to the organization of this force. To show that my statement was correct, if you will take the report of the present Secretary of War in reference to the first section of this bill, you will find the following language used:

There is now no provision of law whereby an enlisted man can be punished for any offense against good order and discipline except through the proceedings of a court-martial. It is well said by one general officer, in commenting on this subject, that "courts-martial, by becoming too common, lose their force and influence, and their tendency is continually to lessen an officer's sense of responsibility and the care that the subordinate should have for the authority of his commander."

It is worthy of consideration whether the officers in command of troops at military posts or the captains of companies should not be authorized to impose punishment for minor offenses. But in granting such authority it will be necessary to specify the extent and character of the punishment for each offense, otherwise there would be no uniform rule, nor would it be wise to repose so large a discretion upon a single officer. A statute might be framed—

He goes on to speak of framing a statute, and then says:

Upon an examination of the British military law on this subject it appears that a commanding officer of the rank of captain and above may administer summary punishment for drunkenness and absence without leave, confinement not to exceed twenty-eight days, and a fine, not to be imposed except in cases of drunkenness, and then not to exceed 10 shillings, with a right of appeal to a court-martial in case of a fine.

So the present Secretary of War recommends fully the provision of this bill in reference to the trial of minor offenses by an officer and having the finding approved by his superior commander.

It has been asserted by certain persons that the proposed increase of the Army of five thousand is a new idea. I have shown by reports from 1869 up to the present time the protests against the reduction in the Army. A bill introduced by myself in 1882 has the very same provision in it. Then take the bill of 1884, introduced by myself, and you find the same provision in that. Then take the bill introduced by me in 1886, the bill now before us. One of the bills introduced in the early part of this session of Congress was this present bill, which was introduced early in December, 1885. So the Military Committee have been for years, or at least a portion of it, presenting to the Senate of the United States this proposition for the increase of the Army.

But we are told there is no necessity for it, and honorable Senators who may perhaps have in charge another branch of the war power of this great nation of ours desire to decrease and render inefficient the Army, but they think other arms of the service of this great country must be rendered efficient. This character of legislation I can not understand. But let me read a report made to the Senate a few days ago, March 24, 1886:

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report:

"The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred on the 16th of December last the petition of J. I. Rodriguez in behalf of Mr. Cirilo Pouble, alleged to be a naturalized American citizen, and to be imprisoned by the Spanish authorities in the island of Cuba on the charge of treason, &c., respectfully reports:

"That it appears from the papers and correspondence in the Department of State that Pouble went to Cuba some time in November, 1884, and was there immediately arrested and imprisoned on the charge before mentioned, or charges of that character, and that down to the latest reports, about December, 1885, his trial had not been had. The committee is satisfied that the Department of State and the consul-general of the United States at Havana have exercised every practicable diligence and exertion to bring the case of Pouble to a speedy trial in conformity with the laws of Spain, and with the treaty stipulations between Spain and the United States existing on the subject, and that every effort has been made by the Department and consul-general to make the situation of the accused as comfortable as possible, and to give him every practicable assistance.

"The committee is of the opinion, therefore, that there is nothing that at present calls for any action on the part of the Senate or of Congress. If there should be much further delay in the trial of Pouble, it will become a subject for very serious consideration on the part of the Government of the United States.

"At present the committee asks to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition."

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that our citizens may be incarcerated in prison in the little island of Cuba, detained there for a year or more without trial, and our great nation has not force either on land or sea sufficient to demand from the old, rotten, tumbling power of Spain that our citizens shall be properly cared for and properly treated. Oh, honorable Senators say that it will cost something! Sir, if I had the power (which I have not, but it rests in the people), if I could wield that power, no American citizen would ever lie rotting in the dungeons of any foreign power without having the merits of his case examined and fairly treated. [Applause in the galleries.]

It may be said this would require a navy, that we are bordered by Mexico and Canada; nor could a navy alone reduce any power.

Sir, I would use the power of this people against Spain, England, or any other government, to protect the American citizen; and that is where this country is weak. England does it, and all other countries do it. It is a disgrace to the American nation that we can not. But when we appeal to the Congress of this country for a small pittance to increase the efficiency of our Army or our Navy, men rise in stately pride in these halls and their voices resound in favor of economy and lightening of the burdens of the people!

Sir, the American people are a proud people, but they are not proud of that economy which allows their citizens to be shut up in foreign prisons without the power to demand redress. They are not proud of that. No, sir; that is one of the things that now humbles their pride, and it ought to do so. But, forsooth, economy! I am as much for economy as any man in this Chamber, but I want that economy to be that just and correct principle as applicable to our nation which will not involve us in a condition of things making us powerless at all times to either assert or protect our rights or the rights of one of our citizens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order, being the bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes. The Chair understands that it is the agreement of the Senate that the special order shall be laid aside informally and Senate bill 777 continued under consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, while on this question of economy let me read from one of the eminent men of this land who was a great leader of our friends on the other side of the Chamber. I read from John C. Calhoun:

Economy is certainly a very high political virtue, intimately connected with the power and public virtue of the community. In military operations, which under the best management are so expensive, it is of the utmost importance; but by no propriety of language can that arrangement be called economical which, in order that our military establishment in peace should be rather less expensive, would, regardless of the purposes for which it ought to be maintained, render it unfit to meet the dangers incident to a state of war.

And, sir, in the early days, as I said from Washington down, you will fail to find an argument made by the great men of this land in favor of economy at the expense of the efficiency of the Army or Navy or any arm of this Goverment which is one of its arms of strength. This bill has been attacked on the ground of want of economy, and in the attacks which have been made upon it we have found in the argument against the bill men in this Chamber—I do not criticise them for that—who understand the cost of the Army, the expenses of regiments, and the cost per man more certainly than is that knowledge within the Secretary of War, the General of the Army, or the Paymaster-General.

In the last report of the Secretary of War I want to call the attention of the Senate to this one class of figures in regard to the expenses of the Army, which I referred to once before and desire to refer to again in this connection. It has been repeated over and over again that the Army costs $40,000,000 a year. A statement of that kind ought not to be made. The Secretary of War, in his report, states the expense of the Army last year thus:

Military establishment—Army and Military Academy, $25,754,425.49.

That includes salaries to officers, pay to the soldiers, and the expenses of the West Point Academy, the school at Fortress Monroe, the military school at Fort Leavenworth, and all the expenses of the War Department and everything incident to the Army.

Public works, including river and harbor improvements, $13,164,394.60.

And that is counted as part of the expenses of the Army! So, too—

Miscellaneous objects, $1,859,372.97.

Such as paying claims by the War Department included in that statement; and that is paraded before the Senate as part of the cost of the Army itself! The cost of the Army proper is not over $15,000,000; the rest of the establishment makes up the balance. But, as I said, Senators claim that they understand the expense of these five thousand better than the Paymaster-General of the Army, the Secretary of War, or others connected with the Army. The Paymaster-General has estimated every dollar that is in this bill, the increased pay of the soldier, the extra pay to the detailed lieutenants when performing commissary or quartermaster duty, the pay for the five thousand enlisted men, their clothing, their subsistence, and all the expenses incident to their enlistment; and makes it:

Difference of pay to enlisted men (see statement herewith) section 3	$870,244 00
Pay of 5,000 additional privates, at $16 per month, section 2	960,000 00

That is according to the pay they have in this bill if it should pass—

Additional pay to 87 acting assistant quartermasters, at $100 per year, section 8	$8,700 00
150 instructors for post schools, at $34 per month, section 13	61,200 00
Total	1,900,184 00

But we struck the one hundred and fifty out after this estimate was made by the Paymaster-General, and left it discretionary with the Secretary of War as to the number of instructors that he should employ. So the table which was made by the Senator from Kansas yesterday, estimating hundreds of thousands of dollars for the extra pay that is enumerated here, is certainly without basis or foundation.

Now, Mr. President, without wearying the Senate much further, I desire to make this one assertion, that this increase of the Army is for no purpose except for the benefit of the Army and country, the increase of its efficiency for our own protection and that we have some respectable force. It will cost the country but a small amount, and will certainly put the country on a better basis and better footing for the preservation of its own peace and security. But it has been intimated that the Army will be used for other purposes. It can not be used now for other purposes, as the law does not permit it; but no such reason was found in the preparation of this bill.

Senators have made arguments which they say have offended me. If they were not trying to place me in a false position, it was no offense; if they were, and it did so seem to me, then I hope they will pardon any feeling I may have shown. Arguments made seemingly to me to have the country understand that this was a new proposition, when they ought to have known better, is not pleasant to any one. If I said anything in the heat of debate not warranted by insinuations against me I have not been able to find it in my remarks. I never dodge questions nor deal in innuendoes, but always fairly face the issue, let it come whence it may.

But if any Senator desires to put me in any position—I do not know that any one does so desire—I will say to him now, if that is what he wanted me to say, that I am no communist. I believe in every man owning and being entitled to what he labors for, and that he has a right to keep it, and I believe in justice, in law and order. I would protect every citizen in his right "to life, to liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," in his right to vote, in his right to property. I do not believe in murder, in house burnings, or the laying waste of cities. I believe in the power of protection to citizens in a lawful way at home and abroad. I am a friend to the man who labors for his living, honestly toils, and am in favor of his getting a fair reward for his labor. I am for that justice dealt out between man and man that will afford every man in this land the protection of the law and a guarantee for his just rights. I am in favor of the laboring man having just compensation for his labor; and I wish to God he could get more than he does. I wish all had good homes. I wish they were all happy in good homes. That much I say. If that is what gentlemen were pressing for, they have it.

Sir, in conclusion I wish to repeat that if I had the power to induce the people of this country by anything I might say to prepare for protecting themselves, I would do it. I would build fortifications on the Pacific Ocean for the protection of the Golden Gate and San Francisco and that whole coast which would defy all the monitors of the world. Then I would make our Atlantic coast bristle at every prominent point, where there are large cities and large interests to be protected, with guns that would frown down the advance of any war ship or navy that rides the boisterous billows of that great ocean. I would do it for the future protection and preservation of this country. I would do it to let foreign countries know that a republic can defend itself as well as any other form of government and that a republic knows enough to prepare in time of peace for the great exigencies that may occur later on; and in doing that I would give labor to the unemployed men in assisting to build these fortifications.

I would increase our Army, and man the guns in these fortifications to notify people that we are ready. In increasing the Army I would give five thousand of the men who are out of employment to-day and starving a chance to make $16 a month and their provisions and clothing. I would do that, and in that way I would help the poor man as best I could. I would aid him in giving him labor to help build the fortifications, and I would aid him by giving him a chance to enter the Army. I would do both. I would make the Army efficient and I would benefit labor at the same time. Yes, sir, I would do that.

And if gentlemen want to say that in a republic no standing army is necessary, that we must lie down and slumber beneath the stars in peace, that there is no danger to this great Government of ours, a Government which I claim to be the grandest there is, this Government where we claim men are equal, this Government where we claim men are entitled to the protection of the law, this Government where we claim that all men have a right to ascend the hill of fame if they have the ability and the energy to do it, this Government where no established aristocracy controls, where there have been given to us such liberties and such privileges as these we should be jealous of these privileges, we should be jealous of these rights, we should be jealous of the rights of our citizens at home and abroad, and we should be ready to protect those rights, and, in being ready to do it, we should agree as men, as Senators, and as statesmen, that we would not have an army or a navy that would be the laughing-stock of the world. No, sir, if there is any country that needs at least an army, as I said a few days ago, of respectability in numbers and efficiency, it is this country. If there is any government that needs a navy that can protect itself, it is this Government. Men may say what they please about republics falling because of armed forces. Ah, sir, republics fall from neglect; republics fall where corruption enters and the people forget their rights, and then other than the power of the people steps in and takes the control, but not till then; and if this Government ever does fall (which I hope to God it never may) it will not be from an army of thirty thousand men, it will not be from an army of fifty or a hundred thousand men, but it will be from the neglect of the people, from their forgetfulness of their rights; it will be at a time when they forget what they are, at a time when they are engaged in pursuits that carry them away and beyond looking after their own rights and the rights of the American people. In that moment of forgetfulness other power may usurp the rights of the people of this country, but only in that time, and for that time let this country prepare, and for that time let this country look. As all others have gone through the same course, let them look to the future, as we are not unlike others; we are perhaps no greater, perhaps no better.

We have the same interests, the same ambitions, the same desires for power and place, the same desires in reference to our influence as all other people have—no less, no more. This is an hour of peace and tranquillity. It was said by the Senator from Missouri that the time had now come when the people of this country, North, South, East, and West, felt more kindly toward one another than in all the history of this land before. I hope, sir, that is true and that it may continue to be true, for in my heart I have no bitterness against man or section, and I hope the same feeling may exist all over this land; and if so, while there is this good feeling, in God's name let us prepare so that we can have this condition continue.

Then, sir, in this era of good feeling let us prepare to repel all attacks and all assaults that may in future be made to mar these relations, from within or without. Let our country's pride be aroused that we may not only feel our own strength, but that other peoples may feel that we are prepared, so that none of our great cities on the seaboard may be forced to submit to a levy of contribution before troops could be raised to resist it. Sir, I feel that I have given a warning that may some day be remembered if not heeded now.

Mr. President, I have said all I desire to say. I am thankful to the Senate for having given me the time that they have in order to express my views in reference to the increase of the efficiency of the Army.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this discussion has run on at great length, and I know that the feeling of the Senate is in favor of coming to a vote; so I shall not occupy much of its time.

With many of the general considerations presented by the Senator from Illinois in charge of the bill [Mr. LOGAN] I am in entire accord. I agree with him as to the necessity of this great Republic being watchful and vigilant for all signs of danger upon the sky at home or abroad. I agree fully with him that we ought to protect our people and their property by suitable fortifications and by a respectable naval establishment. I agree fully with him in all he has said about the duty of the American Government in protecting its citizens abroad and not letting them lie and rot in foreign dungeons. But, Mr. President, those things, while sounding pleasantly as they fall from the lips of the Senator from Illinois, have little or nothing to do with the real question before the Senate.

If any American administration ever finds itself confronted with delicate questions and complications with foreign powers, and feels itself called upon to exercise authority and power to maintain the dignity of the nation, the last thing that will be considered by that administration will be the question of the size of the regular Army of the United States. That will not enter into the question at all. If there is any cloud on the sky from abroad in any quarter of the globe, the present administration is not troubling itself with the question of the size of the regular Army of the United States, or feeling any hesitation in asserting our rights because the enlisted men in that Army are to-day limited by law to the number of twenty-five thousand.

In what I say I desire to confine myself entirely to the issue before the Senate, and that is upon my motion made when the bill was first laid before this body to strike out section 2, and that section which I seek to strike out reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the number of enlisted men in the Army, including an engineer battalion of five hundred and twenty men, hospital stewards, and one thousand Indian scouts, be, and hereby is, established as a force not to exceed thirty thousand men.

And first, before I go on, as some question has been raised about existing law as touching this subject, let me state it in a few words. Under the Revised Statutes of the United States, adopted in 1873, there is this provision:

SEC. 1115. There shall not be in the Army at one time more than thirty thousand enlisted men.

So long as that provision remained untouched or unaffected or unrepealed the limitation of the Army was thirty thousand men. That is in no respect the case now. Immediately after the adoption of the Revised Statutes and the fixing of the limitation at thirty thousand men, as it was seen that the need of a regular army was decreasing, from time to time Congress took the whole subject up and considered it most elaborately by the investigations of committees of both Houses, and decided that twenty-five thousand enlisted men were all that were needed in the regular Army of the United States, and in 1876 and in the years following in the regular Army appropriation bill it was provided:

And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital stewards.

Such a provision as that only ran for the year with the appropriation bill and did not repeal the section in the Revised Statutes which I have read. Under that legislation the law remained excepting for the year at thirty thousand, and this was continued until 1879 when Congress interfered still further and enacted a permanent law that applied to the future; and this is the language that was then adopted as the law:

And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital stewards.

And then it goes on to the declaration:

And thereafter there shall be no more than twenty-five thousand enlisted men in the Army at any one time, unless otherwise authorized by law.

So that from the passage of the appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1880, passed in 1879, the statute which I have read was in effect repealed, and it requires to-day absolute affirmative legislation in order to authorize the Army to be raised from twenty-five thousand men to thirty thousand men, and the Senator from Illinois, who is as familiar with the legislation touching the Army as perhaps any man on this floor, must have realized this when he put into this bill the provision that the limit hereafter should be thirty thousand men. The law to-day, not simply running with appropriation bills but adopted upon an appropriation bill, fixes the limit for all time in the future until Congress changes it at twenty-five thousand men, and section 1115 of the Revised Statutes has become waste paper, is null and void, and of no force or effect whatever. That is the law on the subject.

Now we are asked to change the law; we are asked to go in the face of all that Congress has done since the investigation was made in 1875 and 1876, and now to increase the enlisted men, the rank and file of the regular Army. It is to that proposition that I propose to confine my remarks.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask a question for information. The Senator refers to the reduction from thirty thousand to twenty-five thousand. If I am not much mistaken in my recollection, I was then in the House and serving upon the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is my impression that there was nothing in the nature of an investigation that preceded this reduction. I very well remember that without the advice or even the courtesy of a consultation with the Committee on Military Affairs a proviso in the appropriation bills championed by Mr. Wheeler, of New York, afterward Vice-President, summarily reduced the Army to twenty-five thousand. I am not aware that there was anything in the nature of an investigation or even the courtesy of a reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE. The whole subject was investigated by a joint committee of both Houses that came to the conclusion that twenty-five thousand men were enough in numbers, and all of the letters and reports that I alluded to when the debate was opened on this subject and that the Senator from Illinois has read from so fully this morning and at other times, are in reply to requests of that committee to give their views upon the subject and to submit bills based upon twenty-five thousand men as the rank and file of the Army.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator kindly tell us what Congress and what session?

Mr. HALE. I can not now give the date, but the report referred to will show.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state, if I am allowed, that in 1875 General Burnside was chairman of the Military Committee of this body. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] was on the committee, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] in the Senate. With them were joined three gentlemen of the House, all constituting a joint commission. They made a report and they asked for bills, and General Sherman sent one, General Hancock one, General Schofield, and so on. The bills all came to nothing. The Senate committee and the House committee made a report, and in that report the Senator will find that they recommended that each regiment should have sixteen companies of not less than seventy-five men. If he will make the calculation he will find that.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator from Illinois, with his familiarity with dates, has answered the inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut. That investigation was what first called my attention to the necessity of opposing this provision. It was on the investigation then made that the present limit to the size of the Army was fixed.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Illinois that my opposition to this part of his bill is in no degree dictated by hostility to the regular Army or by any lack of confidence in that branch of the service.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me a word right there. In connection with the inquiry made by the Senator from Connecticut. As that Senator asked about the reference of this question to the Military Committee, I want him to understand, if I did not make the statement distinctly before, that this matter has never been referred to the Military Committee. All the reductions and changes in the Army from 1876 up to the present time have been done on appropriation bills by the Committee on Appropriations without any reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE. The old fashion, from which we have largely departed of late, was for a great part of the legislation of Congress on all branches of the service to be put upon appropriation bills; and the sentiment of Congress in 1875 and 1876 that the Army should be twenty-five thousand enlisted men took this form and became law upon an appropriation bill, undoubtedly because, as I have said, that was the practice then in this House and in the other; but none the less did that embody the conviction of Congross, none the less did it become the written and enacted law, none the less did it become a rule for subsequent Congresses until investigation and discussion should lead Congress to make a change.

I was going to say when interrupted by the Senator from Illinois, that my motion to strike out this section and my opposition to this part of the bill arise from no hostility to the regular Army and from no lack of confidence in it. I do not believe that there is any body of men in the world that will furnish, if need should come, the skeleton organization for a great and triumphant army that shall overcome all enemies that may arise equal to the regular Army of the United States. Its older officers trained in the war are as good as any that exist to-day on the face of the earth, and its younger officers who have come up since, receiving a complete military education at the Military Academy at West Point, will be found always, if an emergency arises, capable when the older officers have passed off the stage of taking their places and of keeping up the name and the illustrious record of the Army of the United States.

Neither—and I should like the Senator from Illinois to feel this—does my opposition come, it can not come, from any desire to interfere with a bill reported by him. That Senator is a great authority upon military matters in this body, and in many matters of detail, in questions involving the construction of regiments whether they shall have two or three battalions, whether legislation may be needed in order that one part of the Army may adapt itself to the uses of another part, I would yield much to the Senator from Illinois, but this provision to increase the rank and file of the standing Army in time of profound peace is a subject on which I may have as firm convictions as he, and upon which I may be as capable of investigating as he. It is a question upon which a civilian may have as clear a view and perhaps may be as right as a man who has had experience in the Army.

We do not leave other questions to be solved and considered solely by experts in the line upon which we are investigating. When the subject of the Navy is before the Senate we have no naval officers in this body, and we have to get along without them. The Senator would not have questions touching the currency submitted to committees consisting of directors of national banks. He would not have the great question of the control of corporations and monopolies left in the hands of directors and presidents of railway companies. These are all plain, every-day subjects; and the question whether now the rank and file, the enlisted men of the regular Army of the United States shall be increased in numbers, is a question upon which one Senator may have as much light as another.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. It is true that all Senators may have the same light, and some more than others; whether one be a civilian or a military man makes no difference; but the Senator spoke of an inquiry in reference to the currency. I notice one thing, that all questions about the currency come from the Committee on Finance, and that committee has a good deal of influence in the Senate when it makes a report. All matters in reference to the Navy come from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Senator has brought several measures relating to the Navy here, and I have always assisted him because I thought the Committee on Naval Affairs knew more about them than I did, and I have always deferred to that committee. It is usual for each man to have his opinions and sometimes his opinions are better than those of the committee who investigate the subject. I will admit that; but the occasions are rare, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. The Senator must know from his experience that time and again committees have reported bills and that they have gone to wreck under discussion.

One thing more I want to say. The Senator from Illinois in replying to some remarks submitted by me in the opening of this discussion made an allusion to outside influences that were working in opposition to this bill. I did not hear the Senator, and I am very glad that he has risen in his place and stated freely and frankly, and I accept it as entirely satisfactory, that he had no intention of alluding to any outside influence that was interfering with the passage of this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senator does not mean what he says. In the commencement of his statement he said that I alluded to an outside influence. I made no such allusion, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. HALE. I say the Senator made an allusion which was interpreted that way.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh!

Mr. HALE. I did not hear it, but it was so interpreted. I wish to say to the Senator that at the time when this bill was called up and when it was read at the Secretary's desk and I entered my motion to strike out section 2, which provides for this increase of the rank and file of the Army, I had received no intimation from anybody, either here or elsewhere, with reference to the bill, and I had no knowledge till that moment that it contained a provision for this increase. I did not know when I made the motion that a single Senator in this body would sustain me in that motion. In what I have said and in what I shall say I mean to confine myself strictly to the issue that is raised by my motion.

The twenty-five thousand limitation fixed by Congress in 1876 and maintained ever since is what to-day is the law under which the Army is maintained, and the numbers of enlisted men are now up very near to the limitation. The Secretary of War in his report on December last, referring to the Lieutenant-General of the Army, says:

> The Lieutenant-General commanding reports that the Army at the date of the last consolidated returns consists of twenty-one hundred and fifty-four officers and twenty-four thousand seven hundred and five enlisted men.

Less than three hundred more would bring that up to the maximum fixed by the law; and should this measure as reported prevail and the second section not be stricken out, five thousand more men would be added, which would bring the Army nearly or quite within one year's time to thirty thousand enlisted men.

The discussion has shown that various considerations have been urged as a prop to this measure upon which to sustain it. The Senator from Nebraska and other Senators believe that the condition of our relations with the Indian tribes is such that the Army can be made more efficient and life and property upon the border can be better protected if this increase shall be given by Congress.

Since the debate opened I have looked somewhat into the record of the past upon Indian wars, and I have been surprised to find how Indian hostilities and Indian outbreaks have steadily dwindled in the last twenty years, so that one-half of the present Army would I believe be ample for every near or remote Indian danger.

I look back to the operations of the Army upon the frontier and with the Indian tribes as far as 1860, and I find in the report of the Secretary of War of that year a long discussion given to Indian warfare and as to the danger and as to the efficiency of the Army with reference to that subject. I shall read what the Secretary of War said in winding up the discussion, and I ask the attention of Senators to it, bearing in mind that this report was made when the Army of the United States only had in it as enlisted men from fourteen thousand to fifteen thousand men instead of twenty-five thousand as at present.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the Senator proceeds on that point, I should like to have these things correct in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will wait until I finish this subject, I should like not to go back now while I am upon this matter.

Mr. LOGAN. I only wanted to call attention to the statutes reducing the Army. The Senator spoke of 1866. It was not done in 1866.

Mr. HALE. In 1876. The Senator is wrong. I made no allusion to 1866, but to 1876.

Mr. LOGAN. It was not done in 1876.

Mr. HALE. Yes; I read the clause. Here is what with an army of between fourteen thousand and fifteen thousand men, the Secretary of War said, instead of asking for more men or more money:

> It should be borne in mind that, while appropriations have been made to sustain our Army upon a peace footing, it has been called upon to prosecute an active and sanguinary war, for a distance extending from the thirty-fifth to the forty-sixth degree of north latitude, with very numerous tribes of hardy and warlike Indians. It should be remembered, also, that the scenes of these operations have been over the wildest and most remote regions of our mountainous Territories lying between the plains on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountain chain and the Pacific Ocean. Under these circumstances it has required the greatest watchfulness and care to keep the expenditures for the year within the appropriations for it.

There is no call for another man, there is no request that Congress shall give more money; and this was at a time when the spirit of the Indians was unbroken; it was at a time when the great Sioux tribe, or to speak more correctly when the different tribes and bands of the great Sioux Nation, occupied a good part of Minnesota, Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, and when they could bring into the field five thousand armed warriors at any one time. Yet with a war raging over eleven degrees of latitude, the Secretary of War with sixteen thousand men at his disposal only said that in consequence of these important campaigns and operations he had found it hard to keep within the limit of the appropriations which had been given by Congress. Nobody then introduced a bill providing for an additional increase of expenditures for the Army or for an increase of its enlisted men; but the Secretary of War said that he could get along very well with the money and the men he had.

So it has continued down to the present day; and this year, as a commentary upon this whole subject of the Indian situation, the Secretary of the Interior says in his annual report:

> The Indian race is no longer a source of danger to the peace or security of this great Republic. Most of the reservations are encircled by powerful communities, and those upon the frontier are completely in the hands of our military forces. Nor is the Indian any longer an obstacle to our national progress or to our material development.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> It is not, therefore, to protect the peace of the country, or the security of its frontiers from the danger of Indian war, or on account of their hindrance to our material progress, that all these efforts and expenditures are made in their behalf.

With this I leave this part of the subject, and I pass to other considerations. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in his clear and forcible exposition of his side of this case called attention to other dangers. He says that we are a great nation, and that the Monroe doctrine ought to be enforced. Mr. President, I hope that the Monroe doctrine as it is considered and believed in under popular acceptation will never be abandoned and will be enforced; but as I said a little while ago in touching the question of the protection of American citizens, the size of the regular Army, the number of its enlisted men will never enter into the consideration of any Secretary of State or any President or any Cabinet conclave that considers the great question of the United States not permitting foreign nations, European powers, to get new foothold upon this continent. That question is not to be settled in any way by the regular Army.

The Senator from Connecticut says that the Northeast frontiers are open and that we need a larger regular Army. Does the Senator know that within the last few years the War Department has given up voluntarily every fort that it had upon the frontier in the Northeast and turned it over to the civil authority, because it believed there was no call for keeping it? And when he refers to the Southwestern frontier, along the Mexican line, does he not know that the last Indian hostilities have resulted in the surrender of the most mischievous of all the Indian fighters of to-day to our forces?

He says that he wants this country to be in a condition where the Government can assert itself in the protection of American citizens, as it did in the case of Martin Koszta, and therefore he wants the regular Army increased. Does the Senator know that on that bright August morning in 1853, in the harbor of Smyrna, when Captain Ingraham double-shotted the guns of the Saint Louis and compelled the Austrian Government to release Martin Koszta because he had filed an intention of citizenship here and had abandoned his allegiance to Austria, that the regular Army of the United States was only eleven thousand men, and that if it had been twenty thousand men Secretary Marcy would have been no firmer in his enunciation of the proposition that sustained the act of Captain Ingraham and Commodore Stringer?

But the Senator from Illinois in charge of this bill, with his accustomed frankness and intrepidity, which we all admire, has stated clearly what is the object of the bill. It is not the Indian dangers, it is not foreign power, it is that he believes the Army as an organization will be better, will be stronger, will appear better, and will show better—I do not use the word show in an offensive way—that it will be a more complete organization. Although this has been read before, as it is in the line of what I am saying I shall read what the Senator said is the object as he understands it of the bill:

I want the Senator to understand that this proposition to increase the Army is not for any present needs; it is not because there is an Indian war; it is not because there is danger from Indians or danger from anywhere; it is not because I apprehend any danger from any source that I proposed this in the bill before the Military Committee, and that the Military Committee agreed to it, but it is that the Government of the United States may at least have an army that will have some respectability when it is called the Army of the United States, both at home and abroad.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], in following his chief upon the committee, made the same argument, and said in terms that the companies in our regiments upon the frontier or elsewhere, when they come to "parade," and I use his word, make such a poor show that it is absolutely necessary that their ranks shall be fuller.

The main thought which I have in my mind in opposing the bill is that it departs entirely from what I understand to be the use of the standing Army of the United States. If there is any need of an increase of the efficiency of the Army, if there is any possible danger confronting us at home or abroad, then this proposition begins at the wrong end. The last place that we need, under any circumstances, to increase the regular Army is in its enlisted force. The whole theory of our standing Army is that it shall be a skeleton organization capable of expansion upon an emergency; and the history of the American people has always shown that when the emergency comes the rank and file will be furnished by the people. From year to year we graduate from West Point large classes of young men who enter the regular Army and take its lower ranks. Whenever an emergency arises these officers are available to command the countless legions of the American people who never fail to respond when the Government calls for their service in time of danger.

That is the theory of the standing Army of the United States. It is only because of this that the standing Army of the United States has not been subjected to the unpopularity which affects a standing army in other countries. The American citizen rarely sees the enlisted man in our regular Army, and the American people are glad to maintain this skeleton organization, this framework, in order that if need comes, as I have said, it may be filled up.

The whole theory upon which we maintain our military establishment is violated by this bill. Popular levies must fill up our armies whenever there is any occasion for a large military force. I have lately been looking through the War Department reports at the time when the great civil war fell upon the American people, when we were entering upon an experience such as our people never had before and I trust will never have again. What was the condition of our military establishment then and how was it treated? We had a regular army of sixteen thousand men, well officered by bright, superior men who had been mostly educated at West Point. Many of them had left the service and engaged in vocations outside which brought to them more pecuniary results, an easier life, and more freedom. When the war opened the regular Army, so far as its enlisted men, its rank and file, went, sank into absolute insignificance. In that Titanic conflict which shook a continent the regular Army of the United States, so far as its rank and file went, was leather and prunella. It went nearly out of sight a year after hostilities had broken out; the regular Army had only been increased to 20,334 men, while the volunteer force had run up to 640,637 men, commanded largely by the officers of the regular Army who had been educated by the Government for that very purpose.

It was this skeleton organization which we have maintained since, and which we ought to maintain now, which furnished most of the great commanders upon both sides. Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, Meade, Howard, Schofield, McPherson, in our Army, and Lee, the Johnstons, Bragg, and the great commanders in the confederate army, were the result of this organization; and when war was entered upon by the two sections of the country these officers upon either side found the ranks filled up for their command, and the great war went on and neither side thought of a regular army.

I have had some inspiration communicated to me in reading the War Department reports of that time, showing the majestic uprising of the American people and their readiness to respond in time of danger, no matter what may be read by the Senator from Illinois to the contrary. Here is what the Secretary of War said in his report:

Congress, during its extra session, authorized the Army to be increased by the acceptance of a volunteer force of five hundred thousand men, and made an appropriation of $500,000,000 for its support. A call for the troops was immediately made; but so numerous were the offers that it was found difficult to discriminate in the choice where the patriotism of the people demanded that there should be no restriction upon enlistments. Every portion of the loyal States desired to swell the Army, and every community was anxious that it should be represented in a cause that appealed to the noblest impulses of our people.

Elsewhere he says:

In the absence of any general system of organization, upward of seven hundred thousand men have already been brought into the field; and, in view of the alacrity and enthusiasm that have been displayed, I do not hesitate to express the belief that no combination of events can arise in which this country will not be able not only to protect itself, but, contrary to its policy, which is peace with all the world, to enter upon aggressive operations against any power that may intermeddle with our domestic affairs.

That was our experience in our greatest danger, and we ought to learn a lesson from it. We ought to learn that if there is any need for fighting men to any great extent the American people will supply them. As they have done they will never fail to do.

The second section of the bill violates every tradition and every experience under our Government. It has never been attempted before in time of profound peace to increase the enlisted men of the Army, and that is the issue involved in my motion to strike out the section. It is not the question of organization, it is not the question which has been so much dwelt upon and so ably presented and argued by the Senator from Illinois as to the form of regiments, the number of officers, whether there shall be two or three battalions. That is not the question. Whenever that may be done, whenever any measure of that kind may be adopted, when the status of the Army as a framework, as a skeleton organization, shall have been fixed by Congress, then will be time enough to consider the increase of the enlisted men of the Army.

All that the Senator has read as to the recommendations of military authorities, the Secretaries of War and Generals of the Army, come to just this, as I stated in opening this debate: For years the distinctive proposition that five thousand more men ought to be added to the Army was presented with regular recurrence by Secretaries of War and Generals of the Army to Congress, and as repeatedly ignored and denied, until at last in 1881 that was given up, and from that day to this this distinctive proposition which I am now opposing has been abandoned by the War Department. The Department has from time to time, as the Senator has read, asked that new companies be added, that the organization of the regiments shall be changed, and that companies may be filled up; but the distinctive proposition that we shall add to the Army, to its enlisted men, a force of five thousand men was abandoned at that time and has not been submitted since, as I believe largely because the War Department and the Government saw that the need of a large army had decreased.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Will the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HALE. Oh, yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator not know that the present Secretary of War has recommended the same thing?

Mr. HALE. I do not know that the Secretary of War has asked for this increase of five thousand men to the enlisted force of the Army. No, sir; I do not know it.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I am familiar with the report of the Secretary of War, and it has already been read. I understand that; but the distinctive proposition of adding five thousand men to the rank and file of the Army of the United States was abandoned, as I have said, years ago.

Mr. LOGAN. That is dodging the question. The Secretary of War distinctly recommends, in his report this year to Congress, the adoption of the twelve-company measure recommended by General Sherman, to make the infantry, cavalry, and artillery alike in organization; and if you take the twelve-company recommendation and make the calculation, you will find that it just covers the five thousand additional men.

Mr. HALE. But it does not follow, if you change the form and make a regiment consist of three battalions of four companies each, that enlisted men are to be added. That does not follow by any means. I have letters now from officers of the Army saying that, while they sustain that proposition, and believe that it would be better in case of any emergency involving war that we should have a three-battalion organization in each regiment, and one of these battalions can remain entirely unfilled so far as enlisted men go, and that the officers attached to the third, the odd battalion, in time of peace can be sent to the various duties that now engross officers of the Army outside of duty in the field. So the proposition to change the form of the regiment does not by any means involve an increase in the enlisted force of the Army; and I am not prepared to say that when the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska shall be presented I will not be in favor of that, much as I am opposed to increasing the rank and file.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANDERSON. I interrupt the Senator from Maine without hesitation——

Mr. HALE. The Senator is entirely right.

Mr. MANDERSON. Because I believe in this matter he desires to be right according to the record. I call his attention to the fact that in 1883 the General of the Army, General Sherman, with the approval of the then Secretary of War, made a recommendation which forms the basis of all after recommendations of General Sheridan and the Secretary of War succeeding Mr. Lincoln.

It is true, as the Senator says, the General suggests that the three-battalion organization be adopted and that the third battalion be a mere skeleton made up of officers without enlisted men, but he proposes that the regiments of infantry so organized shall consist in the two battalions of eight companies of one hundred men each, so that each regiment of infantry would be composed of eight hundred enlisted men. The number of enlisted men in the present organization of the infantry regiments is from three hundred and sixty to four hundred, under the ten-company organization. So I submit that even by permitting one battalion to remain a skeleton the increase of the infantry arm of the service would be really more than this bill provides for.

Mr. HALE. General Schofield struck this very subject and furnished the solution of it in a letter, part of which has already been quoted by the Senator from Illinois, in which he says that the organization of the Army must be subject to the number of enlisted men which Congress should give. He said in that letter to the committee:

> The President should be authorized by law to determine from time to time, according to the number of enlisted men authorized by Congress from year to year, the number of regiments and the number of battalions of each regiment to be kept organized for active service.

That clear-sighted officer saw plainly and clearly that the essential limitation upon the Army must be what Congress declared should be the enlisted force, and he was in favor of lodging with the President the power, if you put up these regiments to eight hundred men of rank and file, to reduce the regiments. That is the inevitable conclusion. If Congress has determined that there shall be but twenty-five thousand enlisted men in the Army, and it is insisted that each regiment shall have full numbers and overflowing ranks, it may be the inevitable result will come, as General Schofield suggests, that the President will be authorized and empowered to reduce the number of regiments, and they will be sacrificed in numbers, and our whole theory of a large framework skeleton organization will disappear in obedience to the clamor that is raised for more enlisted men. I do not want to see that done. I want the Army to be just what General McClellan asked that it should be in a letter which has been quoted by the Senator, in which he said:

> The permanent strength of the regular Army should be sufficient to enable it to perform with promptness, vigor, economy, and certainty all its ordinary duties; and its organization should be so elastic as to permit a rapid, economical, and efficient increase of its numbers.

Let any man delve in the military literature of this period, when this subject was investigated, and he will find that all these great officers of the Army recognized the essential point, that the organization of the Army should be elastic, so that it might be reasonably increased in time of danger. The one thing that to-day with the Army of the United States I think is the underlying belief is not that more enlisted men are needed but that the organization shall be kept up—that we may from year to year graduate large classes from West Point and put them in the Army, so that when an emergency comes we shall have those men to lead the armies of the United States.

Sir, I have no fear of our ever being embarrassed by the lack of an army under any conditions. Should war break out at any time, there never was a population in the history of the human race that would respond so quickly to a call by the Government for volunteer forces as the people of the United States on this very day upon which we live and breathe. Let any trouble arise from any foreign power and an army be needed to repel invasion, nay, to take the aggressive, as the Secretary of War says in his report in 1861, and the thousands and tens of thousands of the old soldiers of the Army of the Republic would respond upon an hour's notice. Nay, sir, not only the men of the armies of the Republic, but the men of the armies of the confederate government, who yielded up their cause at Appomattox, would respond as readily as would the Union soldiers of the Northern armies; and no President would need to wait for one sun to set before he would get the response to his telegraphic message to the country that the time of need had arisen.

For these reasons we do not need an increase in the regular Army. Some things we do need, and all the more because we need some things we ought not to expend a dollar in increasing the rank and file of the regular Army.

Let me make one suggestion to Senators upon this side of the Chamber. The administration of the Government passed from us more than a year ago. The responsibility is elsewhere. The guardianship of the interests of the American people, so far as the Executive goes, rests with the other side. Neither the President, and, as I have said, not to go into that question, nor his subordinate, the head of the War Department, has sent in a message to the American Congress asking that we increase the rank and file of the American Army five thousand men. The Commander-in-Chief of that Army has in no way intimated that we need this increase and the increased expenditure. Yet Senators are asked to push this measure and intrude it upon an administration which has not sought it.

Some things we need. Our whole line of coast, as the Senator from Illinois has said, on the Pacific and on the Atlantic and along the Gulf coast, lies absolutely open and unprotected. A third-class war ship of any naval power on the earth could thunder at the gates of every city upon our seaboard coast and levy contributions of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, and we have nothing to prevent it. Yet instead of appropriating liberally for fortifications and for guns constructed under modern art and experience we are asked to increase the rank and file of the regular Army of the United States. The Navy of the United States is dropping to pieces under the feet of the gallant men who man the ships. Every year wooden ships are going out and but little has been done in the way of replacing them. We have not a single ship that could compete with or oppose or drive away a second-class ship of any power of Europe, and yet we are asked to increase the enlisted force of the Army of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator, I believe, agrees with me in desiring that fortifications should be built around the coast?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I am very much in favor of that.

Mr. LOGAN. Will you tell me what character of men you would use to man the guns in the fortifications?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I will tell the Senator exactly. You can not elaborate and establish a system of fortifications and build those fortifications with the labor of American workmen until a series of years have passed, and you no more need another enlisted man in any fortification that we shall build for two years to come than you need him on the top of the Washington Monument.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, there is exactly one point on which he is mistaken. You can not take a man and train him to use guns in a fortification except in a series of years. You can not make a gunner out of a man in a day.

Mr. HALE. You can not make a gun in a day.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that, but how will it be after the guns are made? Your fortifications to-day have no men in them. Your guns are rusting on the parapets.

Mr. HALE. They would be no use if they were not.

Mr. LOGAN. No use! There is no war and therefore no use, the Senator says. The necessity for keeping your war material in good condition is just as great in time of peace as in time of war, and greater too, because it requires more work on them. In time of war necessity forces them at all times to keep the guns in good condition, because they have to be then in use every day, but in time of peace the necessity is greater to keep them in perfect order and good condition, so that they may be used. You may build as many fortifications as you please around the country and recruit a few raw men and put them in them and without a year or two of experience you might as well have nobody. That is the fact about it. A gunner can not be trained in a short time.

Mr. HALE. Letting go the question of fortifications which has been touched upon, we can not get such a gun as would be efficient, as would be worth the having to man a fortification after it is built, or while it is being built, except by the expenditure of money, which we are willing to give, and of time, which we must expend. You can not do anything with the additional enlisted man either in the fortifications or upon the guns until the guns are made and the fortifications built, and he would be a useless appendage to the Army until that time.

I have failed to see in this discussion or in anything that has been urged here any direct statement anywhere of the real use that those five thousand men would be put to. Nobody has enlightened us on that point. It is not an actual need. It is not an actual service, as the Senator from Illinois has frankly admitted, and I thank him for it, but it is because it is believed that the Army will be more nearly complete and symmetrical as an existing organization if we fill up the ranks. So it would, and if we were a small power and had no people to resort to in emergencies, and had to maintain an army to do our fighting, as Frederick's armies did, as Gustavus's army did, then we should want just such an army as the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from Connecticut, and the Senator from Massachusetts, and the Senator from Nebraska want; but our conditions, as I have tried to explain, are so absolutely different that every consideration which applies to such a small people with the need of a military force for defense or aggression in no degree applies to us.

I have searched the records of the past, giving the history and course of the measures touching the Army of the United States, and I do not find until to-day that ever in a period of profound peace it was proposed to increase the regular Army of the United States. I find, on the contrary, a long line of precedents squarely and directly in the teeth of such a proposition. I find that always following every war or every threatened war the legislator in the American Congress appeared to deem it his first duty to reduce the standing Army, and all along from the day of the Revolution down to the present time that has been the accepted rule of the American people. It has become embodied as a tradition, and I for one object to its being departed from now. There are many things which make demands upon us that we ought to legislate upon, and one of the last things we should take upon us is to-day to increase the regular Army of the United States.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I simply desire to supplement some of the quotations read by the Senator from Maine by giving some other matter to be found in the same reports from which he quoted which seem to me to be germane to this discussion. The Senator says that he has delved among the reports of the past in regard to some of the propositions involved, and takes us with him back to the days before the war, and reads from the report of the then Secretary of War, John B. Floyd, to show that at that time, according to the Secretary, the Army, much less in number then than now, was sufficient for all the purposes for which it might be used, and especially sufficient for the protection of our borders against any threatening Indian difficulty. I take up the book where he left off and I read further. The Secretary of War said, after using the language quoted by the Senator:

I feel no hesitation now in bringing to the notice of Congress the importance of restoring to the War Department the superintendence and control of the Indians. It is quite impossible to impress upon these savages the idea of obedience by any other means than military power. They respect nothing but a strong military force, and its proximity to them is therefore essential.

I submit that the experience with the American Indian in the years which have elapsed since 1860 does not make that foolish to-day which was wisdom then. I might quote also from General Schofield, and show the Senator that in the opinion of that able officer the show of military force to-day upon the Northwestern frontier is of such a character that it simply excites the contempt of the Indian.

Let us look for a moment at the changed conditions in the Indian country from 1860 to the present time, changes referred to briefly by the Senator from Maine. In 1860 there was but a handful of men in the now great States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Kansas, Nebraska, and the Northwestern Territories. Now millions of men, women, and children occupy that broad domain. What has been the result upon the Indian himself? In 1860, and for many years after that time, he ranged unmolested over the thousands and thousands of miles of territory where he could pursue the game of that period. There was no contact or conflict between him and the white settler except on rare occasions. But now, as the Senator says, the Indians, instead of roaming over that vast territory, have been gathered year after year upon reservations; and that fact has produced many of the Indian wars of late years. The Sioux Nation, for instance, gathered in the south part of the Territory of Dakota, occupying 36,000 square miles of territory, numbering from twenty-five thousand to twenty-eight thousand people, and we have as a guard against any raid that they might make upon the Northwestern territory but the two posts which I referred to the other day, the post at Fort Robinson and the post at Fort Niobrara, consisting of less than five hundred enlisted men, who guard all that vast frontier against an attack that I say is imminent from five thousand to eight thousand Sioux warriors armed and equipped with the best implements of war.

There is a changed condition in respect to their ability to fight now and then. Ten or twenty years ago the Indian of the frontier had as his weapon of attack and his weapon of defense the bow and arrow, and perhaps a few shotguns or poor muskets; but to-day, as I suggested before to the Senator from Maine, every adult Indian of the tribes of the West is armed with the Winchester rifle, and is expert in its deadly use.

But the Senator from Maine says, and he quotes from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, that there is no danger that these Indians will commit any depredations or probably take the war-path. I submit as against that statement that it is not made by the Secretary of the Interior exactly as it is quoted by the Senator, because the Secretary of the Interior refers to the fact that these outbursts are to be prevented only by the military arm. I submit, as against the guess of the Senator from Maine, the letter I read a few days ago from the officer in command at Fort Niobrara, wherein he says that it is only a question of time, and probably a very short time, when there will be trouble with Red Cloud and his band at the Pine Ridge agency. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, introduced at this session of Congress a bill, which has passed the Senate, proposing to take from the great Sioux reservation about one-third of the present possessions of the Sioux Indians and open a way through the center of the nation.

Mr. DAWES. More.

Mr. MANDERSON. Nearly half of it, perhaps, in point of area. The proposition in that bill is that the law shall not be operative until a certain portion, perhaps a majority, of the Sioux braves shall consent to its provisions. I saw within a few days a letter from Dr. McGillycuddy, the efficient agent of the Sioux Indians who are gathered in the vicinity of the Pine Ridge agency, in which he said that the bill had excited considerable discussion and opposition around the Indian camp-fires in the vicinity of his and of the Rosebud agency, and it had been determined, if you please, by resolution considered and passed, that the first Indian who should sign an agreement that such a law should become operative by their consent should be killed by his brother Indians. That is the fact, and it is one of the existing dangers from the Indians in that Territory.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I dislike very much to have the Senator's statement go out without qualification. It is very true that Red Cloud, an exceedingly bold chief there, holds a fort near the Pine Ridge agency and plants the American flag over it, and considers himself in some sense the President of the United States, and he has announced in a flourishing trumpet proclamation what he will do to any Indian who gives his assent to that bill; but he does not represent more than one hundred and fifty or two hundred, all told, of the twenty-eight thousand Indians about there.

While I agree with the Senator as to the propriety of passing this bill, I do protest against the idea of charging it to the Indians. There never was a day when the Indian needed the Army around him as little as he does to-day. There is, in my opinion, need of filling up the regiments, but not because of anything the Indian has done in the near past or that there is any idea of his doing in the future.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the sanguine view of the situation indulged in by the Senator from Massachusetts is the true one, and I hope I may be all wrong in my fear of trouble to the community in which I live, but it does not change my view of the situation, because, as I have heretofore suggested, my conclusion is reached after a most careful investigation made personally of the condition of affairs upon the Sioux reservation and an observation that has been made within a few months past. I do not want to appear in the light of an alarmist, but I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is threatening danger there. Red Cloud is a most aggressive, a most dangerous, and at the same time a most able Indian, and he has following him not only the handful of men who compose his band and the braves of the Northern Cheyennes, but there flock to his standard raised above the house built for him by the Government of the United States every discontented and troublesome Indian of the Sioux Nation. If there shall be outbreak there as the result of deliberation by those bands over what is known as the Dawes bill for dividing the Sioux reservation, I believe it will be trouble most grave in its character, that can not and will not be confined to the Indian bands nor limited to the Sioux reservation, but will extend with all the horrors of a conflict of that kind to the white men who have so lately made themselves homes in that vicinity. It means a great danger to every white settlement on that border.

The Senator from Maine quoted somewhat from General Schofield, and I desire to supplement what he read by reading another extract or two in addition to what I presented in the discussion the other day. He said:

The only course consistent with justice and humanity, and with the dignity of a great nation, is to hold savage tribes in subjection by a show of force which they dare not disregard, and then to teach them by all practicable means to prefer friendship and peace rather than enmity and war.

I will also quote from General Schofield, than whom no man is better informed about this whole question, a part of his report bearing upon the question of the increase of the Army of the United States. The Senator says that while General Schofield is in favor of the three-battalion organization he is in favor of reaching that result by decreasing the number of enlisted men in the infantry regiments of the Army of the United States. But not so, for General Schofield says in the report from which I read:

If such measures are promptly adopted, the wrongs and errors of the past may be largely atoned for, the savage tribes of the country may be rapidly civilized and finally incorporated into the great body of the people.

The military force now required for this service will be in training for the more important services which must ere long be required of it, unless the future history of this country is very different from its past history, and from that of all other civilized nations.

I respectfully submit that these subjects are worthy of the most serious consideration as well as, and in connection with, that of the national defense against possible foreign aggression. While the country is struggling under a great load of unemployed capital and labor, we are neglecting the ordinary prudential measures dictated by reason and experience, which teach that some part of this surplus of capital and labor should be employed to protect the accumulated wealth of the country and the lives of the people from destruction by domestic or foreign foes.

He says further:

I beg leave to submit that, in a country of fifty millions of people, fifty thousand men would be a small army to be maintained with sole reference to possible foreign wars. But when the country has constant daily use for nine-tenths of that force to protect its people and their property against destruction by savage tribes in their midst, it is extremely unwise to limit the Army to its present strength. As well might the great cities of the country limit their police force to one-half that which experience has shown to be necessary for daily service, with no reserve for great emergencies.

I submit that this language of General Schofield, not of ancient date but written as of yesterday, for it is his report of this year, is based upon an experience beyond that of any Senator upon this floor; that from the very nature of his position he has been so situated with regard to the Indian troubles, the domestic troubles that threaten the country, and with respect to the Army of the United States, that he knows whereof he speaks; and I submit that the Senator from Maine is wofully mistaken when he makes the statement that General Schofield is not in favor of an increase of the enlisted force of the Army.

Take some of the threatening dangers referred to by the Senator from Maine. As I understand him, we are in a condition that is almost defenseless upon our seacoast. He is the earnest, the eloquent, and the proper advocate of bettering the condition of affairs upon the coast by the building of modern fortifications and the casting of modern guns. He says he is in favor of building the fortifications and casting the guns, because we are entirely powerless against any attack that might be made upon us even by a third or fourth rate power. But he also says there is no necessity for an increase of the Army to protect the coast; that it would take at least two years to build the fortifications and cast the guns which must be manned by the Army of the United States. I suggest to him that if there is the imminent danger he describes and it would take us two years to build the needed fortifications that will keep off invading fleets, the chances are that while we are getting ready for the defense of the character he speaks of a foreign army might invade this country, and a regular army even of thirty thousand men would be considered as of great importance for the purpose of protecting our industries and saving the country.

The Senator suggests that the regular Army of the United States when the war broke out in 1861 was of very little importance; that we would have been perhaps as well off if we had had no Army at all at that time and trusted entirely to volunteer organizations.

Mr. HALE. So far as the rank and file is concerned. That is my proposition.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand.

Mr. HALE. But the number of enlisted men was not a matter of moment.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is to say, the enlisted men of the Army of the United States were not needed at all, and that all we needed were the officers of the Army. I do not know what the experience of the Senator from Maine may have been in the early part of the dark days of 1861, but I apprehend that during that time he probably visited some of the camps of the volunteer soldiers and saw some of the difficulties under which they labored. I remember that in April, 1861, I was one of several thousand men gathered in camp for the purpose of organization into regimental battalions to take the field, and of the thousands gathered in the camp of rendezvous there were very few able to instruct in the school of the battalion, the school of the company, or the manual of arms. I think perhaps five thousand men were gathered in the camp I refer to in the city of Cleveland, in 1861, and I venture the assertion that there were not one hundred men fitted to instruct that large body of men in any part of the duty of the soldier. The officers of the Army of the United States were not there in very large number. There were a few men who had served as private soldiers in the regular Army, and these became the efficient instructors of companies and battalions, took commissions in the volunteer army, and did most effective service.

Mr. President, I believe in making the Army of the United States an organization so efficient and of such character that it shall be the pride of the American citizen to enter into its ranks as a private soldier, and this bill is a step in that direction. I believe that by the increased pay proposed by this bill to the private soldier, by increased opportunities of instruction, not only in the mere school of the soldier, the manual of arms, and the drill of the company, but by instruction in the science of war, the intelligent private soldiers of the Army of the United States may become the officers who will lead the volunteer organizations in the wars of the future to conflict and to success.

But I submit, Mr. President, that the view taken of this matter by the Senator from Maine is not one that has been held by those who have been in position to know a great deal about the subject. I call his attention to but one authority, and it seems to me that it will be sufficient for the purpose. I will read from two different authorities. When John C. Calhoun was Secretary of War of the United States he was commenting upon the experience the country had in passing through in the war of 1812, and said:

> The disadvantages of inexperience in the officers and men without the means of immediate instruction was the fatal error at the commencement of the late war that cost us so much treasure and blood. The peace establishment which preceded it was very imperfectly organized, and did not admit of the necessary augmentation.

Yet notwithstanding that experience we went on just as we are going on to-day until we reached the year 1846, and the Mexican war was upon us. Were we any better prepared? No; the economists in the Congress of the United States kept down the military organization and did everything apparently to make it inefficient rather than promote its efficiency, and the result is described by General McClellan in an article written by him in the year 1877:

> When the Mexican war broke out the actual strength of the regular Army was about fifty-three hundred. The force with which General Taylor reached the Rio Grande was three thousand, and that with which he fought the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma only twenty-one hundred. There can be no doubt that if the strength of the Army had sufficed to enable him to move to the Rio Grande with ten thousand men the Mexicans would not have crossed the river and in all human probability the war would have been avoided. The cost of maintaining the seven thousand additional men during the whole period from the close of the war of 1812 to the commencement of the Mexican war would not have amounted to two-thirds of the direct expenses of the latter war, not taking into account the large cost of the Seminole and other Indian wars, or the heavy losses by disease and in battle, or the indirect losses inseparable from all wars.

Mr. HALE. What does General McClellan state there was the real actual force of the regular Army of the United States?

Mr. MANDERSON. The actual fighting strength of the regular Army was about five thousand three hundred men. We ran along after this experience in the war with Mexico and we reached the time to which the Senator from Maine has referred, and, as I understand him, he says all that was necessary to place this Government in the year 1861 in efficient position to quell the war of the rebellion was that we should have had a mere skeleton army, made up of officers without enlisted men. How you are to maintain such an organization I am somewhat at a loss to perceive. The officer who drills his battalion or the captain who drills his company receives instruction as well as gives it, and his experience would be worth but little if he was a mere book soldier. The ability to handle men in the field, so that they may be efficient and a fighting force, is based upon handling them in time of peace. A captain who should simply confine himself to his tactics in his room, and never go upon the drill-ground for the purpose of maneuvering his company and drilling them in the school of the company, would be of very little use when you placed him in command of one hundred men at the outbreak of a war. As the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] suggests, he does not see what the officers could learn about the marching of troops, or the camp life, the care of men, and preparing them for battle.

During last summer when in the Territory of Utah I spent three days at what was called the summer camp of instruction, organized by General McCook, in command of Camp Douglas. Of his own regiment and another he had gathered fifteen companies of men, very few men to a company it is true, but still sufficient for the purposes of drill and sufficient for instruction in the practical, not theoretical, art of war. These officers and men under the direction of their efficient leader had gone somewhat into the actual requirements of war. I saw there for the first time since the close of the war of the rebellion earthworks constructed and the making of all the guards that are prepared for the purpose of making obstructions to an attack—gabions, fascines, abatis, &c.; and I submit to the Senator from Maine that those who received the most effectual good from this practice drill, which would have been impossible without the enlisted men, were the younger officers, who had seen nothing of war and were here putting in actual practice the theories that they had learned at West Point.

But I am digressing from the proposition. I proposed to show that the efficient commander of the Army of the Potomac differed somewhat from the Senator from Maine.

I remember a story of a glib young lawyer who advanced a remarkable legal proposition to the court, and was told by the judge: "My young friend I am very much surprised to hear you make a statement of that kind and claim it to be law;" and opening a volume of Blackstone said: "Blackstone says so and so—a proposition directly the reverse of that just stated."

The attorney was not at all embarrassed, and said: "Well, your honor, there is where Blackstone and I differ." I submit to the Senator from Maine that I will show wherein he and General McClellan differ as to what would have been the probable result if we had had an army of the character described by him and what would have resulted if we had had an efficient army of the character proposed by this bill. General McClellan says:

> But the most instructive case of all is that of the civil war. We do not doubt that fifteen thousand regulars on the field of the first Manassas would have insured the complete rout of the raw confederates, and, in all probability, put an end to the war. They would certainly have enabled us to drive the confederate government out of Virginia and have cleared the eastern portion of the State as completely as the work was accomplished a little earlier in West Virginia.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator agree with General McClellan that a regular army of fifteen thousand men would have not only defeated the rebel forces, but would have ended the war?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think this is true beyond question, that if fifteen thousand regular troops had been upon the Union side at the battle of Manassas, the first Bull Run would not have been a sore defeat to the Union arms, but would have been a victory of such character that it might, and probably would, have induced a peace upon some terms.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that no matter what might have been the result of the first battle of Bull Run, had our victory been as great as it could have been, it would have perceptibly shortened the war?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it would most decidedly.

Mr. HALE. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. MANDERSON. And do not agree either with General McClellan on that proposition.

Mr. HALE. There were several things with reference to the conduct of the war where I did not agree with General McClellan. I do not believe that great war could have been stopped by one battle.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think there will be no issue between the Senator from Maine and myself on the proposition that as an organizer of troops, a disciplinarian, and a man who had extraordinary military research, skill, and ability in that direction few men were higher than General McClellan. I have given his view of the matter.

Mr. HALE. Let me put a question. Supposing the United States at that time had had a regular Army of one hundred thousand men, does the Senator believe that that would have prevented the war of the rebellion and the settlement of the great issues involved in that war?

Mr. MANDERSON. I believe most firmly that if the United States had had in April, 1861, an army of one hundred thousand, true to the cause of the Union——

Mr. HALE. That is another thing.

Mr. MANDERSON. True to the cause of the Union, there would have been no war.

Mr. HALE. That is another thing. Had the United States had an army of one hundred thousand men at that time, one-half of them in moral, effective, and physical force would have been directed against the life of the Government as it was.

Mr. HAWLEY. Pardon me just there. There is not on record the desertion of a company or a soldier from the regular Army.

Mr. MANDERSON. On the contrary——

Mr. HALE. I am not stating that. But as a military establishment under the control, under the political influence at the time, one hundred thousand men in the regular Army of the United States in 1861 would not have been of perceptible benefit to us in that great struggle.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is where the Senator and General McClellan differ.

Mr. HALE. I am obliged to differ with General McClellan.

Mr. MANDERSON. Let us read further what he says, and this was written in 1877, many years after the close of the war, when he had the benefit of not only his war experience, but the observation resulting from investigation after the war, of reports of different army leaders, &c.:

> The cost of maintaining these fifteen thousand additional troops from the close of the Mexican war to the commencement of the war of secession would not have amounted to one-fiftieth part of the war debts of the General Government, the States, counties, and municipalities. Should we compare it with the total amount of direct and indirect expenditures by both parties to the war, the losses of the two sections in lives, in property destroyed, business ruined, and capital sunk, we should be at a loss to express the relation, so absurdly small would be the relative cost of those additional troops.

But, Mr. President, does it need quotation or argument that in time of peace we should prepare for war? There is no adage, it seems to me, that has in it more of wisdom, and I submit to the Senate another quotation somewhat apropos to the subject under consideration. De Tocqueville, in his celebrated work, says:

> War is an occurrence to which all nations are subject, democratic nations as well as all others. Whatever taste they may have for peace, they must hold themselves in readiness to repel aggression.

That, I take it, is the wise position occupied by the Senator from Maine when he agrees that there are threatened dangers requiring an increase of the Navy of the United States, the building of war ships, the construction of fortifications, and the casting of guns. It seems to me that every reason which prompts him to this conclusion should prompt him also to the proposition that the regular Army of the United States should be made efficient.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if I understand the argument of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] it is based upon two theories: first, that we want an increase of the Army to suppress possible Indian outbreaks, and, second, we want it for fear there may be another rebellion. If there is anything at all in the discussion of the question as to what would have been the effect of a large army in 1861, it is on the hypothesis that we must keep a large standing army for the purpose of meeting just such emergencies as arose then. I do not suppose the Senator from Nebraska will claim that there is a possibility of such an occurrence again.

Mr. MANDERSON. Did the Senator understand me to say that I expected another rebellion?

Mr. TELLER. I did not understand the Senator so to say.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not understand why the Senator from Colorado should make that remark.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator said that if we had had a large army in 1860 we should have avoided the rebellion; therefore we must now have a large standing army. Why? I simply say there is no force in the argument at all unless the Senator thinks there is danger of another rebellion, which I assume that he does not think will occur. We have now from the chairman and from everybody who has discussed the bill, with the exception of one Senator, the declaration that there is no danger of a war from any source, and that Senator is the Senator from Nebraska, who still insists, as he did the other day, that there is imminent danger of an Indian war; and as to that, and that only, I propose to say a few words, not to go at all into the other question or to attempt to answer what has been said on behalf of the bill by others.

The Senator from Nebraska says that in 1860 there was danger of war with the Indians, but that it is infinitely greater now. The Senator must have carelessly examined the condition of the Indian tribes in this country if he asserts that they are in any such condition to carry on a war as they were in 1860. He says, in the first place, that they were armed with bows and arrows. The Senator is certainly mistaken in that. More than twenty-five years ago I saw the warriors on the plains armed with the best weapons that were then in existence, and if they have got any better now it is simply because there has been an improvement in arms. Then they had a reservoir back of them of food, with a great country outlying with millions of cattle, estimated by Mr. Greeley to be equal to all the horned cattle in the United States, upon which they could feed, with innumerable opportunities to escape from the troops on the frontier; but to-day there is not any frontier at all in the United States. The Indians, instead of being in a condition to carry on war as they were in 1860 when we had the magnificent army of twelve or fifteen thousand men, are in no condition to carry on war for the reason that I gave the other day, which is understood by the Indians as well as by any military man in the world, that they have no supplies upon which they can subsist. They can not go back into the interior and subsist themselves in peace to-day, as the Senator ought to know. Of that immense herd of buffaloes that Mr. Greeley declared was so great in numbers, there are not enough left to-day to keep the Indians a month if they had them all. It is physically impossible for any large number of Indians to go upon the war-path; and they are not only warriors but they are sensible in their methods. They understand very well that they can not be supported in arms against the Government by the Government. They understand that. With all the foolish things we have done in reference to them they do not expect us to feed them while they fight us; and they know better than to fight, unless it may be now and then a little party of thirty or forty men as went out from the Apache reservation last spring.

I have been looking over the correspondence between the War Department and General Crook, and I find that the general says he has all the troops he wants. General Crook telegraphed that he did not want any more troops and could not use them if he had them; and there is not any place where there is likely to be a foray made by Indians where there is not an abundance of troops to meet any such foray as they would make.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to say a word.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator speaks of the fact that General Crook said that he desired no more troops because of the character of the country in which the Apaches under Geronimo were operating. It was not a numerous body of troops he desired, but men skilled in that sort of warfare; and therefore it was that he left his white cavalry in the rear and entered the mountains on the border of Mexico with Indian scouts, and not with white soldiers.

Mr. TELLER. It is perfectly immaterial why he did not want any more troops. It can not be said that he did not put down the outbreak of the Indians quicker because the Army was needed. He did call for two hundred scouts to be enlisted from the peaceable Indians of the Apache tribe, and he got them, and that is the force he wants to-day, and not United States troops except in a limited number, and he has, if his statement is correct, and I have no doubt about it, only thirty-four warriors to contend with at most.

The honorable Senator spoke of Red Cloud, and he said Red Cloud had with him a large force. The chairman of the committee stated the number in excess of what he really has got. It is less than two hundred people all told, men, women, and children, that he can depend upon to adhere to his standard; and contrary to the statement the Senator made that the Northern Cheyennes are with him, they have never been with Red Cloud in sympathy nor in fact.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to add that the force at the Pine Ridge agency is as well drilled as any cavalry in the United States, and I will call on the Senator from Illinois to certify as to who was able to command the whole of that reservation and keep the peace there. Dr. McGillicuddy, in the most extreme case of attempted outrage on the part of this man Red Cloud, held him in subjection, and he does to-day, and the peace of the whole reservation is maintained there by the efficiency and energy of Dr. McGillicuddy and the discipline of the Indian police, every one of them an Indian.

Mr. TELLER. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has stated just what I was going to state, but very much better than I could.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. TELLER. The facts are exactly as he states. I was about to state that the present agent with his force was able and willing and at all times ready to cope with Mr. Red Cloud and his force whenever he threatened any disturbance. Now, instead of the Northern Cheyennes being in sympathy with Red Cloud they have been hostile to him, and a portion of the Northern Cheyennes at least are as harmless and as peaceable to-day as any Indians in the United States. They are scattered up and down the Tongue River for 10 to 150 miles—I do not remember the exact distance—in their cabins built by their own hands or with their own money that they have earned and living in a condition at least of semi-civilization a large number of them, and I do not think that there need be apprehended any danger from them for they have subsisted themselves by labor there for at least two years without making any trouble.

I do not want to go into any general discussion of this bill; but I insist that there never has been at any time in the history of our relations with the Indians, from the beginning of the settlements on the continent to the present day, when there was so little use for an army to hold the Indian in subjection as there is at this hour. It is absolute folly to talk about increasing the Army for that purpose. With a fourth of the Army you now have, you can hold the Indians in subjection, except that occasionally some of them may break out and commit an individual depredation as white people do in every community in the land.

I said a moment ago that the frontier was abandoned. There is no place where the Indian can flee now that he does not find a settler and the settler pretty well able to protect himself, as I know from experience. I know that when the war was rank and when that great country back of the Missouri River was without a soldier and when the Indians had an abundance of food upon which they could fall back and when they made their raids, it was the settlers single-handed and alone who coped with them and held them at bay. It was not the Government of the United States, and it was not done with Government money. I recollect one Saturday the little community in which I lived were called upon to meet an attempted Indian attack; we had not heard from the States for six weeks; we did not know whether the Government of the United States was in existence or whether it had gone; it was in the midst of war. A community not consisting of over five thousand or eight thousand people at the most raised and put in the field, and had 40 miles from that place on the second day one hundred and ten mounted men armed and equipped who made their way down to the river and opened the telegraph and railroad lines without Government aid and without Government assistance and without ever having received to this day a dollar of Government pay. Everywhere that the Indian goes now he finds a settler and everywhere that he goes he finds a community ready to meet him half-way if he makes an attempt to outrage anybody in any community, and he knows that as well as the best military man in this country.

I repeat again that the use of the Army is not the method by which the Indians are to be brought into civilization, and I do not care whether it is General Schofield or any other man who insists that he wants the Army for the purpose of holding in subjection the Indian population of the United States; I say that hour has passed, and not only humanity but public policy requires that we should adopt another and a different method in dealing with the Indians. I do not believe there is an intelligent man on the frontier living by the side of the Indians who would approve of the increase of the Army to thirty thousand men upon the theory that they are needed for his protection from the Sioux or the Crows or any other of the Indians on the frontier.

Why, Mr. President, if you are to guard and watch these Indians you have not got men enough with thirty thousand troops in the Army; you must have a hundred thousand if you are to rely solely and entirely on watching and keeping as many soldiers in the community as you have Indians. You have got one hundred and sixty-five thousand wild Indians, and as the Senator from Nebraska truly said the other day, if it is a question of war it is almost the whole population you have to meet except the infants; it is the women; it is the boys of ten and twelve years who are to be met and treated as warriors if you treat them as warriors at all. If you talk about scattering troops all over the country to keep the Indians in subjection by force, of what more use will thirty thousand be than twenty-five thousand?

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to one statement in the report of Dr. McGillycuddy, agent at the Pine Ridge agency. He is speaking of the Northern Cheyenne Indians. I understand the Senator from Colorado to say that they have progressed very far in civilization.

Mr. TELLER. I am speaking of those who went first, and not the last. I do not know anything about the last immigration. That is since I have had anything to do with Indian affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON. I call the Senator's attention to this comment of Dr. McGillycuddy on the Northern Cheyennes.

Mr. TELLER. Dr. McGillycuddy is not within a thousand miles of the Northern Cheyennes, the large portion of them. He may have some Northern Cheyennes at Pine Ridge.

Mr. MANDERSON. It was the Northern Cheyennes at Pine Ridge of whom I was talking. He says that the last remnant of them, about a thousand in number, joined the three hundred and sixty who are already upon this reservation, the Pine Ridge agency; that all the Northern Cheyennes are in sympathy with Red Cloud and his band, numbering one thousand three hundred and sixty, and he says further:

THE NORTHERN CHEYENNES.

These Indians remain in the non-progressive condition peculiar to them for several years past. They do not build or live in houses, farm, or send their children to school, considering themselves in their aboriginal egotism superior to the white man who works for a living. I have been associated with them more or less for the past eight years, and can observe no change in them since they surrendered from the war-path in 1877.

They were at Pine Ridge agency in 1884, and the band is there yet. I saw them last fall in about the condition described by Dr. McGillicuddy.

Mr. TELLER. I am aware that there are some Northern Cheyennes at McGillicuddy's agency. They went there late in the fall of 1884. I have never heard any complaint of them. I have not read McGillicuddy's report, but prior to that a large number of Northern Cheyennes, the most hostile, the wildest, the most vigorous of them all, fled on their own account from the Indian Territory and went up to Pine Ridge. Dissatisfied with Pine Ridge accommodations and treatment they went from there to Tongue River, in Montana, and they are the Indians of whom I have spoken. I have yet to learn even from this report that there is any disposition on the part of the Northern Cheyennes at the Pine Ridge agency to affiliate with the hostile Indians of Red Cloud's band, if they can be called hostile at all, which I deny.

Mr. President, it is easy enough to get up a bugbear about Indian wars. I know exactly how sensitive the Western people are on that question. I know how ready they are to believe it. I have seen a whole community, composed of thousands of men, in a state of frenzy when the statement came that a little band of Indians were a few miles out. I have seen a whole community go practically wild after the Sioux war in Minnesota, and it is not strange that they should. But that time has passed, as everybody knows, and nobody knows it so well as the Indian, because he understands that he has not a place to flee to, and that he has not the opportunity of supporting himself in a conflict with the United States.

That is all I care to say as to the bill. The bill must be defended on some other ground than its necessity for the purpose of putting down the Indian population.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senator to give way for a moment to go into executive session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am perfectly willing to go on now.

Mr. CAMERON. There are matters of importance in executive session to be attended to, and it is impossible to finish the bill to-night.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall only speak fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw that for a moment.

Mr. CAMERON. For what purpose?

Mr. CALL. I only wish to make an announcement.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

Mr. CALL. I give notice that to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the morning business I shall ask the Senate to take up the resolution relative to the forfeiture of Florida land grants in order that I may submit some few remarks to the Senate upon it.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. MAHONE. With the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania——

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask leave to make a report from a conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a privileged matter. The Senator from Virginia submits a conference report, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 44) making appropriations for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out the words "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert the words "so herein limited;" and that the House concur in the same.

WILLIAM MAHONE,
RICHARD COKE,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
SEABORN REESE,
W. H. WADE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. CAMERON. I now renew my motion.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will yield to me one moment I want to offer an order to get papers before the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

Mr. FRYE. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the papers on file relating to the Harlem River Improvement be taken therefrom and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The order was agreed to.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the motion for an executive session is put I desire to have a time fixed to-morrow, if the other gentlemen who desire to be heard besides the Senator from Connecticut will agree, at which we shall take the vote on the bill to increase the efficiency of the Army, with all the amendments. I would suggest 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent of the Senate that 3 o'clock to-morrow be fixed as the time at which the vote shall be taken on the military bill.

Mr. LOGAN. If we can reach a vote sooner I will say I should not want to postpone a vote. I will say not later than 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas objects.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope my colleague will insist on sitting to-morrow until this bill is disposed of. There are many other measures here that ought to be considered, which are waiting.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to be patient about it. Of course everybody so disposed has a right to make objection, but I do not see why there should not be an hour fixed for a vote. It is usual on all measures that come up, where they are discussed at length before the Senate; but if there is objection, of course I can not help it.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to having the vote taken to-morrow; but after the motion of the Senator from Maine is disposed of there will be a number of other motions, going, probably, to every section of the bill. I do not want to embarrass the action of the Senate in regard to propositions of that sort. The pending question is one thing, and the several other parts of the bill are another.

Mr. LOGAN. It is understood always that fixing a time for the vote on a bill means that at that time we begin to vote on whatever amendments may be proposed to it. It does not mean that the final vote shall then be taken, so as to cut off amendments, but that we commence to vote at that time. That is the custom always in the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I withdraw the objection if it is understood that 3 o'clock to-morrow will be the time for voting on the pending proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent of the Senate that at 3 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceed to vote on the pending question.

Mr. LOGAN. Not later than 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not later than 3. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. On the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made by the unanimous agreement of the Senate.

IMMIGRATION OF CHINESE.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before that is done the Chair desires to submit a message from the President of the United States.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress, with a view to appropriate legislation in the premises, a report of the Secretary of State, with certain correspondence, touching the treaty right of Chinese subjects other than laborers "to go and come of their own free will and accord."

In my annual message of the 8th of December last I said:

"In the application of the acts lately passed to execute the treaty of 1880, restrictive of the immigration of Chinese laborers in the United States, individual cases of hardship have occurred beyond the power of the Executive to remedy, and calling for judicial determination."

These cases of individual hardship are due to the ambiguous and defective provisions of the acts of Congress approved respectively on the 6th May, 1882, and 5th July, 1884. The hardship has in some cases been remedied by the action of the courts. In other cases, however, where the phraseology of the statutes has appeared to be conclusive against any discretion on the part of the officers charged with the execution of the law, Chinese persons expressly entitled to free admission under the treaty have been refused a landing and sent back to the country whence they came, without being afforded any opportunity to show in the courts or otherwise their right to the privilege of free ingress and egress which it was the purpose of the treaty to secure.

In the language of one of the judicial determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States to which I have referred, "the supposition should not be indulged that Congress, while professing to faithfully execute the treaty stipulations, and recognizing the fact that they secure to a certain class the right to go from and come to the United States, intended to make its protection depend upon the performance of conditions which it was physically impossible to perform." (U. S. R. 112, p. 554, Chew Heong v. U. S.)

The act of July 5, 1884, imposes such an impossible condition in not providing for the admission, under proper certificate, of Chinese travelers of the exempted classes in the cases most likely to arise in ordinary commercial intercourse.

The treaty provisions governing the case are as follows:

"ARTICLE I. * * * The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. * * *

"ART. II. Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, * * * shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation."

Section 6 of the amended Chinese immigration act of 1884 purports to secure this treaty right to the exempted classes named by means of prescribed certificates of their status, which certificates shall be the prima facie and the sole permissible evidence to establish a right of entry into the United States. But it provides in terms for the issuance of certificates in two cases only:

(a) Chinese subjects departing from a port of China; and

(b) Chinese persons (i. e., of the Chinese race) who may at the time be subjects of some foreign government other than China, and who may depart for the United States from the ports of such other foreign government.

A statute is certainly most unusual which, purporting to execute the provisions of a treaty with China in respect of Chinese subjects, enacts strict formalities as regards the subjects of other governments than that of China.

It is sufficient that I should call the earnest attention of Congress to the circumstance that the statute makes no provision whatever for the somewhat numerous class of Chinese persons who, retaining their Chinese subjection in some countries other than China, desire to come from such countries to the United States.

Chinese merchants have trading operations of magnitude throughout the world. They do not become citizens or subjects of the country where they may temporarily reside and trade; they continue to be subjects of China, and to them the explicit exemption of the treaty applies. Yet, if such a Chinese subject, the head of a mercantile house at Hong-Kong or Yokohama or Honolulu or Havana or Colon, desires to come from any of these places to the United States he is met with the requirement that he must produce a certificate, in prescribed form and in the English tongue, issued by the Chinese Government. If there be at the foreign place of his residence no representative of the Chinese Government competent to issue a certificate in the prescribed form, he can obtain none, and is under the provisions of the present law unjustly debarred from entry into the United States. His usual Chinese passport will not suffice, for it is not in the form which the act prescribes shall be the sole permissible evidence of his right to land. And he can obtain no such certificate from the government of his place of residence, because he is not a subject or citizen thereof, "at the time," or at any time.

There being, therefore, no statutory provision prescribing the terms upon which Chinese persons, resident in foreign countries but not subjects or citizens of such countries, may prove their status and rights as members of the exempted classes in the absence of a Chinese representative in such country, the Secretary of the Treasury, in whom the execution of the act of July 5, 1884, was vested, undertook to remedy the omission by directing the revenue officers to recognize as lawful certificates those issued in favor of Chinese subjects by the Chinese consular and diplomatic officers at the foreign port of departure, when visaed by the United States representative thereat. This appears to be a just application of the spirit of the law, although enlarging its letter, and in adopting this rule he was controlled by the authority of high judicial decisions as to what evidence is necessary to establish the fact that an individual Chinaman belongs to the exempted class.

He, however, went beyond the spirit of the act, and the judicial decisions, by providing, in a circular dated January 14, 1885, for the original issuance of such a certificate by the United States consular officer at the port of departure, in the absence of a Chinese diplomatic or consular representative thereat. For it is clear that the act of Congress contemplated the intervention of the United States consul only in a supervisory capacity, his function being to check the proceeding and see that no abuse of the privilege followed. The power or duty of original certification is wholly distinct from that supervisory function. It either dispenses with the foreign certificate altogether, leaving the consular visa to stand alone and sufficient, or else it combines in one official act the distinct functions of certification and verification of the fact certified.

The official character attaching to the consular certification contemplated by the unamended circular of January 14, 1885, is to be borne in mind. It is not merely prima facie evidence of the status of the bearer, such as the courts may admit in their discretion; it was prescribed as an official attestation, on the strength of which the customs officers at the port of entry were to admit the bearer without further adjudication of his status unless question should arise as to the truth of the certificate itself.

It became, therefore, necessary to amend the circular of January 14, 1885, and this was done on the 13th of June following, by striking out the clause prescribing original certification of status by the United States consuls. The effect of this amendment is to deprive any certificate the United States consuls may issue, of the value it purported to possess, as sole permissible evidence under the statute when its issuance was prescribed by Treasury regulations. There is, however, nothing to prevent consuls giving certificates of facts within their knowledge, to be received as evidence in the absence of statutory authentication.

The complaint of the Chinese minister, in his note of March 24, 1886, is that the Chinese merchant, Lay Sang, of the house of King Lee & Co., of San Francisco, having arrived at San Francisco from Hong-Kong, and exhibited a certificate of the United States consul at Hong-Kong as to his status as a merchant and consequently exempt under the treaty, was refused permission to land, and was sent back to Hong-Kong by the steamer which brought him. While the certificate he bore was doubtless insufficient under the present law, it is to be remembered that there is at Hong-Kong no representative of the Government of China competent or authorized to issue the certificate required by the statute. The intent of Congress to legislate in execution of the treaty, is thus defeated by a prohibition directly contrary to the treaty; and conditions are exacted which, in the words of the Supreme Court hereinbefore quoted, "it was physically impossible to perform."

This anomalous feature of the act should be reformed as speedily as possible, in order that the occurrence of such cases may be avoided, and the imputation removed which would otherwise rest upon the good faith of the United States in the execution of their solemn treaty engagements.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, April 6, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the motion the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate April 6, 1886.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION AT PARIS.

Henri Vignaud, of Louisiana, formerly second secretary of the legation of the United States at Paris, to be secretary of the legation.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 6, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF A REFERENCE.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I introduced a resolution calling for certain information from the Interior Department with reference to discriminations against the New Orleans, and Gulf, and other roads, which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals. I asked at the time that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, where it properly belongs; but presume the request was not heard on account of the confusion prevailing in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The reference was made by inadvertence, and the correction will be made. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REFERENCE OF SENATE RESOLUTIONS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, under the rule, a joint resolution (H. Res. 18) for the further distribution of the report of the Public Lands Commission with Senate amendments, and a concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the binding at the Government Printing Office of the schedules of the second, third, fourth, and tenth censuses; which were referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAYMENT OF SILVER, BOSTON SUBTREASURY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, stating, in response to a resolution of the House, that the payment of silver dollars is not refused at the subtreasury at Boston; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

HUNTING ISLAND LIGHT-HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Light-House Board asking an appropriation for the purchase of a site and removal and erection of the Hunting Island light-house thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the order and findings of fact of that court in the case of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School in Virginia against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TREATY FUNDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with inclosures, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior concerning the loss of treaty funds by the Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole Indians, respectively, resulting from a compromise with the sureties of Lucius N. Robinson, late superintendent of Indian Affairs; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MEDICAL EXAMINERS, PENSION OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to an increase of the number and salaries of medical examiners in the Pension Office; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSOURI RIVER, FORT LEAVENWORTH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report and map from the Chief of Engineers showing encroachments of the Missouri River opposite Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and asking an appropriation to protect the banks; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. NELSON for ten days, on account of important business, and to Mr. O'DONNELL, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies of the same, papers filed in support of House bill 5636, first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, to pension Otto Leissring.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] introduced a resolution recently providing for the purchase of a certain digest of international law, which the Chair supposed at the time was a resolution to print, and it was referred accordingly to that committee. Upon an examination of the resolution the Chair thinks it should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and if there be no objection the correction will be made.

There being no objection, the change of reference was ordered.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. STORM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, asking permission to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, charged with the investigation of matters connected with the appropriation of $50,000 for certain improvements of the Ohio River near Jeffersonville, Ind., under a resolution of the House adopted March 16, 1886, be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. STORM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5891, and put it upon its passage.

Mr. BLAND. We had better have the regular order if we are to have a contest over these requests.

Mr. RYAN. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that this will not provoke any debate. It is for the relief of an individual, and I do not think there will be any contest. I will assure my friend from Missouri that if it provokes any debate I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which objection will be asked for.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5891) to authorize a patent for the south half of the southeast quarter of section 34, in township 22, of range 15 east of the sixth principal meridian, to Elizur B. Hall, as administrator of the estate of William Frederick Schlagel.

Mr. RYAN. I ask that the bill be read. I do not believe there will be any objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire to make any objection; but I wish to state on behalf of the Committee on Claims that I have an order to present for the action of the House which would set apart next Friday for considering cases of this kind on the Private Calendar, and which I think will meet the approval of the House. It will enable us to reach cases of this kind in the regular way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEACH. I shall object, after hearing the statement of my friend from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now offer the resolution I have indicated.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

RESTRICTIONS ON AMERICAN PORK.

Mr. PHELPS. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I am instructed to report back with a favorable recommendation and to ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit, if not incompatible with the public interest, copies of all correspondence between his Department and the representatives of France, Germany, Austria, and any other European country which has partially or entirely restricted the importation of American pork, referring to the facts of such exclusion or restriction and the reasons given therefor.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] withdraws his objection to my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by several gentlemen.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House will allow this resolution to be read I think there will be no objection to it. It meets a want that has been pressing upon us for some time.

The SPEAKER. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn? If there be no objection the resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Ordered, That when the House on Friday next, April 9, resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, it shall be in order to take up bills in their order, and, after five minutes' explanation, the question shall be put to the committee whether there is objection to the present consideration of the bill; and if five persons object to its consideration, such bill shall be passed over informally and the next bill shall be taken up for consideration in like manner. Bills to the consideration of which there are not five persons objecting shall be subject to ten minutes' debate, five minutes in favor of the bill and five minutes against it, when the question shall be put upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think there is nothing worse than passing bills after five or ten minutes' consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The resolution is not before the House.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. MORRISON. I call up for present consideration the privileged report from the Committee on Rules submitted by me on yesterday, and which was laid over for one day under the rules. I move the previous question on the report.

Mr. COBB. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw the demand for the previous question and allow me to offer an amendment giving the Committee on the Public Lands an opportunity to call up for consideration bills forfeiting land grants. There has been a resolution pending for the last two weeks giving us that privilege. We have various bills ready to act upon if we shall only get the right of way for them. I trust the gentleman will allow me to offer that amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. This is a report from the Committee on Rules, and I am not authorized or permitted to allow any amendment to it. I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I trust the House will vote down the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 17.

So (further count not being called for) the previous question was ordered.

Mr. COBB. Would it now be in order to move that the Committee on Rules be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution giving the right of way to the Public Lands Committee for land-forfeiture bills and that the House pass the resolution which I will send up?

The SPEAKER. That motion can only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to make the motion now.

The SPEAKER. The House is considering another matter. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana can not be injected into the consideration of the pending question.

Mr. COBB. Then I shall take another opportunity of offering it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules. Are separate votes demanded on the separate propositions?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the last proposition had better be the subject of a separate vote; I mean that part of the report which refers to the taking of yeas and nays on appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the various propositions in the report except the last one.

The question being taken, the various propositions in the report except the last one were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read clause 6 of Rule XXI, which the Committee on Rules recommends to be repealed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon all general appropriation and revenue bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the yeas and nays shall be taken on the passage of such bills in the House and entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The recommendation of the committee is that this clause be stricken out from the rules. A separate vote was demanded by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question being taken, the recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the votes by which the report of the Committee on Rules was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded, the Chair will proceed to call committees for reports.

ADMISSION OF ALTARS FREE OF DUTY.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4007) to admit free of duty a certain set of altars for the Catholic church of St. John the Evangelist, in the parish of La Fayette, Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SUPREME COURT OF MONTANA TERRITORY, ETC.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2880) relating to the supreme court of Montana Territory, and providing for the establishment of judicial districts therein; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SMALL BILLS FOR CIRCULATION.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5788) to provide for the issue of small bills for circulation, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE NEAR KANSAS CITY, MO.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1360) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within ten miles below and five miles above the city of Kansas City, Mo.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE NEAR ATCHISON, KANS.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6013) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within 2 miles north and 2 miles south of the city of Atchison, in the county of Atchison, in the State of Kansas; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GULF AND CHICAGO AIR-LINE RAILROAD BRIDGES.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6376, a bill (H. R. 7626) to grant to the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway Company the right to construct bridges over navigable water courses; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 6376) was laid on the table.

LIGHT-HOUSE SUPPLY STEAMER.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3483, a bill (H. R. 7627) providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 3483) was laid on the table.

LIGHT-HOUSE, CRABTREE'S LEDGE.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 5279, a bill (H. R. 7628) for the establishment of a light-house on Crabtree's Ledge, in Frenchman's Bay, in Maine; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 5279) was laid on the table.

LIGHT-HOUSE, DEER ISLAND, BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3482, a bill (H. R. 7629) authorizing the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at Deer Island, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 3482) was laid on the table.

LIGHT-HOUSE, LUBEC NARROWS, MAINE.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3445, a bill (H. R. 7630) for the erection of a light-house at Lubec Narrows, Maine; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 3445) was laid on the table.

STEAM LIGHT-HOUSE TENDER.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3485, a bill (H. R. 7631) authorizing the construction of a steam light-house tender for the use of the fourth light-house district; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 3485) was laid on the table.

LIGHT-SHIP OFF ENTRANCE TO CHESAPEAKE BAY.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6076, a bill (H. R. 7632) to establish a light-ship off the entrance to Chesapeake Bay; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask its reference to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule of the House on this subject.

The Clerk read clause 3 of Rule XXIII, as follows:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The SPEAKER. The bill just reported by the gentleman from Missouri provides that there be constructed and established a first-class light-ship with a steam fog-signal off Chesapeake Bay. It is very evident that the Secretary of the Treasury can not establish this light-ship without the expenditure of money. The rule requires that any bill requiring an appropriation to be made—that is, which can not be executed without the appropriation of money—shall have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. This bill therefore will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, will be ordered to be printed.

House bill 6076 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION AT MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 986, a bill (H. R. 7633) establishing additional aids to navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 986 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS YOUNG'S BAY, OREGON.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4670) granting to the county of Clatsop, in the State of Oregon, the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in said county and State; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PAPERS IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT BY ERROR.

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 118) relative to certain papers in the State Department by error; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for sundry bills referred to that committee, a bill (H. R. 7634) to increase the efficiency of the line of the Army, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bills of the following titles were, by unanimous consent, laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 2109) to promote the efficiency of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 719) to increase the efficiency of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 1358) authorizing the assignment of retired officers of the United States Army to certain duties;

A bill (H. R. 3901) to promote the efficiency of the artillery of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 2474) to provide for examination of officers of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 3278) to promote the efficiency of the Army of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 1436) to increase the efficiency of infantry branch of the Army; and

A bill (H. R. 468) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army.

BUREAUS IN NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, also reported a resolution to fix a day to consider the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the efficiency of the naval establishment; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MISS ROSA WALLACE.

Mr. JONES, of Texas, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6677, a bill (H. R. 7636) for the relief of Miss Rosa Wallace; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

House bill 6677 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

BUSINESS OF PUBLIC LANDS COMMITTEE.

Mr. COBB. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report to the House the resolution which I hold in my hand, and to ask that the Committee on Rules be discharged from the further consideration of the subject contained therein, and that the resolution pass.

The SPEAKER. The rules expressly provide what shall be done in this hour. No business is in order except the reporting of bills and resolutions to go to their appropriate Calendar.

Mr. COBB. I propose to press this resolution, in season and out of season, until it passes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not ask unanimous consent for its consideration in the hour set apart by the rules for the call of committees.

Mr. COBB. Very well. I repeat my statement that I shall insist on pressing this resolution, in season and out of season.

LABOR INVESTIGATION.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on Labor, reported back the resolution submitted by himself March 29, 1886, with an amendment, to strike out, after the word "the," in the first line of the preamble, all of said preamble down to the word "raises," in the fifth line thereof, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Differences existing between certain railroad companies engaged in the transportation of property and passengers between two or more of the United States and the Territories and their employés.

So the amended preamble will read:

Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Labor be, and is hereby, directed to investigate into the underlying causes of the differences existing between employer and employés of railroad companies and other common carriers, and to that end may send for persons and papers, administer oaths and compel the attendance of witnesses, and employ a stenographer, who shall be paid such reasonable compensation as said committee may direct; and the said committee may sit during the sessions of the House, and report what legislation in their opinion is necessary to bring these troubles and differences to satisfactory conclusion. And the sum of $5,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be expended from the contingent fund of the House for the purpose of this investigation, the accounts thereof to be approved by the chairman of the said committee.

WICHITA AND ARKANSAS VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 769, a bill (H. R. 7637) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Wichita and Arkansas Valley Railroad Company, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 769 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 113) to grant to the Pacific and Great Eastern Railway Company the right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was laid on the table.

PACIFIC AND GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7638) to authorize the Pacific and Great Eastern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HIATT & CO.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 759) for the relief of Hiatt & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 695) to provide for the sale of the lands belonging to the Prairie Band of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas; which was laid on the table.

PRAIRIE BAND OF POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7639) to provide for the sale of the lands belonging to the Prairie Band of Pottawatomie Indians in Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PROHIBITING SPECIAL LAWS IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local and special laws in the Territories of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF PROBATE COURTS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on the Territories, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5496) to increase the jurisdiction of probate courts in Arizona and to repeal all acts of the Territorial Assembly creating county courts in said Territory; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. SADLER, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 6939) to encourage the sinking of artesian wells west of the Mississippi River; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOULTON, ME.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 185) to provide for the erection of a public building at the town of Houlton, Me.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CARROLLTON AND LOCK NO. 1.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4503) to authorize the Secretary of War to permit the Carrollton and Lock No. 1 Turnpike Road Company to locate and construct its road at lock No. 1, on the Kentucky River, in the State of Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE JOHNSON.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 3906) for the relief of Catharine Johnson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 3344) to grant a pension to Mary Kiser; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. FARRIS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6136) granting a pension to John W. Farris; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK MARIM.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6147) granting a pension to Frederick Marim; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TUNIS J. ROOSA.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 715) granting a pension to Tunis J. Roosa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES B. WILDE.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4999) to place the name of James B. Wilde on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NOAH NELSON.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1125) granting a pension to Noah Nelson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also repolted back with adverse recommendation bills of the following titles; which were ordered to be laid on the table, and the accompanying reports printed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 711) granting a pension to Francis O'Leary;

A bill (H. R. 3943) to readjudicate the pension claim of Francis A. Liebscheets; and

A bill (H. R. 3534) granting a pension to Mary J. Taylor.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of bills which were referred, as follows:

The bill (H. R. 6726) granting a pension to Adam Stuber—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 4088) for the relief of certain volunteer officers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JENNETTE S. KENT.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. 231) granting a pension to Jennette S. Kent; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Ella E. Gibson; which was ordered to be laid on the table, and the accompanying report printed.

P. E. RAIGER.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5406) granting a pension to P. E. Raiger; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOUIS WHORLEY.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2963) granting a pension to Louis Whorley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHILIP ARNER.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6266) granting a pension to Philip Arner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY KARSTETTER.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2043) to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY KITZMILLER.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4226) for the relief of Mary Kitzmiller; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE WHITESELL.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6590) granting a pension to Catharine Whitesell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET J. REIGHTER.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5761) granting a pension to Margaret J. Reighter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY HIPPLE, JR.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6897) granting a pension to Henry Hipple, jr., which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMOS C. WERTZ.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5434) granting a pension to Amos C. Wertz; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with adverse recommendations bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 4717) to place the name of George I. Langworthy on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 2160) for the relief of D. S. Graves, for pension;

A bill (H. R. 4714) granting a pension to Hannah Dimond;

A bill (H. R. 5439) for the relief of William R. Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 5432) for the relief of Oliver Freet; and

A bill (H. R. 5763) for the relief of Christian Weber.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (H. R. 2081) for the relief of the legal representatives of Peter Lyle, deceased; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS DEMING.

Mr. WINANS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2971) granting a pension to Francis Deming; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISAIAH H. MITCHELL.

Mr. WINANS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3144) granting a pension to Isaiah H. Mitchell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANN E. COONEY.

Mr. WINANS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISAAC N. MINSHALL.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 283) granting a pension to Isaac N. Minshall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES WOLFE.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1768) granting a pension to James Wolfe; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (H. R. 2592) for the relief of William H. Deery, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 4902, a bill (H. R. 7640) to increase pensions in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 4902 was laid on the table.

JANNET E. B. SMITH.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 607) granting a pension to Jannet E. B. Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 761) granting a pension to William Webster; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES FOREMAN.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6193) granting a pension to Charles Foreman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EUGENIA A. SMALLEY.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1252) granting a pension to Eugenia A. Smalley and her children; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANN BIRD.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 1278) granting a pension to Ann Bird; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK KORTH.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4077) granting a pension to Frederick Korth; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. BARBARA FUCHS.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARIA HUNTER.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7167) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Hunter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 1257) granting a pension to Mrs. Aslang O. Stugo; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed;

A bill (H. R. 4847) granting a pension to Stephen White; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed; and

A bill (H. R. 6485) relating to increase of pensions in certain cases.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. O'HARA, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of bills of the following titles; and they were referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 4074) for the relief of Frederick Krause;

A bill (H. R. 1276) for the relief of John Waddams; and

A bill (H. R. 6194) granting a pension to Maggie E. Warner.

On motion of Mr. O'HARA, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4636) for the relief of John Reed; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5711) for the relief of Ellie McRoberts; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ANNIE BAGLEY.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1627) granting a pension to Annie Bagley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calandar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BAILEY HASCALL.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7118) for the relief of Bailey Hascall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANDREW J. WILSON.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7108) granting a pension to Andrew J. Wilson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH TUTTLE.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7109) granting a pension to Joseph Tuttle; which was referred to the Committe of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SOPHRONIA WITHAM.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. 7641) granting a pension to Sophronia Witham; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY BROOKS.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5472) to increase the pension of Henry Brooks; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. CHASE.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 4382) to increase the pension of John F. Chase; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS J. SLAYTON.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5169) to increase the pension of Thomas J. Slayton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES F. HILDRETH.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4124) granting a pension to Charles F. Hildreth; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET LUCAS.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6812) granting a pension to Margaret Lucas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 6315) granting a pension to Helen M. Stickney; and

A bill (H. R. 3541) to increase the pension of Florence Murray.

MARTHA DOWNS.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4462) granting a pension to Martha Downs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EUNICE E. CLARK.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6429) granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. MATTINGLY.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5951) granting a pension to John M. Mattingly; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SILAS CORZATT.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3287) for the relief of Silas Corzatt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH GREGG.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5937) granting a pension to Sarah Gregg; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2921) for the relief of J. T. and C. T. Hewlett; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EDWIN T. PILKENTON.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2517) for the relief of the estate of Edwin T. Pilkenton, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM E. BOND.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1741) for the relief of William E. Bond; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. GRIGSBY.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6312) for the relief of James M. Grigsby; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH L. LARIMER.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6051) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864 at Deer Creek Station, Wyo., and for loss of property taken by Sioux Indians; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY E. JOHNSON.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7397) for the relief of Mary E. Johnson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOUISA H. HASELL.

Mr. DOUGHERTY, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2223) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. DOUGHERTY, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1011) for the relief of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, of Canada; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN B. ROBERTS.

Mr. DOUGHERTY, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 251) for the relief of John B. Roberts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

H. K. BELDING.

Mr. DOUGHERTY, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1258) for the relief of H. K. Belding; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BALLARD PAVEMENT COMPANY.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 591, a bill (H. R. 7642) for the relief of the Ballard Pavement Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. M'CLINTOCK.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1044) for the relief of John H. McClintock; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET T. RYAN.

Mr. KLEINER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1249) for the relief of Margaret T. Ryan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN BURKHART.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 446, a bill (H. R. 7643) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARTHA J. RUMBAUGH.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6336) for the relief of Martha J. Rumbaugh, administratrix of George H. Rumbaugh; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES D. WOOD.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6337) for the relief of James D. Wood; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BOXES DEPOSITED IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. PERRY, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2239) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the rightful owners the contents of certain boxes deposited in the Treasury Department by the Secretary of War; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AGNES AND MARIA DE LEON.

Mr. PERRY, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 3758) for the relief of Agnes and Maria De Leon, heirs at law of Rebecca L. De Leon, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REIMBURSEMENT TO STATES ON WAR LOANS.

Mr. PERRY, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 152) to reimburse the several States for interest paid on war loans, and for other purposes.

Mr. LYMAN. I am directed by a minority of the committee to ask that the bill just reported adversely be placed on the Calendar, and that they have leave to file their views, to be printed with the report of the majority.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF J. J. PULLIAM.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the bill (S. 605) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be laid on the table, if there be no objection.

Mr. LYMAN. At the request of the gentleman who has this bill in charge I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY RUBY.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 5448) for the relief of Henry Ruby; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report was ordered to be printed.

MOBILE AND GIRARD RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky (by Mr. RICHARDSON), from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4924) for the relief of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the revised list of papers touching unpaid claims on account of the French spoliations prior to July 31, 1801, transmitted by the President of the United States on the 17th instant; of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by the Department of State; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced the passage of joint resolution (H. Res. 73) authorizing the printing of committee reports.

It also announced agreement to the amendment of the House to bill (S. 814) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline N. Putnam.

It also announced agreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 683) granting a pension to Henry C. Hill.

It also announced disagreement to the amendment to the bill (S. 44) providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex.; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. MAHONE, Mr. COKE, and Mr. SPOONER as conferees on its part.

JOHN H. JONES AND THOMAS D. HARRIS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky (by Mr. RICHARDSON), from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back, as a substitute for H. R. 4216, a bill (H. R. 7644) for the relief of John H. Jones and Thomas D. Harris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

By unanimous consent House bill 4216 was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the call of committees for reports has expired. The Chair, under the rule, will proceed to call committees for the consideration of bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the second morning hour.

Mr. JAMES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The call rests with the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. COX. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6855) to secure an equitable classification and compensation of certain officers of the United States. Pending that motion I move that all general debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be closed in twenty minutes, to be divided equally between those in favor of the bill and those against it.

The question being taken on the motion to close general debate, it was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6855) to secure an equitable classification and compensation of certain officers of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate has been limited to twenty minutes. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COX. Before proceeding with my remarks I would like to hear from any gentlemen who are opposed to this bill. If there are any who desire to be heard in opposition to it, I reserve my time.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, is it in order at this time to offer a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be offered and read for information in the time of the gentleman. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] now on the floor to control ten minutes in opposition to the bill; and his colleague, the chairman of the committee [Mr. COX], to control ten minutes in favor of the bill.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask that the proposed substitute which I send to the desk be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to secure a speedy and economical classification and compensation of certain officers of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act the head of each of the Executive Departments at Washington shall grade or classify the work performed or required to be performed in his respective Department, assigning to each desk therein its proper grade or classification, and shall regulate the salaries of the clerks who are or may be assigned to such desks in accordance with such grading or classification.

SEC. 2. That each of the present incumbents who has not heretofore been examined shall, as soon as practicable, be examined for the purpose of determining his or her fitness to perform the duties pertaining to the desk to which he or she has been or may be assigned.

SEC. 3. That whenever a vacancy shall occur, by death or otherwise, in any of the higher grades, and a clerk in one of the lower grades shall, after being examined and found qualified, be designated or assigned to perform the duties pertaining to such vacancy, such clerk shall receive the salary attached to the grade or class to which such duties shall have been assigned: Provided, That no person already in the service of the Government shall be assigned or appointed to any place in the classified service aforesaid without having first passed an examination as hereinbefore named.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect a board of examiners for each Department, to be composed of employés in said Department who shall be familiar with the practical business methods thereof, shall be detailed by the head of such Department, which board shall make the examination and classification required by this act, such examination in each bureau or office to be conducted by said board, one of whom shall belong to said bureau or office, shall be familiar with its duties and direct such examination.

SEC. 5. That the fourth paragraph of the second clause of section 2 of "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, shall be amended so as to read as follows:

"Fourth. That there shall be a probationary period of not exceeding six months before any absolute appointment or employment as aforesaid; and every such person so appointed or employed shall hold his appointment or employment for the term of four years from the date thereof, unless sooner removed. At the end of any term such person may be reappointed for the same period."

SEC. 6. That no limitation as to age shall be prescribed by the civil-service rules for applicants for examination for admission to the classified departmental service of the Government.

SEC. 7. That paragraph 3 of clause 2 of section 2 of "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, shall be amended by striking out all of said paragraph before the word "every" and inserting the following:

"Third. Appointments to the public service in the Departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several Congressional districts and among the Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census. On the 1st days of January and July in each year publication shall be made of the number and names of the persons chargeable to any such district or Territory employed in said service, with the salary and compensation payable to each person."

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it now in order to move to amend this first section of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not at this time.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the Chair be kind enough to indicate when the proper time comes, as I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. After the debate for twenty minutes it will then be in order to move amendments.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, with the general object of the bill as reported from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service I have full sympathy. I think the time has come when the House of Representatives and the Congress should take action touching the organization of the Departments of the Government here in Washington. I think also that this is an intelligent proposition to accomplish speedily that end, and in consequence it will receive my support.

Much has been said by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] who has just taken his seat that has my entire approval. There never should have been, in my judgment, a discrimination against those not holding office in reference to examination as a qualification for securing office that should not in like manner have been applied to those holding it, and for the reason that the drones in the Departments might have been weeded out under such procedure.

But I see the difficulties which present themselves in endeavoring to annex to this proposition anything which relates to disturbing the present civil-service law, and I therefore advise that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] should permit the proposition which he suggests to come in as a separate proposition and to stand upon its own merit, and that we may proceed to take a step that nobody can contend against as proposed in the report of the committee having charge of this subject. At the proper time I may have occasion to say something as to the manner in which those who administer the civil-service law are exercising their power, and I want to say here that in the law and regulations thereunder which regulate the civil service I hope to see every distinction as to age done away with. The idea that a man of forty-five is disqualified from holding an office in this Government is repugnant to my feelings.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is to the feeling of all of us who are over forty-five. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. And especially so when I view it in the light of the possibilities that I myself may have need to apply for a similar place in the future. [Laughter.] I want to linger around an age not debarred by statute, at least in spirit and physical condition.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to state that the substitute provides no limitation as to age?

Mr. RANDALL. I am glad of that.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. And that will let my distinguished riend from Pennsylvania in.

Mr. RANDALL. Moreover, there is another mode of administering this law which I think is not beneficial to the public service, nor just to those who are examined, and that is, that the names of all those, or a major part of those, who have passed these examinations are not given in to a head of a Department on application for names to select from for appointment.

Why not send up a list larger than four, or the entire number who have passed the examination for that description of service for which a vacancy exists? I can readily see how favoritism is, or may be, brought about by the existing mode of selection by the civil-service board.

I therefore think that those who object in toto to the civil-service law, and those who wish, as I do, to modify it in large degree, had better not entangle that question with the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] who has charge of this bill; and that we may be given hereafter on another bill an opportunity to express more fully our sentiments as to the manner in which the present civil-service law is administered.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. COX. I can not yield a moment, the time for debate being limited.

I am in full accord with many things that have been said by my friend who has preceded me. But we have to deal with this matter practically. No one denies that these Departments should be looked into. But the question is, What bill can we pass? You can not pass a partisan bill. You might pass such a bill through this House, but you could not present one that would have any hope of ultimate success. Therefore, let us deal with this matter practically.

So far as the plan of classification spoken of by my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. REID] is concerned, past experience has shown it is wholly inexpedient. The civil service has grown so large in this country, numbering now a grand army of one hundred and fifteen thousand, or one to every five hundred inhabitants of this country, that it is impossible except by the aid of legislation, such legislation as may issue from this Congress, that a proper examination and classification should be made. The committee have considered these propositions. They have considered all of the propositions which have been discussed; and as soon as they find any of them to be practical they will bring them forward. But this is a measure of the highest importance, which must be nonpartisan in its character.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman whether the committee have considered the propriety of preventing any regulation setting up a restriction against age?

Mr. COX. By all means.

Mr. RANDALL. Has any action been taken by the committee in that direction?

Mr. COX. No action thus far.

There is not a proposition that has been suggested here to-day that the committee have not carefully considered, and they have bills before them relating to all those points. But we have to deal with a great evil. There is great injustice and inequality and there are great abuses existing in these Departments. There is in one of the Departments to-day a man drawing a salary of $2,000 who is wholly incapable of discharging his duty on account of physical infirmity. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] calls my attention to a case of a man on furlough for two years, who receives $1,400, and pays his substitute $700.

Mr. SKINNER. I ask the gentleman why that man has not been turned out?

Mr. COX. That is what we want to know. It becomes necessary to make these investigations and bring the results before this House in order that the condition of affairs may be fully understood. So far as the Treasury Department is concerned there are great financial problems that are demanding every moment of the time of those who have charge of that Department. Every expression coming from that Department is watched, closely scrutinized, and telegraphed all over the world. There are in that Department twenty-five hundred employés. Now what we want is not simply that those in the Departments shall make the investigation; we want that those who represent the taxpayers and not the official class alone, shall make the investigation. Hence we consider this method of investigation as the only one practicable.

Talk of an investigation being made by the officers of those Departments! We have had an investigation hanging up in this House for two or three months in regard to our employés here; and what progress has been made? What right have we to scrutinize and blame the Departments when we have failed to do our own duty?

This is the only practical method which has suggested itself to the committee. We have unanimously reported it. Every branch of the civil service has been considered.

This is not connected with the administration of the civil-service law. Those questions to which my friend referred will come hereafter. The question of calling for an additional examiner is not before the House. My colleague is too previous in making his objections. I am satisfied his sympathies are with me. He is only afraid this bill does not go so far as he desires. His bill, I am satisfied, can not meet the approbation of both branches of Congress. While I sympathize with many of the objections the gentleman has made, we consider this is the only measure which it is possible to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate on the bill is exhausted. The bill will now be considered by sections for amendment. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] offers a substitute, which will be in order after the bill has been considered by sections.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

That the President is authorized to employ three persons not in the public service of the United States, and to designate two additional persons who are officers in such service at Washington, not more than three of whom shall be adherents of the same political party, which five persons shall constitute a commission for the purposes of this act; and the President may fill any vacancy therein.

Mr. STORM. I move to strike out the last word in the section.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has not the slightest connection with the so-called civil-service act. The present classification in the civil service of the Government was made more than thirty years before the civil-service law was enacted. Therefore this present bill and the inquiry which it proposes to institute have nothing to do with that act. As might have been expected, the mere suggestion that this measure came from the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service has drawn out various amendments, but, I repeat, they have nothing whatever to do with the present bill.

All that this bill provides for is a commission of five persons to investigate the number and compensation of employés in the classified service here, with a view to so harmonize that classification as to make it consistent and uniform. After the investigation is made intelligent legislation can be had.

It was stated before the committee by members of the Civil Service Commission that in the different Departments here there are men doing precisely similar service, but who in some instances receive $720 a year, in others $840, and in others $900 a year, each Department having arranged a standard of its own by which the pay is fixed. The case is the same in the higher grade of offices. Men doing the same kind of service are receiving, respectively, $1,200, $1,600, or $1,800 per annum.

Now, it is admitted by all that this is wrong. All compensation for service should be based upon the character of the labor performed. It is admitted by all, including the Civil-Service Commission itself, that under the existing classification all these principles are violated. The object of this bill is to give us a commission which shall report a uniform classification. The bill, I think, makes proper provision for this commission. It proposes that three of the number shall be selected outside of the Departments and two within.

A larger number from within the Departments would, I think, be dangerous, because there are old and long-standing abuses existing in the Departments which ought to be corrected. Among them is the matter referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service—the practice by which an employé is furloughed and a substitute who never passed the civil-service examination provided for him or selected by himself, these two dividing the pay between them, so that if the salary is $1,000 a year, each receives at the rate of $500. This is an abuse which certainly ought to be abolished. There ought to be no opportunity, as there is under existing law, for such a state of things. This bill proposes, among other things, to regulate and remedy that abuse.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. STORM. Yes, if I have time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this amendment. I agree that we should have a system of civil service, if it can be devised, which would take the minor offices out of politics. Nearly or quite forty years ago two of the great statesmen of this country, Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Webster, in very important speeches assumed the position that when the time should come when there would be one hundred thousand appointees under the Federal administration popular liberty and our system of government would be in danger. We have reached and passed the limit at which they supposed this great danger would make itself felt. Now when elections for Congress, and especially elections for President and Vice-President, occur the contest is not a contest for principles upon which the Government shall be administered so much as it is a contest for the spoils of office.

We have, as the gentleman from North Carolina tells us, an army of one hundred and fifteen thousand employés whose places are to a greater or less extent dependent upon the result of the election. When this comes around, they, instead of devoting themselves to the discharge of their official duties, are engaged in furnishing their time, their money, and their efforts to elect somebody to office. Now, I think it would be of great advantage to the country if we could remove the minor offices of the country from political contests.

But while I so believe, I think the present civil-service law has features which are very objectionable. It seems to me it would have been much better to pass a law providing that removals from office should not be made except for incompetency or misconduct, and to have omitted the expensive, embarrassing, and it seems to me useless machinery under which appointments are now made.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to state a single case which has come within my observation during this session. A lady from Kentucky, with whom I am acquainted, desired to be examined for appointment under this civil-service law. She wrote to me to that effect. I applied to the commission for permission for her examination and was advised that an examination would be had on the 11th of the current month—it was then the 1st of February—at Louisville, Ky., and that they would immediately inform her of the rules and regulations relating to the examination. Some six or seven days afterward I received a communication from them stating that they had forwarded to her the rules and regulations, and hoped to get her request to be examined in time to send it to Louisville. So they had first to send out the information that she had permission to apply to be examined; then she had to send from Kentucky her request to get another permission to be examined before the examining commissioners at Louisville were authorized to examine her. Such a proceeding is vexatious and ridiculous; it is pure nonsense.

Besides that, Mr. Chairman, the character of the examinations, as I understand, is such that while a professor of a college or a student fresh from school might stand the examination, I venture the statement there is not a Representative on this floor who could do so. What would we know about the geography of Africa or the distance from the moon to the sun? [Laughter.] These, I understand, are some of the questions which they ask. Why should the examiners indulge in that sort of nonsense, instead of looking for the qualities which make a man of business capacity and qualifications? Instead of this, the examination is confined to ascertaining whether the applicant has certain knowledge which can only be possessed by a student fresh from school.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment?

Mr. STORM. Yes; I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. If it is in order I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BENNETT. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of State, of the Treasury, of the Interior, of War, of the Navy, the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General be directed to report to this House at the next session of Congress some plan for classifying the clerks in those Departments, for apportioning their salaries according to their services, and for equalizing the salaries of the clerks of the same grade in each of the Departments; and also some plan to provide for a fair and impartial examination of the qualifications of clerks, and for promoting them from one grade to another upon a due regard to qualifications and services.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this offered as a substitute for the first section?

Mr. BENNETT. It is; and on that amendment I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BENNETT addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. COX. I will not attempt to follow my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] in his political remarks, because this is simply a practical question. The gentleman has asked the question, Are not these gentlemen competent to make these reforms which are sought for in this bill? It is sufficient for us to know that in the last thirty years no classification has been made for us in the Departments of the Government. And it is sufficient for us to know that great abuses do exist.

I trust the gentlemen who oppose this measure will suggest some means more practical to accomplish the end than this. So far as the legislation my friend has spoken of is concerned, that occurred in 1853. I am fully aware of what was said on that occasion. Nevertheless, although examinations were provided for and those examinations were for the Treasury Department, the recommendations were not uniform and have not had a practical effect, and will not have at the present day.

We know the abuses exist. I make this proposition on behalf of the committee: If the Democratic side of the House are so anxious for the reforms they speak of let them support this measure. There is no other that can be supported. We must be practical in our dealings with public measures, and must consider what measure there is a possibility of passing through the Senate as well as through this House. If you throw a political element in, it is utterly useless to attempt to carry any measure having this object in view.

I move the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6855) to secure an equitable classification and compensation of certain officers of the United States, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COX. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and pending that, I move that in committee all debate on the first section of the pending bill and amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

The question being taken on the motion to limit debate, there were—ayes 72, noes 29.

Mr. BENNETT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers, and appoints the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BENNETT, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. COX.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 37.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] insist on the point as to a quorum?

Mr. BENNETT. I do.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills under the rule has expired.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the same privilege.

There was no objection.

FREE-SHIP BILL.

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent to make a report to go on the Calendar.

Mr. BEACH. I shall have to object. The report can be made in the morning. [After a pause.] I withdraw the objection, as I understand the gentleman is sick.

Mr. DUNN, from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, reported a resolution fixing a day for the assignment of business on the bill known as the free-ship bill (H. R. 1219); which was referred to the House Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call up the special order.

Mr. BLOUNT addressed the Chair.

Mr. JAMES. I call up the special order, the adverse report on the free-coinage bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has already called up that order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, the object being to proceed with the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill. But pending that I desire to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to make a statement.

Mr. RANDALL. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, if objected to.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. BLAND. I simply desire to make one suggestion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if he will allow the gentleman from Missouri to make a statement it will save time. I ask if the objection to the gentleman from Missouri making a statement is still insisted on?

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw it.

Mr. BLAND. I wanted only a moment, and that was to state that so far as the special order is concerned it has never as yet been up for consideration properly before the House. It has only been discussed on Saturdays under the order for general debate; it has never been considered in full House for debate and amendment. I had hoped, inasmuch as the debate only comes up after the two morning hours, there would be no objection to the committee having the few hours left to-day for debate on the special order. But inasmuch as the time that might be devoted to considering and perhaps passing the Post-Office bill might be wasted in a contest over precedence, I have yielded to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], and hope that the House will take no more time from us than is possible, and that to-morrow at least we may be able to proceed under the special order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. On this afternoon, if the Post-Office bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. DIBBLE. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Georgia I rise to a privileged question. I call up the message from the Senate disagreeing to the amendments to a Senate bill, and ask that the House insist on the amendments and that conferees be appointed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the message from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate bill No. 44.

A bill to provide for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 6, 1886.

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 44, providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex., and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. MAHONE, Mr. COKE, and Mr. SPOONER be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion of Mr. DIBBLE, that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. REESE, and Mr. WADE to act as conferees on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announcing that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 81) granting a pension to Margaret B. Harwood; and

An act (H. R. 1557) for the relief of David W. Jones.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 50, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and ninety;" after the word "thousand," in line 51, insert the words "two hundred."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to certain facts which ought to be considered in connection with this proposed amendment, because I think the difficulties and value of the services rendered by railway postal clerks were much exaggerated in the former debate upon this bill. For instance, we were told that they were employed more hours than the clerks in the Department, that the amount of their service was far greater, and that the danger of the railway postal service was an important element in estimating the compensation that these clerks should receive.

In matters of this kind there is nothing like official statements compiled from actual experience. An examination of the several divisions of the service shows that the average run per day is as follows: In the first division 106 miles, in the second 117 miles, in the third 111 miles, in the fourth 120 miles, in the fifth 119 miles, in the sixth 130 miles, in the eighth 127 miles, and in the ninth 133 miles. It will be seen, therefore, that the average run per day of the postal clerks throughout the country is only 120 miles. At 30 miles per hour the actual average employment of these clerks would seem to be about four hours per day.

We have heard here about the hours and days and nights of continuous service required of these clerks, but the figures I have presented are taken from the report of the Superintendent of Railway Mail transportation, and they show that the average number of hours per day that these clerks are employed is really very small. Again, we have been told of the great number of pieces of mail matter handled by them. We have heard that the nnmber was perfectly marvelous, 3,400 pieces of mail matter handled by one clerk per day. That does seem marvelous to a person not accustomed to consider such matters, but if any gentleman will go into the Treasury Department he will see there clerks examining bills, having to read them, the names of the places where the banks are situated, and having to examine the bills to detect whether they are counterfeit or not, yet a single clerk there will handle 18,000 of those bills per day, nearly six times as many as the pieces of mail matter handled by the railway postal clerks. When you make this comparison the marvelousness of the work of the railway postal clerks disappears.

Now, as to casualties; out of 4,300 postal clerks running on the railroads in this country during the last fiscal year how many do you think were killed? Two. Why, you could not gather that number of carpenters together and let them go to work in any part of the country without there being more casualties among them merely from falling off buildings, &c. A examination of the figures will show that it is simply because the subject is forced upon our minds by occasional railway disasters that we pay so much attention to the dangers of travel by rail and get into the habit of exaggerating them; and that is what has given rise to the fancy that the service of the postal clerks is very dangerous. It appears then, Mr. Chairman, from the figures I have presented, that the service of these clerks is only for about four hours per day, that their average daily run is short, that the number of pieces of mail matter handled by them daily is small in comparison with the amount of similar work done by clerks in the Treasury Department, and that the casualties in the postal railway service are not greater than are likely to occur in other callings.

We are asked to increase the salaries of these clerks to what they were in 1876, and why? The reasons that have been given are dissipated by an examination of the official data. Why should we increase the pay for this kind of service? Does it require any extraordinary amount of ability? The Superintendent of Railway Mail transportation tells us that any man of ordinary English education is fully qualified for the work. It certainly requires no high order of culture.

The Government without difficulty always commands men at present rates to do this service. Why should the Government be compelled, simply because these are officials, to pay more for their service than the public is willing in private employment to pay for the same grade of service, as is evidenced by the fact that capable persons in every Congressional district are seeking places in this service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, why is it that this application for increased pay is pressed to-day with so much earnestness? From 1876 until the incoming of the present administration matters in this respect went along smoothly. In the mean time the Forty-seventh Congress has had its day. The Republican party have had the House, the Senate, and the Executive. Yet they have not found any occasion for a change in this respect. The responsibility for expenditure has now passed from the other side of the House to this; and it so happens that these fourth and fifth class clerkships are, with the assent of the administration, still held by persons in sympathy with the party in the minority.

With these same persons in office under a Republican administration things went along quietly, and there was no complaint from any branch of the Government. Now, when the responsibility for expenditures is on this side of the House, and these employés are in sympathy with the other side, why should this side undertake to make this increase of compensation? Are you asked to do it by the Postmaster-General or by anybody in sympathy with this administration? No. The gentlemen who have argued in favor of this increase have read the recommendations of superintendents of railway transportation of their own party, and we are invited to follow these recommendations when our own officials, charged by law with making appointments for this service and recommendations in regard to it, have made no such proposition.

The Superintendent of the Railway Mail transportation has said himself that this service is in better condition as to employés than it has ever been before. As a basis for the increase asked he estimated for an increase of mileage in the construction of railroads during the fiscal year—an estimate which has not been adopted by any other branch of the postal service, and which is contradicted two to one by the estimates of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. The committee, knowing the large sum that had been voted for this fiscal year, and being informed that the service was in perfect condition, felt they were justified in making a reasonable increase, though not adopting the florid statements of an increase of mileage to the extent of 10,000 miles in a single year as against five or six thousand estimated by other officials.

I trust that this House, especially after the experience we have had, will not make this increased expenditure on the invitation of the other side of the House, and on the recommendation of Republican superintendents of railway mail transportation, while our own executive officers withhold any recommendation for such increase.

Mr. PETERS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I do not consider this a political question; and hence I have not discussed it from that standpoint. It is entirely immaterial to me whether a recommendation in relation to this service has been made by a Republican or a Democratic official. It is entirely immaterial to me that the Forty-seventh Congress entirely overlooked, as it did, the merits of these officials and the injustice which had been done to them. The party that is now in power has recognized the fact that this service is not a political service. It is a service that requires experience and skill, without which this branch of Government employment would suffer and the interests of the people who are concerned in the proper circulation and distribution of mail matter throughout the United States would be endangered. It is absolutely necessary that a person should have experience and skill in order to perform the duties of a postal clerk.

I know it is true, as a matter of computation, that these clerks run on the average only 120 miles for every day of the three hundred and sixty-five in the year. I stated the average at 110 miles. But the mistake of my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is in supposing that the entire labor of these clerks is during the time they are engaged on the running trains. It is true that on the average they run only four hours per day. But every person familiar with the postal-car service knows that every postal clerk of the fourth and fifth classes must put in from three to four hours labor before his train starts in order to prepare the mails on his car for distribution along the route. Not only must he do this, but he must also give his time and attention to the study of the schedules and connections which are constantly being changed. So that it is not fair to state that these postal clerks are engaged only four hours per day during the entire year.

Mr. CURTIN. And they are not permitted to engage in any other occupation.

Mr. PETERS. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] so well suggests, the Government requires of these postal clerks their whole time. Even if they have any leisure they are not permitted to engage in any other occupation. It is contrary to the rules of the service. They can not even engage in the business of carrying articles along their routes. They must devote their entire time to the postal service. Besides that, they must be prepared at any moment when called on to pass an examination.

Mr. CURTIN. They are required to pass an examination every month.

Mr. PETERS. My friend from Georgia says that applications for these positions are numerous. I concede it. The applications for every Government position are numerous. I do not know a single office at the disposal of the administration for which there are not from ten to fifty applicants. But is that any reason why those who have become proficient and skillful, and who are necessary f r the purpose of carrying on the public service efficiently, should be discharged to make way for those who are inefficient?

Now, Mr. Chairman, while there are many applicants for these positions, still the fact is there are very few of these applicants who are successful in passing the necessary examinations. That there are so many applicants for these positions grows out of the fact, no doubt, of the ignorance among the people as to the requirements made necessary in this postal-car service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I think it is apparent, from the statistics submitted to this Committee of the Whole by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, that the amount of work to be done by these postal clerks has been very much overestimated by gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. While these clerks have been held up before the House as the most injured of all the incumbents of positions under the Federal Government, yet, when the facts are accurately ascertained, it is shown that they have been most wonderfully favored. It will be remembered, no doubt, by the gentleman who has just preceded me, that during his remarks on the subject a few days ago, when I asked him whether these gentlemen could procure better compensation for their services in other branches of business, he retorted by saying that my question had the effect to give labor a slap in the face.

Now, sir, what are the facts in reference to these appointees in the public service? They are held in power, kept in their places to the exclusion of more efficient men seeking to enter the service, simply because of the services they have rendered to a certain political party. I know this fact to be true so far as it affects my own immediate neighborhood. The present head of the Railway Mail Service is kept in office by a Democratic Postmaster-General, and that Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, under a Democratic administration of the Government, is to-day carrying on the administration of his office under rules diametrically opposite to those he practiced when the Postmaster-General in charge of the Post-Office Department was of the same political faith to which he himself belongs. All over my own district men have been selected because of their political meanness, because of something they did at the polls in favor of a certain party. Men have been put into the postal railway service when their moral and intellectual incompetency was absolutely outrageous.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have only five minutes. If the committee will agree to give me five minutes more time in which to answer the gentleman's question I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does the gentleman from Kentucky mean to say the present head of the Railway Mail Service is making these appointments on the same basis as those to whom he has alluded; that is, those who are appointed are selected because of their political meanness?

Mr. TAULBEE. No, I do not. He adopts different tactics from those he practiced in putting them in. He keeps them in, while competent men are excluded from the service under his influence and present objectionable policy.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does the gentleman say that is a thing which is done now?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, it is done now.

Mr. STRUBLE. Under the present Democratic administration?

Mr. TAULBEE. Under the present Democratic administration.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does not the gentleman know the fact is that the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service refers these questions of appointments to the Postmaster-General himself?

Mr. TAULBEE. Ostensibly, yes; but truly it is not so. I have heard the Postmaster-General say that he could not give the detail of this matter his personal attention, and that he held the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service responsible for the detail of the affairs of his office.

Mr. STRUBLE. I hope the gentlemen from Kentucky will give us more light on this question. If this head of the Railway Mail Service ostensibly refers these matters to the decision of the Postmaster-General himself, but in fact does not do so, I should like to know how that sort of man is held in the service of a Democratic administration.

Mr. TAULBEE. It is because of the want of courage on the part of a Democratic Postmaster-General, I will answer the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the labor question, having spent the best years of my life as a wage-worker, I feel authorized to speak for the laborers of the country. I say in reference to the great questions which agitate the labor element that laboring men have the right to quit work simultaneously unless they are in the employment of the public; but I deny their right to say to anybody else that they shall not work. I deny the correctness of these strikes as they are carried on under the present system. It is an outrage upon the workers who do not belong to labor organizations, and I denounce it, and propose to abide the consequences.

Employés of railroads, corporations, or individuals have a perfect right to refuse to work for their employers whenever it suits their convenience to do so, but I deny their right to destroy the property of others or to obstruct transportation or other legitimate business, or to use force, violence, or other unlawful means to deprive other honest wage-workers of the privilege of competing with them in the matter of procuring work.

I am in full sympathy with every honest and honorable move having for its object the promotion of the honest, law-abiding laborers of our country, or the placing of proper restrictions on the powers and authorities usurped by the organized capitalists and monopolies of the country. My predilections are all on the side of the laboring man, but I am disgusted with the ridiculous spectacle which the recent strikes in the West present. There we have a few hundred railroad employés obstructing the transportation and embarrassing and prostrating the business of a vast section of country, and driving thousands of innocent women and children to abject penury and starvation.

I would encourage the organization of the labor interests of the country for union and concert of action in the employment of every honest means looking to a fair and equitable division of the profits of labor and capital combined, while I have nothing but contempt and indignant frowns and denunciations for the spirit of communism and nihilism which allows one in one hundred of the laboring men of the country, led by men who have no interest in common with labor except as that interest grows out of their connection with strikes and boycotts, to dictate to the remaining ninety-nine men when and on what terms they shall or shall not work. This state of affairs can only find its ultimate results in anarchy and the complete overthrow of our free institutions, which guarantees to every man personal liberty, enjoyment of his own property, and the legitimate pursuit of happiness.

I have said that private employés had a right to abandon work, but it is quite different with employés of the Government. When a man accepts an office at the hands of the public he becomes the servant of the public and the custodian of a public trust. No more has the sentinel a right to abandon his post of duty in the hour of danger than has the public officer to arbitrarily abandon his post of duty when that abandonment would prove detrimental to the public interests.

This amendment proposes to tax the people $90,200 above the actual needs of the service as a matter of reward to the adherents of one political party when the burden and responsibility of the extravagance will rest on the other party.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the time has come when these jobs should cease.

The Postmaster-General claims that there is no politics in this particular branch of the public service, and that removals therefrom can not be had save for inefficiency or misconduct on the part of the incumbents.

Nothing could be plainer than that this line of policy is the result of the influence of a Republican superintendent of the railway postal service on a Democratic administration—a plain case of the tail wagging the dog. I will agree to the general proposition that there is not enough politics in the present administration to give it decent respectability; but I deny that this particular branch of the service is void of politics. If it is void of politics, why is it that Republican employés in this branch of the service boycott the few Democrats who have, by force of circumstances and the oversight of the Superintendent, found their way into the service? Why is it that four thousand clerks in the second, third, fifth, and sixth divisions have organized for a strike? I read from the Evening Star of March 10:

POSTAL CLERKS READY TO STRIKE—IRRITATED BY REMOVALS, THEY ORGANIZE FOR UNITED ACTION.

A dispatch from Pittsburgh to the New York Herald says: "On account of the dissatisfaction of the postal clerks with Postmaster-General Vilas's frequent removals of clerks in the fifth division, an organization has been formed to request him to observe the terms of his circular of June, 1885, relative to removals, or they will quit work simultaneously in the fifth, sixth, second, and third divisions, taking in the Middle States, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and the Western States as far south as Missouri and Tennessee, and as far west as and including Wyoming and Dakota. The clerks who have organized thus far are in the cities of Saint Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Columbus, Nashville, Louisville, and many small cities. If the committee is promised that the clerks shall be disturbed no further, everything shall continue as at present; but if the answer be unsatisfactory, all will quit work upon notification. Nearly four thousand five hundred clerks are interested in the measure. A. Burt, superintendent of the fifth division, resigned because he refused to make one hundred changes demanded by Postmaster-General Vilas."

If there is no politics in this branch of the service, why is it that certain gentlemen on the opposite side of this House seek in every conceivable way through it to hold on to place and power?

The matter of favoritism has been carried so far as to lead to the introduction of a bill into the present Congress by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER] proposing to place on the pension-roll of the Government, at a rate equal to half the salary now received by them, all the employés of the postal service who have served therein for a period of twenty-five years, or who from any cause become in any way disqulified from the performance of official duty.

These facts indicate into what vortex of ruin we are rapidly drifting.

The clerks in the Railway Mail Service work on an average, as shown by actual official data, four hours per day, and receive therefor salaries ranging from $1,175 to $1,400. This amount of compensation was found sufficient while the responsibility rested on the minority party; but when the burden of the expenditures are shifted the hue and cry is raised that these men are oppressed, and they are held up before the country in the light of injured innocence.

Every Democratic member of this House is pledged to economic administration. I for one propose to hold that pledge inviolate, though it be at the expense and risk of being termed a fanatic or being accused of disloyalty to the present administration. I can not for the sake of receiving the sickly smiles and empty plaudits of the heads of the Departments remain silent at the expense of the noble constituency which I have the honor to represent here, when I see their rights trampled on with impunity and the money wrung from their honest sweat and toil wasted in needless expenditures.

I am opposed to this amendment and all similar measures, be the beneficiaries thereof of whatever persuasion politically or otherwise. I oppose the principle of the amendment. I despise the sickly cant and transparent hypocrisy of members on this floor who discourage the investigation and exposure of the flagrant abuses rife in the public service lest the administration should be brought into discredit.

We had been taught by the leaders of the Democratic party that the Republican party had grown corrupt by their long continuance in power, and on investigation we find it to be true. The people gave expression of their disapproval of the methods of that party at the ballot-box in 1884, and the whole country had a right to hope that their verdict would be carried into execution; but, alas! the hickory broom has lost its significance, and we are called upon to contemplate the ridiculous spectacle of a Democratic administration being administered by Republicans, with the same system of pillage and plunder going on, modified somewhat it is true, but existing nevertheless. For example, one case illustrative of the many, an officer of the Government, subject neither to confirmation by the Senate nor to the piece of political hypocrisy and fraud known as the civil-service act, drawing a salary of $2,500 per annum, who does nothing, absolutely nothing, held in the employ of the country because he is thought to be a clever man, to the exclusion of honest Democrats who are willing to perform honest work for reasonable pay. That theory is not in keeping with the sentiment of the Democrats of this country. They have been misled by false pretense, and will not be misunderstood in 1888. The surface of public sentiment is placid and still, but the fires of a tremendous volcano gather beneath, ready for the day of reckoning. I pity the man on whose political fortunes it finds vent.

Mr. BURROWS was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. CANNON.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky be allowed an extension of time for five minutes longer. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, or rather to ask for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. What is the status of the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted; that is to say, the substantive amendment. Debate has also been exhausted upon the pro forma amendments.

Mr. PETERS. I withdraw the formal amendment which I offered.

Mr. CANNON. I renew it. I only want to say a word, Mr. Chairman, about these postal clerks. That they are hardworked, industrious, and skilled is true, otherwise they could not remain in the service. That they do more service for less pay than other employés of the Government is also true. Having said that much in reference to their compensation, I am entirely willing, so far as I am concerned, to leave the matter with the committee.

Now, sir, it is true, I understand, the masses of these postal clerks are Republican in politics. It is also true that if within the first month, or the third, or the sixth, or the twelfth month of this administration the Postmaster-General had turned them all out and put others in their places the work of distributing the mails in the cars could not have been performed.

Furthermore it is true, as I am informed and believe, that just as fast as Democrats can be educated to do this work and take their places Republicans are removed.

Mr. BLOUNT. How does the gentleman get his information?

Mr. CANNON. From various letters written by competent clerks discharged. One case is that of Mr. Tooke, on the Indianapolis and Saint Louis route; another is that of a Mr. Coons that was cited the other day in debate at the other end of the Capitol, and to my personal knowledge one of the most efficient clerks I have ever known, who was discharged presumably, as stated, not from any failure to do his duty, but on political grounds.

Mr. McCOMAS. I can name two or three instances myself.

Mr. ROGERS. Did not the gentleman join the Democratic party before they put him out?

Mr. CANNON. While he might not have had such ability as my friend from Arkansas, he has just as much politics and otherwise is my friend's peer.

Mr. Chairman, I was a little amused at the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], and after all I do not want to complain about his attack, as he said, upon the Republican Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, a very competent man; and while I am not authorized to speak for him in any way, I have no doubt he has been and still is a Republican; I know he is a gentleman.

After all, would it not be better for my friend from Kentucky instead of striking at the branches, the subordinates, to level some of his heavy thunder at that self-confessed most candid Postmaster-General of yours who issued a circular——

Mr. TAULBEE. Let me ask you a question.

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish my sentence. Who issued a circular months ago giving all of these postal clerks notice that so long as they performed their duty they should remain in their places; but who, after he has obtained the praises of the political pharisees, as fast as he can dispense with the services of these skilled postal clerks, turns them out and puts in their places unskilled men; and this, too, while he professes to be living up to the statements in his circular.

Mr. Chairman, there is no service in the Government where unskilled men would injure the service so much and be felt so quickly by the people as in the railway mail service, and there is no place in the public service where there is so much need for the application of the civil-service rules. From the party standpoint Republicans could stand it if all these employés were turned out, and let the country see what would become of the service under exclusive Democratic manipulation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has promised to recognize the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Say to fifteen minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope thirty minutes will be agreed upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does that include any other amendments that gentlemen may wish to offer?

The CHAIRMAN. It includes all amendments to this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the proper time I desire to offer an additional amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be offered at any time, but the time for debate is proposed to be limited to thirty minutes; and of course amendments offered after that time, if they should be agreed to, must be voted upon without debate.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM addressed the Chair.

Mr. DOCKERY. I believe I am entitled to the recognition of the Chair; and if my friend from Pennsylvania desires to occupy the five minutes now, if some gentleman will return the same courtesy to me, I will give way to him.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to enter into a political discussion in connection with this bill. As to the amendment under consideration, since it is one that I submitted about a week ago, it may be proper that the intelligence of this side of the House should be informed exactly what that amendment amounts to. I have only one purpose in connection with this bill. As I have stated, I regard it as the best bill that has come before the House during my membership in connection with postal affairs. It is liberal, it is generous, and as such I give it my hearty support.

I believe, however, that a larger compensation than the regulations admit would give to your service a better character of men, and give to the men now in the service that compensation that the law awards them and as I think this bill should concede to them.

The Postmaster-General has asked for $4,877,000 to pay this service for the next fiscal year. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads give, under this bill, $4,800,000—$77,000 less than the Department has estimated for. My amendment adds to the bill $90,200. For what purpose? For the simple purpose that the appropriation may be sufficiently large for the Postmaster-General to give to class 5 and to class 4 that which the law allows him to give—$1,200 and $1,400 per annum. He is giving to-day $1,150 per annum in lieu of $1,200, and $1,300 in lieu of $1,400.

If you adopt this amendment I have submitted you do not take from the Postmaster-General any of the discretion the law allows him, but you say to him, "If in your wisdom you think the exigencies of the service require it, Congress has appropriated an ample sum for the payment of this subordinate force, the full allowance of the law."

I am going into no discussion whether these men do great work or not. I think they do excellent work. I believe they are the hardest-worked men in the postal service. I believe there are required for clerks of classes 4 and 5 the highest conditions of intelligence, of education, and of experience. These men may be of my party. I am not arguing from that standpoint in this debate. I look upon them as experienced, trained, efficient postal servants. I believe they give to the public service that broad experience which can only come after training for long years in the service.

Therefore I make this appeal. Let us appropriate that which the law says these men should have. Then let the Postmaster-General exercise his discretion. My amendment simply appropriates that much.

The committee's bill appropriates or recommends $77,000 less than the Postmaster-General had asked for. Carry my amendment, and he will exercise the same discretion, and will have an opportunity to pay these subordinates the full allowance of the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] is a proposition that looks to an increase of the salaries of twelve hundred and forty postal clerks of classes 4 and 5 at an annual cost to the Government of $90,200. This extravagant measure is a legitimate and logical outgrowth of a vicious financial system, which has laid upon the people for twenty years the heavy hand of exorbitant and unnecessary taxation, piling up in the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars annually in excess of the actual needs of the Government.

Sir, the fiscal history of all nations attests the truth of the statement which I am about to make, and to which I invite the considerate attention of the House. Unnecessary taxation leads to surplus revenue, surplus revenue begets extravagance, and extravagance sooner or later is surely followed by corruption.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will not this amendment, if it prevails, tend to reduce the surplus?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is very true. It does tend to reduce the surplus, but in an improper direction. I object to the rate of taxation which brings the surplus to the Treasury; but after it is there I want it disbursed for the general benefit of the whole country, and not the special use of privileged classes.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. PETERS. Does not the larger portion of the money that is paid for the carrying on of this service come from the voluntary contributions of those who purchase stamps, and not from taxation?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not care whether you call it voluntary or involuntary taxation. The people pay the amount necessary to maintain the Government, and it goes into the Treasury of the United States. I would like to have time to discuss that phase of the question, but I have not on this occasion. What I contend for is that the rate of taxation should be cut down so that gentlemen will not have to stand here and antagonize extravagant propositions, because in such events they will not be offered.

Mr. PETERS. Is not the only way to reduce the surplus to expend it properly?

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems to be the idea of the Republican party that the way to reduce the surplus is to expend it extravagantly. The Democratic idea is to cut down taxation, and leave the money not necessary to support the Government in the pockets of the people.

Mr. PETERS. If that is the Democratic idea it is not being carried out.

Mr. DOCKERY. It will not be if this amendment prevails. [Laughter on Democratic side.]

During the ten years past these postal clerks have received the salaries as at present provided by postal regulations, and I am therefore unable to comprehend the exigency that calls so loudly for an increase the first year of a Democratic administration. If there be equities in their favor I imagine that they apply with equal force and effect to the clerks of classes 1, 2, and 3, and I am unwilling that the Republican leaders should "dump in" on the Democratic party the first year of its administration all the admitted legislative shortcomings of a quarter of a century.

Sir, if injustice has been done to these employés, why was not some voice on the other side lifted up in their behalf during the Forty-seventh Congress, when the Republican party controlled not only the executive department but also the Senate and House? Why was not the wrong, if there be any, righted then?

Mr. Chairman, on many questions that are presented for consideration I realize that the methods and the practices of twenty-five years ago will not meet the demands of the present, and thus it is that as a rule my vote is recorded in favor of progressive measures; but, sir, all advancement is not real improvement or progress. In the matter of expending the people's money I would like to call the House back to the economic spirit that actuated our fathers and the leaders of the Democratic party during the long period that they controlled the Government and directed its fiscal affairs.

The Democratic party has always been an economic party. Before the war it enforced economy by fixing the scale of taxation so that it only yielded a revenue sufficient to meet the demands of the Government economically administered. Under this policy the Government exacted from the people a sum sufficient to supply its actual needs, and not a dollar in excess of that amount, and there was no enormous surplus withdrawn from the channels of trade and commerce to be piled up in the Treasury, constantly tempting to extravagance and its legitimate sequence, corruption.

I do not mean by this statement to intimate that the masses of the Democratic party are more honest than our friends on the other side, but I do say that our fiscal policy compels economy, while theirs lures in the broad way that leads to profligate expenditures.

The most commanding tribute that has yet been paid to our fiscal policy was recently penned by the brilliant and gifted leader of the Republican party, Hon. James G. Blaine. On page 46 of the first volume of his Twenty Years of Congress, when speaking of the Southern leaders who so long controlled the Democratic party, framed its appropriation bills, and formulated its policies, he says:

> Their domestic relations imparted manners that were haughty and sometimes offensive; they were quick to take affront, and they not infrequently brought needless personal disputation into the discussion of public questions; but they were, almost without exception, men of high integrity, and they were especially and jealously careful of the public money. Too often ruinously lavish in their personal expenditures, they believed in an economical government, and, throughout the long period of their domination, they guarded the Treasury with rigid and unceasing vigilance against every attempt at extravagance and against every form of corruption.

Mr. Chairman, such was the financial record of the Democratic leaders and the Democratic party before the war, as conceded by the greatest of Republican leaders. Its history since that unfortunate period, so far as it has been permitted to make a history, has been equally creditable and economic. The first year of Democratic control of the House of Representatives after the war was signalized and marked by a reduction of expenditures to the extent of $25,000,000, and in this connection I desire to give the total:

Regular annual appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal years 1870 to 1886.

1870 (Republican Congress)	$147,499,278 23
1871 (Republican Congress)	169,166,387 73
1872 (Republican Congress)	166,887,212 53
1873 (Republican Congress)	181,682,274 94
1874 (Republican Congress)	193,025,793 04
1875 (Republican Congress)	183,685,002 16
1876 (Republican Congress)	179,166,833 90
1877 (Democratic House—Republican Senate)	154,553,639 64
1878 (Democratic House—Republican Senate)	144,392,149 23
1879 (Democratic House—Republican Senate)	171,187,349 68
1880 (Democratic House—Republican Senate)	192,870,137 17
1881 (Democratic Congress)	189,474,559 49
1882 (Democratic Congress)	218,353,057 25
1883 (Republican Congress)	297,561,602 29
1884 (Republican Congress)	231,993,647 63
1885 (Democratic House—Republican Senate)	195,710,588 09
1886 (Democratic House—Republican Senate)	219,595,283 18

I invite the attention of the House to the financial record of the two parties as presented in the above table of appropriations for the support of the Government, and also as bearing directly upon the pending proposition. A glance at the table reveals the fact that the Forty-seventh Congress, which was Republican in both branches, was the most extravagant known to the history of the Republic.

Will the gentlemen of the other side tell us why it was at this time, when your appropriations were lavish to an extent before unknown—why it was that you did not then provide for the postal clerks who now seek to have their salaries increased?

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this is not the hour to increase salaries. Thousands of laboring men who desire to work are to-day without employment "because no man hires them." These men and others who receive but limited compensation will not look with favor upon a measure that increases the salaries of six hundred and seventy-six clerks of class 4 from $1,150 to $1,200 per annum, and the salaries of five hundred and sixty-four clerks of class 5 from $1,300 to $1,400. Before we add to the salary account at any point let us at least await a return of prosperity to the business interests of the country. The people demand prudent economy in the expenditure of the moneys intrusted to our care, and to a performance of this duty they will and ought to hold us to a strict account. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The section under consideration contemplates an appropriation to pay railway postal clerks. I desire to call attention to one class of these clerks who receive compensation so inadequate that this Congress ought, in justice to them, to make provision for a higher rate of pay—I mean the chief clerks. I have in my mind a gentleman who served three or four years as a postal clerk, and who two years ago was promoted to be chief clerk. As chief clerk he performs, perhaps, twice as much labor as he did as a postal clerk. He has charge of twenty-three postal lines, scattered through three different States; he has charge of seventy-three postal clerks with fifty-three different distributions. As postal clerk he received a salary of $1,400 a year, and as chief clerk he receives precisely the same salary, but as chief clerk he is obliged to travel a considerable portion of the time and pay his own expenses, so that his salary (and what is true of this man is true of every other chief clerk in the service) is reduced to perhaps $1,000 or $1,200, notwithstanding the fact that he performs much more labor now than he performed as a postal clerk. Two different Postmasters-General and the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service on three different occasions have recommended that the pay of these chief clerks should be increased and that they should be allowed a sum not exceeding $3 per day for expenses when traveling in the service of the Government.

I submit, sir, that these recommendations are entirely just and proper. These men, in the discharge of their duties, are required to have expert knowledge. In other branches of the public service men who travel on Government business have their expenses paid, and in view of the fact that the Postmaster-General and the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service have recommended that these chief clerks should have an allowance for expenses at the rate of $3 per day when traveling on postal business, I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which will grant them that allowance. I am aware, sir, that a point of order can be made against the amendment; but in view of the fact that this allowance is just and proper, I trust that unanimous consent will be given and the amendment adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend by adding to line 51 the words "and an allowance of $3 per diem to chief clerks for traveling expenses when so engaged in the discharge of official duties."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment proposes new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that by the law as it now stands on the statute-book fourth and fifth class postal clerks are entitled, respectively, to $1,200 and $1,400 per year. Since 1876 they have not received compensation at those rates, but have received only $1,150 and $1,300, respectively, because the appropriations have not been sufficient to pay in full. The Postmaster-General now asks for an appropriation $77,000 in excess of that reported by the committee, and the pending amendment would increase the committee's report by $90,000, based on a later calculation, which is only $13,000 in excess of the Postmaster-General's estimate. I was in hopes that this amendment would have been accepted by the committee. This is not a political question; it is simply a question whether men doing fair and legitimate work shall receive just compensation for their labor. There is one consideration that I think has not been alluded to in the discussion of this question; that is, that from $150 to $200 of the compensation of these postal clerks every year is consumed in paying their board while they are away from home. Probably one-fourth of their time is spent at other people's tables at their own expense, which makes a considerable reduction in their salaries.

There is no class of Government employés who work so hard or who receive such meager compensation for their services. It is not just to say that these men are only four hours a day, on an average, on their run, when, as has been already stated, and as all of us who have looked into the question know, they are compelled to be in their places, many of them, at midnight to go out with their trains, and many of them are on the run from fifteen to sixteen hours a day. Then, too, they are away from home a great deal, and their labor is of the most exhausting character.

I need say nothing of the value of skilled labor in this business of the proper distribution of the mail. It goes to every man's home. The necessity of having competent men on our different lines of railway for the prompt and accurate distribution of the mail is universally conceded.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does my friend from Delaware state that these postal clerks are on duty sixteen hours a day each day in the week, or anything like it?

Mr. LORE. No, sir; but I say that on many of their runs they are on duty sixteen hours during the twenty-four. Of course they have their "off" periods; but their average time is more than any other Government clerks of like pay, and when off duty they must study their routes and keep up with the constant changes. They work every day in the year; Sundays as well as week days——

A MEMBER. No.

Mr. LORE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. An account is kept of their time, and it is measured by the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year. Clerks of similar class doing work of the same grade in any of your Departments receive $1,800 to $2,000 a year, and they remain at home with their families and are not subjected to the same inconvenience and expense as these postal clerks.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it not true that these postal clerks are off duty half the time, and that they have thirty days' leave of absence in every year with full pay?

Mr. LORE. Their privileges in that respect are certainly no greater than those of other clerks.

Mr. DOCKERY. But is not that true?

Mr. BINGHAM. They have no thirty days' leave of absence; they do not get a day.

Mr. DOCKERY. They are off half the time; there is no question about that.

Mr. LORE. If they are off any part of their time, it is because when on duty they work night and day, while other clerks, receiving more compensation, work only during the daytime. I submit that it is only reasonable and just that these men should receive the compensation proposed. If you wish to make reductions, let them fall upon those classes that are not doing full work and whose services are more adequately compensated.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, there is no politics in this proposition. It is a question of justice to these employés. Before and during 1876 these clerks of class 4 were paid $1,200 and clerks of class 5 $1,400 per annum. It is conceded that by an inadequate appropriation the amounts paid them were reduced to $1,150 and $1,200, at which rate their pay has continued ever since. This is not a proposition to increase their salaries, because the salary is fixed by law. When gentlemen say this is a proposition to increase salaries they state that which is not the fact. The question is simply whether we shall make an appropriation sufficient to pay to these men the salaries provided by law. That is all there is in the case.

In the last Congress the justice of this claim was recognized, and an appropriation was made, as I claim, with the view of paying these men their salaries of $1,200 and $1,400. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] said the other day, and other gentlemen have said, that the appropriation of $81,300 added to the bill of last year was not for the compensation of these clerks; and they referred to a colloquy which occurred in this House between Mr. Horr, then a member from Michigan, and some other gentlemen, in which he said that the appropriation under consideration was not to increase the pay of clerks. That is all true. But if gentlemen will look at the colloquy they will find that it did not allude at all to the pay of postal clerks. An amendment appropriating $81,300 was embraced in the bill as it came from the Committee on Appropriations. The Postmaster-General, in making his estimate of $4,300,000 for the present year, said:

I estimate an increase of $301,000, which would make $4,601,000.

Then he said:

If you pay the postal clerks of classes 4 and 5 their salaries at $1,200 and $1,400 you must add $81,300, which would make the sum total of $4,682,300.

I hold in my hand the bill as it was reported from the Appropriations Committee, which appropriates $4,482,300, showing that this additional pay for postal clerks was put on in the committee, and the amendment of Mr. Horr to increase the appropriation $200,000 did not relate to the pay of postal clerks at all. He said it was for additional service, and in that view it was very proper.

Now, the simple question is whether you will do justice to these men. This appropriation has been recommended over and over again. I repeat, there is no politics in the proposition. After this House has spent three days declaring its regard and affection for the laboring men of this country it will not look well to refuse to appropriate what the law allows for the hardest-worked men under this Government; it will reflect badly upon its good faith if the American Congress should now cut down the salaries of these laboring men in the employ of the Government of the United States.

One other point. This appropriation has been recommended over and over again. I ask the Clerk to read from the report of a former Postmaster-General.

The Clerk read as follows:

I can but urge the justice of making the appropriation for this class of employés sufficient to enable the Department to restore them to the old rate of $1,400 per annum for head clerks railway post-offices; $1,200 per annum for clerks railway post-offices; and $1,000 and less for assistant clerks, route agents, and mail-route messengers.

The employés of this service are required to be absent from their homes, on expense, on an average at least half the time. This, of course, lessens their salaries a proportionate amount. The responsibilities of a railway post-office clerk in charge of a car are greater than those of most employés of the Government at similar salaries. His duties require constant and unremitting attention and study. He is required in many cases to be on duty night and day. He is liable to, and is called upon at all hours, and can have no regular holidays. He is exposed to all the dangers incident to railroad life, and upon his fidelity and knowledge of the service is dependent interests of unusual magnitude. He is deprived of the domestic privileges enjoyed by all other classes of governmental officers. His peculiar duties requiring him to remain on his feet when the train is in motion (the time when all classes of railroad employés, except, perhaps, conductors on local trains, can sit at ease), intensifies the physical strain attendant upon the jar and motion of the cars, and, in a few years, brings upon him diseases which necessitate his retirement from the service. This is becoming more apparent every year.

It would seem that all these considerations would warrant the strong recommendation that sufficient appropriation be made to enable the Department to restore former salaries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, in quoting from the report of the Postmaster-General to show the amount of labor performed by these postal clerks, it seems to me I could have gone to no better place to get at the exact truth. The object of that official report is to display the condition of the service, the number of miles run, the number of pieces handled, &c. If a more favorable showing could have been made to Congress, it certainly would have been; for the object of the report is to give us information in reference to this and other postal matters. But we are so much in the habit of hearing unauthorized statements about public officials being overworked, that unconsciously these exaggerated statements become ingrained into us, and we are actually loth to substitute for them truths obtained from official sources.

My friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], when he finds these official statements in his way, undertakes to supplement them by saying, what I have no doubt he believes to be true, that these postal clerks while not on the trains are engaged many hours which the Department does not see fit to report. My own information is that as a general rule this report discloses almost the entire time devoted by these clerks to the service of the Government. No doubt it is a fact that oftentimes while the cars are waiting on the tracks the clerks spend some time there for the purpose of facilitating their business to avoid the pressure which they would otherwise experience in the handling of the mails. Now he calls attention again to the distribution of pieces as compared with the distribution of pieces in the Treasury Department, to which he makes allusion. He seems to think the work there was of a different character. The work is identical. In the first place the person making the count, if there is a mistake, is chargeable with the loss.

Mr. BINGHAM. Just let me interrupt the gentleman right there.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; I can not yield, as I have only five minutes. In the next place, the person chargeable with that bill as it passes through his hands must determine whether it is counterfeit or not. The person handling that bill must see it is distributed at the right place, and keep the schedule in his mind of the places of twenty-five hundred banks in the United States. The more you examine it the more close is the analogy and the greater, the more certain, is the demonstration made that these postal clerks are not doing half the work of similar employés in the Treasury service.

I think, therefore, it is quite clear there is an exaggerated estimate of the work done by these employés.

It is said we know that all these clerk's salaries have been reduced below $1,400 per annum. Now, on page 315 of the Postmaster-General's report, if you will examine it, you will find that sixty-seven of these very clerks who are traveling about the country, to whom my friend's remarks refer, are paid the full sum of $1,400 each per annum. So, therefore, his complaint is without foundation in actual experience.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask the gentleman a question for the information of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I prefer to finish my own statement. The gentleman knows I have but five minutes.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to know why you have cut it down to $77,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. My friend wants to know why we have cut it down to $77,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is my point. It is because in the statement of the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, as an element upon which he makes that inquiry, not an increase of salaries of these clerks, but because the railway construction amounts to $10,000 a year. But the committee said this is beyond the estimate of other persons, and that it would not do to make an extravagant increase. My own opinion is that the estimate made by the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service includes the very thing my friend is contending for; that is, those higher rates.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is what it is intended to do.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; that is the gentleman's point. That is what he may have intended, but the Postmaster-General did not intend it, nor did the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads intend it. We did not intend, after working these men for ten years, just as soon as the administration fell out of your hands, to let you demand increased expenses and get wonderfully liberal compensation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All informal amendments will be withdrawn by unanimous consent, and the question then will recur on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 83.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 87.

So Mr. BINGHAM's amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to offer an amendment, by inserting in the fiftieth line, between "hundred" and "thousand," the words "seventy-seven," so it will read "$77,000."

This brings the amount up to the amount fixed by the Postmaster-General. [Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails:
For transportation of foreign mails, $375,000.
For balance due foreign countries, $100,000.

Mr. BURROWS. In lines 81 and 82, I move to strike out "$375,000" and insert "$425,000."

Mr. Chairman, the Superintendent of Foreign Mails, in making the recommendations for the needs of this service, estimated the amount to be $350,000. That $350,000 is the sea postage. Of course it is understood by every member of the committee that by the law the Postmaster-General at present is authorized to pay for carrying our foreign mails to foreign lines and sailing vessels the sea postage on letters.

To the American lines he is authorized to pay the sea and inland postage. Up to the present time the Postmaster-General has seen fit to pay only the sea postage; and it is my information and understanding that the sea postage is all that has been paid. We paid to our American lines about $48,000, which is the sea postage. This year in making the estimate of $350,000 that estimate is based upon the sea postage alone.

Then the Postmaster-General, or the Superintendent of Foreign Mails, adds this:

If it is the will of Congress that the entire sea and inland postage shall be given to vessels of United States register for the conveyance of mails transported by them, the estimate of $350,000 must be increased $75,000, as you will observe by reference to the table herewith transmitted, which gives the weight of the mails conveyed by vessels of United States register for the fiscal year of 1885, and shows the total sea and inland postage thereon to be $81,679.67.

Under the same percentage of increase in the weight of mails as estimated in this statement it will require $75,000 in addition to the $350,000, making a total of $525,000, which includes $100,000 for another purpose—for the foreign-mail service of this Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

My amendment, or that which I have proposed, is simply in accordance with the recommendation of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails. If it is the will of this Congress to pay no more to the American lines than the sea postage, although the law authorizes the payment of sea and inland postage, then the amount recommended in the bill is correct. But if the sea and inland postage is to be paid, and the recommendation of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails is reliable, then my amendment must be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I did not have an opportunity before this of presenting to my friend from Michigan a reduced estimate, made by the Post-Office Department, of the amount necessary for the compensation of vessels for carrying foreign mails—that is, for the purpose of paying the sea and inland postage. I have a communication from the Postmaster-General in which he states that the amount in the bill at this time is more than sufficient to pay the sea and inland postage on all the lines.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the date of that?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is dated March 22, and I have another of March 23. Now, sir, it is very difficult in five minutes' time to present the matter, but I shall ask to have the communications to which I have referred read from the desk, and if there is not sufficient time to read them will ask to have them printed.

In the first place, an error arose in making up the estimate of the steamers numbered on page 28. Fourteen are of foreign register, which is a miscalculation in that one item. In the next place, the service for the Cuban mail has been transferred to the appropriations for steamboat service, making a saving there of $20,000 as to this item.

Then by a contract with the Governments of New Zealand and New South Wales, which I shall ask to have printed, for carrying the mails, there is another saving of $19,200, so that there is in all $22,000 now needed for the purpose of paying the entire postage at sea and inland rates on American steamers employed by the Government. I repeat, I regret very much I could not have communicated these figures to my friend from Michigan before this time.

Mr. DINGLEY. What amount is stated by the gentleman from Georgia as being sufficient for the pay of American steamboats—$22,000?

Mr. BLOUNT. Twenty-two thousand dollars additional. This sum is additional to what has been recommended by the Superintendent of the Foreign Mails for sea and inland postage, and a gross sum has been allowed.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask to have these communications read from the desk; I could not hear the statement here.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should be glad to do this if there is time. I will send them to the desk in a few moments.

On March 23 I have a communication of this character:

I bring to your notice the cost of the ocean service for the first half of the fiscal year 1885–'86, which amounts to $171,737.37; this includes the Cuban service, the sea and inland postage to the steamship San Pablo of the Occidental and Oriental line from San Francisco to Japan, the United States and Brazil line from New York to Brazil, and the American line from Philadelphia to Great Britain. This would make the total service for the year amount to $343,466.74.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan desires to have these papers read, and I send them to the desk for that purpose. If there is not time I shall ask to have them printed.

The Clerk proceeded to read the papers, but before concluding the hammer fell.

Mr. PETERS took the floor, and yielded the time to have them read. They are as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I hand you a further statement of the actual cost of the foreign mails service for the first half of the current fiscal year, which may be of use to you in reference to the sufficiency of the proposed appropriation of $375,000. It is a communication from Mr. Bell to me of this date, showing the cost for the half-year to be $171,733.37, which includes sea and inland postage to one vessel between San Francisco and Japan, carrying a considerable portion of the mail, and the same to the United States and Brazil line and to the American line, and also the Cuban service which will not be embraced in the next appropriation. You will see that this will leave a considerable margin for the payment of sea and inland postage out of the $375,000, and more than sufficient if the weights of mails during the next fiscal year do not considerably outstrip the weights of the present year.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,
WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. H. BLOUNT,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF FOREIGN MAILS,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1886.

SIR: Referring to the statement made in my report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885 (the last paragraph on page 825 in the appendix to your report to the President), to the effect that if the total sea and inland postage should be allowed to vessels of United States registry for conveying mails to foreign countries during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, the estimated cost of the sea-conveyance of said mails during that period ($350,000) should be increased by $75,000 and the total to $425,000, I have to inform you that since my report was written I have obtained information which leads me to the conclusion that the full additional amount therein estimated as necessary ($75,000) will be now unnecessary, and that a total of $375,000 for the total cost of the service will be sufficient.

My reasons for the conclusion now arrived at are as follows:

The estimate of $75,000 additional was based upon the service rendered by United States steamship lines and vessels during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, as given in the table which is to be found on pages 822 and 823 of your report. This shows these steamers to have numbered seventy-eight, of which, however, fourteen are of foreign registry (not entitled to the sea and inland postage under section 4009 Revised Statutes), and should not, therefore, have been included in the estimate, but in fact were so included. Deducting for these fourteen vessels will reduce the sea and inland postage account by the sum of about $13,500.

In addition there is now to be deducted the estimated cost of the conveyance of the mails by sea to Cuba and Mexico—$20,000—which it has recently been determined to transfer to the appropriation for the transportation of domestic mails; and also a further amount of about $19,500, saved by the arrangement which has been made with the Government of New Zealand for the carriage of the Australian mails.

To recapitulate:

Increased amount estimated in my report		$75,000
Deduct for 14 vessels of foreign registry	$13,500
Deduct for service to Cuba and Mexico	20,000
Deduct for cost of service to Australia	19,500
		53,000
Which leaves a balance of		22,000

as the additional sum actually necessary to compensate all vessels of United States registry for services to be rendered in conveying mails to foreign countries during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, upon the basis of the whole sea and inland postage on the mails conveyed, and leaves a margin of $3,000 for contingencies in my present estimate of $375,000 for the whole cost of the service.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
NICHOLAS M. BELL,
Superintendent Foreign Mails.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF FOREIGN MAILS,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1886.

SIR: I bring to your notice the cost of the ocean service for the first half of the fiscal year 1885–'86, which amounts to $171,733.37; this includes the Cuban service, the sea and inland postage, to the steamship San Pablo, of the Occidental and Oriental line from San Francisco to Japan, the United States and Brazil line from New York to Brazil, and the American line from Philadelphia to Great Britain.

This would make the total service for the year amount to $343,466.74.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
NICHOLAS M. BELL,
Superintendent Foreign Mails.

Hon. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLOUNT. If there is no further debate on this amendment, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a copy of a contract with the colonies of New Zealand and New South Wales with reference to the carrying of the mails.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I am informed by telegram from Mr. DOCKERY that a statement ought to be put in the hands of the committee in regard to the contract for the carriage of the mails between San Francisco and the Australian colonies, and I beg to give you a brief statement of facts for the use of the committee or the House, as you may find it proper.

On the 1st of August last, when the Pacific Mail Company withdrew a portion of its service, it was under a contract with the colonies of New Zealand and New South Wales requiring its steamers to carry the mails until about the 1st of November, the termination of the existing contract. That company gave general public notice in the press, not officially but it was reported as a matter of news, that it would not carry the mails after that contract ceased.

Meantime a new steamship company, known as the Union Steamship Company of New Zealand, limited, was formed and negotiated a contract with the Australian colonies. Pending that negotiation, and on the 24th of September last, I received a cablegram, of which the following is a copy, namely:

"WELLINGTON, September 23, 1885.

"To POSTMASTER-GENERAL OF UNITED STATES,
"Washington, D. C.:

"Negotiating for service, Sydney, Auckland, Honolulu, 'Frisco, connecting at Honolulu with Spreckel's steamers. Will you for three years undertake for thousand yearly in excess of present payments for carriage American mails? Reply immediate definitely, as continuance service probably depends on your decision.

"VOGEL, Postmaster-General."

You will observe the indefiniteness. It was understood to be for $4,000 in excess of the amounts usually paid as sea postage, which would make about $18,000.

The Department was not authorized under the acts of Congress to make such a contract for two reasons: the first, because it was for three years, and the act of May 17, 1878 (20 Statutes, page 62, section 5) forbids a contract for a longer period than two years unless otherwise ordered by Congress; and, the second, that a contract can only be made under section 4007 "after advertising for proposals," which had not been done. Being manifestly desirable, however, that such an arrangement should be made, especially in view of the threatened discontinuance of the service by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the following telegram was sent:

"SEPTEMBER 24, 1885.

"To POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Wellington:

"Such continuous contract not authorized. Will allow such sum while desirable unless Congress forbids.

"VILAS, Postmaster-General."

The Governments of New Zealand and New South Wales then entered into a contract with the Union Steamship Company for the carriage of the mails between Auckland, Sydney, Honolulu, and San Francisco for a period of three years from the 21st of November, and in that contract the following article is contained, namely:

"10. The payment for the service mentioned in this contract shall be £30,000 per annum, less the deduction next herein mentioned, namely: The Postmaster-General of the United States has agreed by cablegram to pay £4,000 toward the service herein provided unless Congress forbids, and, if such payment shall be made, two-thirds of the said sum of £4,000 shall be deducted from the total payment of £30,000. The contractor shall collect the said sum of £4,000 and account as aforesaid to the Postmaster-General for two-thirds of that sum, which two-thirds shall be equally divided between the postmasters-general. If the Postmaster-General of the United States is prevented by Congress from paying the £4,000 then the postmasters-general shall make up the payment of £30,000 in the proportion of £20,000 by the postmaster-general of New Zealand, and £10,000 by the postmaster-general of New South Wales.

"11. Ten thousand pounds of the total sum payable under this contract shall be paid by the postmaster-general of New South Wales, and £20,000 shall be paid by the postmaster-general of New Zealand; but from such payments there shall be deducted by each postmaster-general respectively an amount equal to one-third of the £4,000 agreed to be paid by the Postmaster-General of the United States as aforesaid."

A printed copy, unsigned, of the contract was received in this Department some time since. It contained the first intimation that there was some difference in the telegram from the postmaster-general of New Zealand as it was sent and as it was received. A communication has this day been received from the postal administration of New Zealand, transmitting a copy of their original telegram, in which $20,000 is mentioned as the sum desired to be contributed by the United States. I have directed that administration to be advised that an absolute contract for three years can not be made by the Department for the reasons I have already given, but that the amount is within the limits of discretion reposed by Congress in this Department, and that it is not foreseen to be probable that Congress will forbid the payment of that amount for the service, or that it will cease to be desirable on the part of this Government.

You will perceive that the amount which it is thus required of this Government to pay, although less than one-half of the sea and inland postage which the Department would have been authorized to pay under the legislation as it stands, is the full sum which the governments of the two colonies proposed that the United States should contribute, and that it did not result from any negotiation of the nature of "dickering." The desirability to the governments of the colonies to establish and maintain a commercial line whereby they should secure the most convenient and speedy transit to the mother country is manifest, and its importance in that doubtless greatly outweighs either the value of the mail carriage to the colonies or to the United States. It may be justly supposed that these colonies considered this fact and its relative importance in proposing the sum of £4,000, or $20,0000, as the amount which this country should contribute for the mail carriage which it should be provided with.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,
WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. H. BLOUNT,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BURROWS. It is a little difficult to arrive at the points made by these letters of the reduction of the $75,000 which the Superintendent of Foreign Mails said was necessary and must be had if you intend to pay the whole of the sea and inland postage. What has been stated by the chairman of the committee, and what appears in these communications, appears very briefly in a speech made the other day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RIGGS], who accounts for this reduction of $75,000 or $50,000 by saying this:

At the time that estimate was made the service from Key West to Cuba was conducted under the direction of the Bureau of Foreign Mails, and pay therefor was included in that estimate. Since then arrangements have been contemplated, and I am told at the Department will no doubt be carried out, to transfer that service for the next fiscal year to a division or bureau of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's Office. In that event it will be paid for out of the appropriation for the steamboat service, and thereby this estimate of $75,000 would be reduced by the sum of $13,000, as I am told at the Department. I believe that is about correct.

In other words, the mails from Havana, which have been carried by the Cuban line, are not now carried. They are carried by rail from New York to Tampa, thence by steamboat to Key West, and thence to Havana. They contemplate that arrangement for the next year. But to show that that contemplated arrangement is looked upon with but little confidence by the Department, when we reach the estimate for the pay of steamboats we find there was no proposition made to increase that appropriation. If the mails are to be taken by these lines, conveyed by railway from New York to Tampa, why was not the appropriation for the Railway Mail Service increased by this bill? For that mail certainly can not be conveyed for nothing. More than that, if it is to be conveyed from Tampa to Key West and thence to Havana, why was not the appropriation for the steamboat service increased? And yet there is no proposition to increase that.

I think the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RIGGS] is entirely correct that this arrangement is contemplated, and that the Tampa arrangement is being used for the purpose of reducing the amount of the estimate made by the Postmaster-General.

Then, in the second place, here was a service of $12,000 or more to New Zealand and Australia from San Francisco. The Postmaster-General tells us that instead of using that amount, the sea postage, he has made an arrangement with the New Zealand Government by which he pays that government for carrying the United States mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to know—I have no pride or interest about it—but if the Postmaster-General has made arrangements with the New Zealand Government to carry our mails I would like to know by what authority of law he has done so. It appears that the New Zealand Government have contracted with some line to carry the mails to San Francisco and bring back the European mails to that country. And having made that arrangement, my understanding is, it is an arrangement by which they pay that line $150,000 per annum. Having done that, I understand now the Postmaster-General makes an arrangement with New Zealand to carry our mails over the same line and pay that government $20,000, thereby not paying our line anything, but paying it to that government.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Is it true that arrangement has been made?

Mr. BURROWS. I understand that to be the arrangement. And I would like the chairman of the committee or the Postmaster-General to tell us by what law the Postmaster-General of the United States makes arrangements with New Zealand or any other foreign government to carry our mails.

Then, thirdly, there is no reduction, because they say in the estimate for sea and inland postage there were seventy-eight vessels included, and on careful examination fourteen of those are of foreign register, which under the law can not be paid the sea and inland postage; it is said they can be paid only the sea postage. That is entirely erroneous. There are not fourteen vessels of foreign register. It is not true. Why in the estimate of the Postmaster-General, if gentlemen will turn to page 822 of the report, they will find the Pacific mail line to New Zealand is put down as having two vessels of foreign register. That is true; but if we have just made a reduction of $20,000 by the contract made with New Zealand, then no reduction should be made for those two vessels of foreign register.

The New York, Havana, and Mexican line have five vessels of foreign register; and the Postmaster-General says you must take that out. But you have just taken out the whole of that service. It is said in the Brazilian line there is one vessel of foreign register. That is not true; they have not a single vessel in their line of foreign register—not one. They chartered one last year in June for a single voyage, and they have not a single vessel of foreign register. Then it is said that in the Red D line there are two vessels of foreign register. They have not a single vessel of foreign register in that line. All the deduction that possibly can be made on the basis of these vessels of foreign register is $2,041.75; and yet the deduction is made of several thousand dollars.

When the Postmaster-General or the Superintendent of Foreign Mails makes this deduction on the ground that it is for fourteen vessels of foreign register he falls into an error, and in some instances, as in the case of the New Zealand service, he takes out the amount twice for the purpose of reducing this estimate of $75,000. Now, so far as I am concerned, I do not believe in the policy of hiring a foreign government to carry our mails, and if the Postmaster-General has made any such arrangement, I repeat I would like to know by what authority he has done it. This deduction on account of these vessels of foreign register is without foundation. As I said before, no more than $2,000 can be deducted for that, and I submit that it is impossible for gentlemen to explain away what the Postmaster-General has said is necessary for this service, $75,000 more to meet the sea and inland postage.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seems to be very much disturbed because the estimate originally made is to be brought lower, and he complains of the modification made by the Postmaster-General. He wants to insist that the original estimate, which is the highest, is probably, therefore, the best. Now, sir, we know that there is nothing more common than for estimates in every branch of the public service to be made too high.

Not a single appropriation is considered here at any session of Congress in which gentlemen on either side do not find that to be the case. The Postmaster-General has seen fit to revise his estimate and to give his reasons for the revision. I frankly confess that when I saw the estimate as it was originally made by the Superintendent of Foreign Mails I thought it was too high. They have an old and well-established custom of adding a certain percentage for each year, and they have some high-sounding phrases about the "return of peace and prosperity," and upon that basis they make their estimates; so when I read this report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails I saw that he had repeated the old fromula, and I thought it quite likely that his estimate was too high. For this reason I am not surprised at the modification made by the Postmaster-General.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] says that the first statement that fourteen vessels that were calculated as being of American register are not of American register, is untrue. From what source does the gentleman get his information? The Post-Office Department speaks from the records of the Treasury Department, ascertains the facts officially, as it may, and it is upon that sort of information that the Postmaster-General makes this statement. If the Treasury Department misstated the facts, or if the Post-Office Department has not intelligence enough to make a correct statement of the information which it obtains from the Treasury Department, then I am at a loss to know what to do. But I am inclined to take the statements of these officials rather than the opinion of my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who has not had much to do with administration and therefore can not have the familiarity that these gentlemen presumably have with matters pertaining to their special duties. But the gentleman objects again to the second reason, in relation to the Cuban line.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD was recognized, and yielded to Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Michigan has referred to the other factor in this reduction, the Cuban line.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. Do you think you ought to take out the two vessels indicated as of foreign register in the New Zealand service, when you have already taken some $20,000 as the amount agreed upon to be paid to that government for the service? Do you want to take it out twice?

Mr. BLOUNT. There were not two vessels of foreign register in that line.

Mr. BURROWS. I beg pardon. It is so indicated in the report.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not so stated by the Department.

Mr. BURROWS. It is so indicated.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, I know; but at this time there are three vessels, two of them of American register; only one is a foreign vessel.

Mr. BURROWS. But the Postmaster-General states otherwise.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; but a later examination has been made as to the vessels.

Mr. BURROWS. Very well. Then the deduction for fourteen vessels is erroneous.

Mr. BLOUNT. It may possibly be, sir, as to one single vessel alone.

Mr. BURROWS. Another question. You take off the Cuban service, which is five vessels of foreign register, and you deduct the sum of $13,000 for that, and yet you deduct for the five vessels of foreign registry again. Upon what rule is that done?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman seems to have analyzed the table to suit himself. I have taken this statement from the Post-Office Department as to the error in the calculation as to the fourteen vessels. I have not the tables themselves, and have not sought to examine them. When told by the officers of the Department that they have made inquiry at the Treasury Department and have ascertained that the previous statement was erroneous, I take it for granted that they understood what they were doing.

Mr. BURROWS. At page 822 of the report of the Postmaster-General there is a table which shows the fourteen vessels of foreign register. Five of those vessels belong to the New York, Havana and Mexican line. Now you say, "We must make a deduction for those five vessels because we can pay them only sea postage," and yet you have deducted the $13,000, and you use that to reduce the $75,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not designate the vessels.

Mr. BURROWS. But you make a deduction for those vessels?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do, upon the statement of the Post-Office Department that there is an error in the original table.

Mr. BURROWS. All I desire to call attention to is, that you take out the $13,000 for the transfer of the Cuban service and then deduct for the five vessels which belong to that line. I say that is erroneous.

Mr. BLOUNT. I repeat again that as to the tables the gentleman has before him I have not sought to examine them. I have taken the official statement of the Department. It may be that the gentleman is in error himself in his analysis of the tables, but I have not undertaken to analyze it.

The gentleman has referred to the Cuban service, and he says the Postmaster-General did what he did simply for the purpose of reducing that service.

I wish to say that by the aid of this coast line of railway the mail is now being carried to Cuba more frequently and in shorter time than it was carried by these steamers. There is no difficulty up to this time; none is anticipated. It is expected that the Department will be able for the estimated amounts to provide for the service from Tampa, via Key West, to Cuba. Now, my friend will see at once that when no contract has been made, when the matter is necessarily in futuro, for me to state on behalf of the Postmaster-General what amount is estimated for in the bill would not be consistent with the interests of the public service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEELE obtained the floor and yielded to Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am sure my friend from Michigan, when he understands that this service is in contemplation, will not ask me to disclose the views and plans of the Post-Office Department, when that exposure might put the Department at the mercy of persons who are seeking to contract with it. Therefore I think I have said enough on this point.

In the RECORD of to-morrow morning the gentleman will find a document which I have asked to have printed showing the arrangement which has been made with New South Wales and New Zealand in reference to the carriage of that service. There is no contract. Two out of three of the vessels engaged are American. The Postmaster-General has simply stated that he is willing, if Congress permits, to allow them a sum less than one-half of the sea and inland postage for the transmission of that mail. He has reserved the right on the part of Congress to terminate the arrangement at any moment.

In fact he disclaims the existence of any contract. But so long as the American vessels engaged in the transportation of those mails are getting the sea and inland postage he will not interfere, and so long as the foreign vessels are getting the sea and inland postage he will not interfere, if Congress should not see fit to do so. He has simply made a large saving for the Government of the United States on the propositions of these governments, and that is the whole story. If any person, after an examination of this arrangement, can find complaint against the Postmaster-General for it—I mean any person outside the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which seems to be hounding him to the extent of its power—then I would like to hear such complaint.

Mr. HEWITT. Do I understand the gentleman to say there is no complaint in regard to the action of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, no; I refer particularly to that contract.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who voted in the last Congress to authorize the Postmaster-General to give $400,000 to American vessels for carrying foreign mails.

It was $400,000; not much compared with the millions that England, France, and Germany gave, but more than Holland gave that year and much more than we gave the year before. Then it was $50,000; $50,000 to American ships and $300,000 to English ships. So this was a gain. It was a step in the right direction. It inaugurated a new policy. It accomplished two purposes dear to the American heart: It fostered American manufacturers by getting them their share in the new markets of the world; and American shipping, by giving it protection against foreign competition. So we were glad to vote for it; the gladder, because it was about the only opportunity that Congress gave us to vote for anything the people wanted. It had 80 Democratic majority, but it gave us opportunity to provide for the Presidential succession, though only one life deferred a vacancy, for which no provision had been made; no opportunity, though the business world prayed for it, to free the hands of honest debtors and restore them to self-supporting activity; no opportunity to stop them, though our mints spawned a base coin which the people refused to take except on compulsion, and whose decreasing worth the markets of the world daily recorded. It gave us an opportunity to cut away 20 per cent. of the tariff, which protected American wages, that the party which had already clipped 20 per cent. from the poor man's dollar might boast that it had consistently clipped 20 per cent. from the poor man's pay. [Laughter.] But this effort to maim American industry was defeated by the Republican members, aided by a few Democratic members who preferred country to party; and this measure to aid American industries was passed by the same holy alliance, not without a struggle. The debate was the most spirited of the session, the discussion was renewed at every stage, and the objections, already heard three or four times, were most ably summed up by the great Indiana objector to all progress [laughter] on the last night of the session, when it passed.

And what good came of it all? English ships still carry our mails; English sailors still get our money. Why? Did the President veto the measure? Was the Treasury unable to furnish the money? No. One of his Secretaries repealed the provision. He pitied a Congress which could not see the force of objections four times rehearsed to them, corrected their judgment, and overruled their decisions. And we are, alas! without consolation or redress.

We can not assume, as our friends on the other side try to, that the wisdom of the Portmaster-General, because it happened to be acquired without legislative experience, is greater than that of all Congress.

Nor can we blame ourselves that we used to the Postmaster-General language ordinarily used by Congress to convey its wishes to the head of a Department, and did not change the courtesy of permission and authorization to the vigor of a command. No one had told us the need of change. No one had told us that the policy of the mikado had entered the Cabinet, and that in the Post-Office Department we should find "the Poo-Bah of the administration;" and, in the same person, the Postmaster-General, the President of the United States, and its Congress; one who with triple assurances could as Postmaster-General refuse to execute any provision for our mails, or as President veto, or as Congress repeal it. [Applause.] I know well enough that the friends of American industry on the sea or land are, by reason of an ecclesiastical blunder for which they are not to blame, made powerless to do anything except to protest, and I only rise up in their name to protest against this irregular veto, which is as insulting to the dignity of Congress as it is harmful to the business of the American people. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. BLOUNT. To limit debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill; and pending that, I move that all debate upon this paragraph, and all amendments thereto, be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend from Georgia will not limit debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. How much time does my friend want?

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall only desire to occupy five minutes myself, but I would suggest that the gentleman make it ten minutes at least.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move to limit debate to ten minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, how is this time proposed to be divided?

The SPEAKER. That, of course, is not for the Chair to determine.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I ask the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suppose five minutes on each side.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I trust the gentleman from Georgia will allow more time.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentlemen on the other side have just occupied ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by making it twenty minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will accept the modification the gentleman suggests, and make it twenty minutes.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Ten minutes on each side.

The motion to limit debate to twenty minutes was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, and by order of the House all debate in committee upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto is limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the range of the debate has gone far beyond the original proposition. It is alleged that the Postmaster-General, in the exercise of the discretionary power conferred upon him by the legislation of the last Congress, arbitrarily refused to carry out the will of Congress touching the $400,000 appropriated by the act of the 3d of March, 1885, to encourage and facilitate the carrying of the foreign mails in American vessels. It is charged that the Postmaster-General arbitrarily refused to expend this $400,000.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], in his elegant language, denounces this as an interference with the interests of labor in this country, and an effort to impair the interests of the American people involved in our foreign commerce.

The meaning of all this, Mr. Chairman, is that the Postmaster-General was directed by Congress to apply the $400,000 referred to to encourage American shipping, which statement is of course without foundation. But what are the facts?

The terms of the act making this appropriation simply authorize the expenditure. "The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized," &c., are the terms of the law.

A discretion was vested in the Postmaster-General as to whether the money should be expended or not. The measure could not have passed this House, even at the late and pressing hour when it finally did pass, had it not been for the assurance given by the gentleman having charge of the measure on that side of the House that it left the entire discretion with the Postmaster-General. I have before me the words uttered by Mr. Horr, of Michigan, who brought forward the proposition in the House and was its champion from the beginning.

Mr. Morse remarked:

Then it is entirely optional with the Postmaster-General to use the appropriation or not, as he may see proper?

To which Mr. Horr responded:

Every dollar of it is left to his judgment. If he does not think the service demands that the contract should be made with any vessel or any route, he need not make it.

And under this assurance, by 10 majority, the House agreed to the amendment.

The language of the appropriation confers in unequivocal terms that discretion on the Postmaster-General. The Postmaster-General refused to expend it. And, sir, the tone of public sentiment throughout this country has unquestionably sustained the Postmaster-General in refusing to expend that money. Who condemns the Postmaster-General? Who is the complaining party? The Pacific Mail Steamship Company and their attorneys have raised this clamor. They have spoken through portions of the public press. They speak in terms of unequivocal denunciation of the Postmaster-General for what they term the arbitrary exercise of power in refusing to expend the public moneys placed in his charge.

Is it for that company to stand in this House and arraign a public officer for default in his duty? Not long ago—so short a time since, indeed, that many of the gentlemen now on this floor remember the details of the event—a committee of this House reported, after a laborious investigation, that this same clamorous corporation now demanding a large portion of this $400,000, had expended $900,000 to carry through Congress the bill by which that company obtained a subsidy of $500,000 a year from your Treasury for ten years. Nine hundred thousand dollars! For what purpose did they spend that large sum of money? To corrupt the legislative branch of your Government. And yet that company is permitted to have a voice here in demanding that the Postmaster-General shall be censured for not obeying its demands in the expenditure of public money, and that too where a discretion was vested in him whether it should be expended or not.

I do not hesitate to say that no public officer in the history of this country in performance of a public duty has acted more wisely, more in the public interest, than the Postmaster-General did in refusing to submit to the dictation of that corporation, which, with a record such as I have mentioned, still demands money from the public Treasury for a service which other companies more American than that corporation were rendering upon the old terms of the sea postage alone, and which in the judgment of the Postmaster-General in 1864, at the period of high prices, when the compulsory act so much complained of was passed, was ample compensation for the service rendered. The Postmaster-General wisely refused the demand of this corporation, and no public interest has suffered.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. I only desire to say that the American Congress will beat any body on earth for discussing a question not before it. The matter discussed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has not the slightest reference to the amendment I have proposed. My proposition is to increase the appropriation sufficiently to pay the sea and inland postage on American lines. That has nothing under the sun to do with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, no more than with any other line.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was responding to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS].

Mr. BURROWS. The sea and inland postage is not a subsidy. That is fixed by law. It is a statute to-day, and I am simply contending for the increase of this appropriation to the full amount of the sea and inland postage; and gentlemen, in reply, summon up the ghost of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That is childish.

The simple question is whether we shall pay the American lines or appropriate enough to pay the sea and inland postage, what the law allows, or whether we shall not. The Postmaster-General, in his report, said you must add to the $350,000 $75,000 more, making the appropriation $425,000. That is my amendment. The bill appropriates but $375,000—$50,000 short of the estimate.

The chairman of the committee has tried to explain this reduction. His explanation is not satisfactory to me. I do not believe it is sound, and I want to say right here that there is no danger in appropriating too much. Let us appropriate the full amount of the sea and inland postage as estimated by the Postmaster-General. He is not compelled to use it. He has discretion in the matter; he may use the entire amount of the sea and inland postage, or if he sees fit he may use any amount less than either. So there is no danger in making the appropriation to the full amount of the sea and inland postage as estimated by him. That is precisely my amendment, and that is all there is of this question. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire simply to call the attention of the committee to one fact brought out by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] which illustrates the method in which we are treating American steamships. In the report of the Postmaster-General it was stated that sea and inland postage only, which is a very small and inadequate compensation, would give to the American-Australian line $39,000 for mail service. It is now proposed in the statement that has been made as coming from the Postmaster-General to avoid the payment of even the sea and inland postage to the American-Australian line by making a private contract with the New Zealand Government, by which they allow us to put our mails into their bags and put them aboard American steamship lines and have them carried under a contract with the New Zealand Government. In other words, instead of paying the American-Australian steamship line $39,000 for American service, as was proposed by the Postmaster-General even in his report, it has been discovered that an evasion may be made of that, and that by a private contract with the Government of New Zealand every dollar of that $39,000 may be withheld from the American steamship line, and $20,000 instead paid to the New Zealand Government.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, simply to call the attention of the committee to this, because it illustrates every step that has been taken in the progress of the present administration of the Post-Office in its treatment of American steamship lines. Instead of treating them liberally and generously even in the purview of law, there has been a disposition at every step to avoid giving them compensation whenever it could be done. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to call attention again to the fact that sea and inland postage to the Australian steamship line, which gives $39,000, is compensation; but that compensation is arrived at under the law simply from the fact that the sea and inland postage to Australia and New Zealand is 12 cents instead of 5 cents, as it is to every other foreign country within the Postal Union. Therefore, if $39,000 is appropriate compensation for the Australian line, as is admitted by the Postmaster-General, then sea and inland postage on every other route is inadequate compensation, because on every route to every other foreign country within the Postal Union the sea and inland postage is only 5 cents per letter. Another point: The suggestion is made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that the repeal of the law providing that American steamships should be obliged to carry our mails at the rate that the Department might provide was obtained in an improper manner.

The gentleman said that the report of the committee of conference explaining the effect of the repeal of the compulsory law was not stated to the House. I desire to call his attention to the fact that that statement is demonstrated to be incorrect by a reference to page 5452 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where it appears that General Slocum, who was chairman of the committee of conference, reported not only the exact terms of the compromise which had been agreed upon by the conference committee, but also a statement in detail showing the effect of it. I am satisfied that the gentleman [Mr. BLOUNT] did not intend to do injustice to that committee, but by reference to the page of the RECORD I have indicated he will find that he did.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has expired. The committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 44) providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want only half a minute to emphasize some of the statements of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The motive of the House that passed this appropriation which has been called in question was to leave the discretion with the Postmaster-General. The language of the law left it there, and the Postmaster-General exercised it wisely and in obedience, as I believe, to the will of a vast majority of the people of the United States. Therefore, in my judgment, it is becoming under the circumstances that men on all sides of this House should approve his conduct; but especially should gentlemen on this side of the House commend his action in this matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has correctly stated that this debate has run away from the proposition contained in his amendment, and I concede that he is not responsible for it, and that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] alone is responsible. His mind has recurred to a most disastrous Presidential campaign in which he figured as the chief leader of the Republican canvass, and, with that unpleasant recollection in his memory, instead of bearing the responsibility of the failure, he brings up a poor clergyman here before the American people and attempts to make him responsible.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And, thanks to the kindness of a Democratic politician, that "poor clergyman" is now a little better off than he was at the time to which the gentleman refers. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] does well to come in to aid his friends. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any just cause of complaint about this matter. It is all right. We have a better administration of public affairs than we could possibly have hoped for had the result been otherwise.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It was purely providential. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, providential; and providential because it was right that it should take place.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will not occupy time in discussing this affair between my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] and the clergyman. I invite the gentleman from New Jersey to resume the struggle with his clerical friend at some other place and time, and allow the public business here to go on. [Laughter.]

Now, during the discussion on this four-hundred-thousand-dollar clause, there was nothing more earnestly presented on the part of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and other gentlemen on that side of the House than the proposition that this was not a subsidy; that the object was simply to give ample mail pay, and that the discretion was vested in the Postmaster-General as to how the fund should be used or whether it should be used.

Mr. DINGLEY. Discretion inside the law, not outside the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Maine proclaimed that there was no subsidy in it, and asked the House to say that the four hundred and fourteen trips a year across the Atlantic should be reduced to a semi-weekly mail; that the money paid to the foreign steamships should be concentrated for the purpose of giving us a semi-weekly mail; that the commerce of the country should be embarrassed and the mails made less frequent, all for the purpose of giving $270,000 to American steamships—and yet there was no subsidy!

Now I want to say to gentlemen on the other side of the House who have seen fit to oppose the Postmaster-General that not only is the Postmaster-General responsible, but the President and his Cabinet are responsible, and this side of the House proposes to be responsible in this matter before the American people.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is what we want.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; and that is what you will get—not a subsidy. We will see to it that no House is coerced hereafter in voting an appropriation for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or any other steamship company in the name of a subsidy and under the threat that there shall be no postal appropriations without it. Gentlemen here will find, I trust, ample will and ample capacity to take the responsibility of indorsing the Postmaster-General for exercising a wise discretion and saving to the American people the sum of $400,000. We are willing to take that responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The time to which debate on this paragraph was limited has expired. All formal amendments will be regarded as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], which the Clerk will again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 81 and 82 strike out "$375,000" and insert "$425,000;" so that the paragraph will read:
"For transportation of foreign mails $425,000."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 82, noes 106.

Mr. BURROWS. I think we had better have tellers. It will take but a moment. I call for tellers.

The tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was ageed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and had directed him to report the same without amendment and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the previous question on the engrossing and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was ageed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to a privileged question. I ask the Clerk to read the conference report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 44) making appropriation for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out the words "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert the words "so herein limited;" and that the House concur in the same.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
SEABORN REESE,
W. H. WADE,
Managers on the part of the House.
WM. MAHONE,
RICH'D COKE,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement accompanying the report was read:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 44) for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex., submit the following statement in explanation of the accompanying report:

The effect of the action of the conference committee is that the limit of cost of the public building at San Antonio, Tex., is fixed at $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $150,000 as proposed by the House in its amendment numbered 1; and that the proviso inserted by the House precluding purchase of site until estimates show that the balance of the limit will suffice for erection of a suitable building to accommodate the needs of the Government, as proposed by the House in its amendment numbered 2, is retained in the bill.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
SEABORN REESE,
W. H. WADE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] whether there was any considerable struggle in the conference committee to preserve the limit of $150,000 which the House had put on this bill? [Laughter.] Did the House conferees exert themselves as they ought to have done?

Mr. DIBBLE. I will state that the managers on the part of the House took the matter into grave consideration; and the conference occupied about twenty minutes.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I only wanted to learn how far the spirit of economy actuated the conferees.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report,

The SPEAKER said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we shall have some explanation of this report.

Mr. DIBBLE. The explanation is in the statement of the managers that the Senate sent over a bill limiting the cost of this building to $200,000, the House amended it by fixing $150,000 as the limit; and the House conferees, on the showing made at the conference, deemed it advisable to recede, in view of the guarantee of the second amendment that this amount would not be exceeded.

The question being again taken on agreeing to the report, there were—ayes 45, noes 37.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that no quorum has voted; and pending that I move the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being ayes 76, noes not counted.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. TAULBEE and Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to extend in the RECORD their remarks on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNES: Petition of certain citizens of Richmond County, Georgia, for the passage of the Blair bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Petition of W. C. Dodge and 50 others, praying for a provision in the appropriation bill requiring the commissioners of the District of Columbia to construct sewers in certain localities named in petition—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. COLE: Petition of Knights of Labor of Baltimore against the passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Petition of citizens of Bath, N. Y., for a tax on oleomargarine, &c.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DUNN: Petition of Margaret Ray and Joanna Summers, of Phillips County, Arkansas, for reference of their war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Margaret A. Ray and James Summers, of Phillips County, Arkansas—to the same committee.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: Petition of 58 citizens of Saline, Kans., for the passage of the bill granting a pension to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war of the rebellion, and the widows and orphans as therein stated—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, urging the passage of the bankruptcy bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of clerks of the United States quartermaster's office at Saint Paul, Minn., against the passage of House bill 6395—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of clerks of the United States quartermaster's office at Santa Fé, N. Mex., against the same—to the same committee.

Also, memorial of John F. Donahauer, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FISHER: Petition of Local Assembly No. 3287, Knights of Labor, of Au Sable, Mich., against free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Remonstrance against the passage of the free-ship bill, from the Knights of Labor of Kansas City and of Armourdale, Kans.—to the same committee.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Petition of Mrs. J. C. McVay and other ladies of Yankton, Dak., praying for the passage of the Sioux reservation bill—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HIRES: Petition of many citizens of Millville, N. J., praying that no reduction be made in duties on glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of Knights of Labor, Local Assembly No. 4789, of Hudson, N. Y., against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. LINDSLEY: Petition for taxing artificial butter—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition from the Knights of Labor, in opposition to free ships—to the same committee.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of Rebecca Wiswell, a nurse in the late war, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, memorial of the American Local Science Association, for national aid to education of illiterates—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. McKINLEY: Petition of Local Assembly No. 190, Knights of Labor, of Thomaston, Ohio, praying against the passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Also, resolutions of the General Assembly of Ohio, insisting upon the restoration of tariff on imported wools as established in 1867—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of State encampment, Grand Army of the Republic, Columbus, Ohio, favoring amendment to section 1754, Revised Statutes—to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of Edward Holden, of Mineral Point, Ohio, giving plan for the settlement of capital and labor troubles—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, memorial concerning the abolition of the Presidency—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution favoring bill to require scientific study of the use of narcotics and stimulants, passed by the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Canton, Ohio—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Petition of 8 ladies of Quincy, Mich., officers and members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, asking for an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr O'FERRALL: Petition of Benjamin Bowman, of Samuel Cline, of Rockingham County; of Thomas H. Rollins, of Rappahannock County; of Mrs. Elizabeth Richardson, of Warren County; and of Noah M. Funkhouser, of Shenandoah County, Virginia, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PAYNE: Petition of Charlotte C. Bates and others, of Auburn, N. Y., for temperance text-books in schools of the District of Columbia, &c.—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. PERKINS: Petition of Local Assembly No. 2842, Knights of Labor, of Arkansas City, and of Local Assembly No. 535, Knights of Labor, of Scammonville, Kans., protesting against the passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of Sarah Hayes, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. T. B. REED: Petition of Rufus Jay, for increase of pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of Mrs. M. R. Gannaway, of Bedford County, Tennessee, asking compensation for putting on the market certain inventions—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SCRANTON: Petition of Local Assembly No. 222, Knights of Labor, of Scranton, Pa., against the passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of William Willard, of Charleston, W. Va., and of John S. Malcolm, of Nicholas, W. Va., for reference of their war claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Petition of William H. Jackson, of Madison County, and of estate of J. R. Alston, of Madison County, Tennessee—to the same committee.

By Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: Petition of R. D. Jordan, guardian of minor children of Claiborne De Loach, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WAIT: Papers in the pension case of Rufus D. Curtiss to go with House bill 6680—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Joseph A. Clarke, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. C. WHITE: Petition of citizens of Indiana County, Pennsylvania, in support of the claim of John Montgomery—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of Bishop Halsey, of African Methodist Episcopal Church, and 175 others, praying for the passage of the educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. WILSON: Papers relating to the claim of Thomas H. Willis; of John J. H. Straith; of Francis Yates, of Jefferson County, West Virginia; of Robert Miller, of Augusta County, and of Eliza T. Pearce, of Fauquier County, Virginia—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions, praying Congress for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in the Military and Naval Academies, the Indian and colored schools supported wholly or in part by money from the national Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. W. J. GREEN: Of Rev. Theodore Whitfield, S. H. Isler, and 84 others, citizens of Wayne County, North Carolina.

By Mr. LORE: Of Charles M. Curtis and others, of Wilmington, Del.

By Mr. NELSON: Of Rudolph Zimmerman and others, of Clay and Morrison Counties, Minnesota.

By Mr. SEYMOUR: Of E. P. Herrick and others, of Fairfield County, Connecticut.

By Mr. WAKEFIELD: Of H. A. Bushnell and others, of Blue Earth County, Minnesota.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 7, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Kootenai County, Idaho, praying for the passage of the bill to annex North Idaho to Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of East Liverpool, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Salmon Falls, N. H., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS presented two petitions of citizens of Montgomery and Labette Counties, in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the bill dividing the State of Kansas into two Federal judicial districts; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Scammonville, Arkansas City, Parsons, and Armourdale, in the State of Kansas, and a memorial of Local Assembly No. 2005 of Knights of Labor of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON presented memorials of Knights of Labor of Frankfort and South Bend, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of merchants and importers of New York city, in favor of the passage of a bill to amend section 2805 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow oaths to be administered by notaries public in certain matters connected with the custom-house; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1204) for the relief of the children of the late Surgeon Alfred M. Owen and to increase their pensions, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1311) for the relief of the administrators of the estate of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 535) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co. and others, moved its indefinite postponement, which was agreed to; and he submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2078) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co. and others; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 304) to compensate physicians for services rendered under an order of the United States court of the northern district of Alabama, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1002) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lily and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2073) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lily and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district; which was read twice by its title.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WALTHALL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2069) for the relief of Katharine C. B. Merrill, executrix of Ayres P. Merrill, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2070) referring to the Court of Claims the claims of General T. T. Garrard and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2071) for the relief of the legal representatives of Lieut. Francis Ware, deceased, of the Revolutionary war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2072) for the relief of S. M. Hamilton, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2074) to incorporate the United States and Congo National Emigration Steamship Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask, inasmuch as the bill has relation to the petition I presented yesterday in regard to emigration to Africa, that the petition also go to the Committee on Commerce instead of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that change of reference will be made.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2075) granting a pension to Jackson Chapman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes relating to the hours of labor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2077) granting a pension to Catharine S. Hewit; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 44) providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 197) to increase the pension of Florence Murray;

A bill (S. 683) granting a pension to Henry O. Hill;

A bill (S. 811) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Gilman;

A bill (S. 814) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline M. Putnam;

A bill (S. 1127) to amend and correct the act approved March 3, 1885, granting a pension to Sarah Hague;

A bill (S. 1363) granting a pension to William Blanchard;

A bill (H. R. 1270) to authorize the Mississippi Water-Power and Boom Company of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 18) for the further distribution of the report of the Public Land Commission; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 73) authorizing the printing of committee report.

TAX ON CORPORATIONS—PENSION FUND.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire and report upon the following questions:

1. Has Congress the power to lay a tax in any form on the capital stock of corporations in the United States and Territories and the District of Columbia?
2. Is it just and expedient to levy such tax?
3. Can such tax be imposed in the form of a license to such corporations to continue their business operations?
4. What classes of corporations should be exempt from taxation?
5. That said committee further inquire whether it is expedient to set apart the money to be derived from such taxation as a special fund for the payment of pensions; and, if so, what percentage of taxation will raise a sum that will be adequate for that purpose?

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. CALL. I ask consent to take from the table the resolution submitted by me relating to the forfeiture of lands granted to railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL January 28, 1886, as follows:

Resolved, That all railroad land grants heretofore made where the land was not earned by the completion of the line of railroad and the performance of the conditions required by the granting act within the time required therein, and where the time has not been extended by an act of Congress, or shall not hereafter be extended, shall be declared forfeited and opened to homestead entry and cash entry in small bodies, securing to actual settlers the preferred right in all cases to make entries of their homes to the extent of 160 acres, and confirming to all purchasers of town sites, where lots have been sold and improvements made, their title to the same.

And the Committee on Public Lands is hereby instructed to report a bill to this effect to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to interpose an objection to the Senator making the remarks of which he gave notice, but if it is going to interfere with the arrangement in reference to the Army bill I must certainly object.

Mr. CALL. I propose to move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Public Lands after I have concluded my remarks. I shall not ask the Senate to take any action upon the resolution but to refer it.

Mr. LOGAN. I will only say to the Senator that if the resolution takes more time than would seem to be proper at present, I shall claim the right to object to its further consideration. However, if the Senator is not going to take much time I willingly consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business before the Senate in regular order according to previous understanding is the bill (S. 777) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States. The Senator from Florida asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution which has been read. Is there objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I must object unless I can have an understanding as to how much time the Senator from Florida proposes to take.

Mr. CALL. I suppose I shall not occupy an hour, if so much as that.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will take no more time than that I shall not object. We can then take up the Army bill about 1 o'clock. If the Senator will agree to that I do not object.

Mr. CALL. I agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate by unanimous consent, and the Senator from Florida is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CALL addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition of the resolution does the Senator propose?

Mr. CALL. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MANDERSON and Mr. HAMPTON members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the annual examination of the cadets at the United States Military Academy, at West Point, N. Y.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CAMERON and Mr. BLACKBURN members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the annual examination of the cadets at the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of the morning hour.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 777) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, the pending question being on Mr. HALE'S motion to strike out section 2.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, when I took the floor last evening I fancied that the Senate was feeling some interest in the question, as I certainly was for the time being. I confess that my interest has somewhat abated because of the evidence that the Senate is weary of this discussion. But some things have been said, sentiments have been advanced, and propositions made which are at least unsatisfactory to myself, and there being no objection I will proceed to soliloquize a few minutes for the benefit of the RECORD.

As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs I feel bound to say here what I said in the committee-room to justify the general provisions of the bill. I have been a little surprised at the nature of the opposition. I could have expected of course that it would be considered a question of discretion as to whether the Army should be increased to thirty thousand or not, but I was not quite prepared to hear that the necessity and functions of a regular army, or indeed of any regularly organized force whatever in this or any other government, is questioned.

I believe it was said, or if not something very near it, that the regular Army might be well dispensed with—might be entirely dismissed. It was not exactly asserted that the millennium had actually arrived and is at present pervading the earth, but only that we do not need an army. Its value in the past was questioned. I think it was said that it was not specially valuable in the opening of the rebellion, and the reason given for that was partly because it was not large enough, and now an objection is made to making it larger for any possible contingency!

The gentleman who took that view evidently forgot that the finest example of fidelity to the flag given by any class of citizens of the United States beyond all odds was given by the private soldiers of the regular Army, who refused in a certain case to be surrendered, and who never so far as I know in a body anywhere, so much as a company of them, went over to what we tried to prove was the wrong side. I have been informed since yesterday that one commanding officer in the confederate forces did have a company made up of regular soldiers. That is the first time I ever heard that a single man of the Army that existed at the beginning of the rebellion in 1861 went over to the wrong side of the house.

One is tempted to go back to the very foundations of the theories of government to endeavor to show that force is necessary as well as law in the organization of society and government; that without something to back it, something if you choose in the nature of irresistible, and crushing, cruel force law is useless. It is a mere affectionate request to the rioter, to the disobedient, to the turbulent and criminal classes—an affectionate request to them to please to be good citizens.

The existence of this power does not of necessity mean that it is to be used frequently or ought to be used rashly. If it is understood it is there in some force, of some account, ready to be called into action, the odds are it never will be required at all. If the turbulent see that the effect of an outbreak on their part would be to call down upon them instant annihilation, the odds are we shall have no outbreak. But if there were in a well-governed country a proper military force ready to be called out to sustain the civil officers and it should go on for a hundred years without the necessity of their ever killing a person in a riot, the argument I suppose would be that all that money had been wasted during those hundred years, whereas the proper argument would be that no such money was ever so well invested.

I hope no regular Army of the United States will ever again be called upon to suppress anything in the nature of an insurrection or to put down any resistance to civil process of any description, but I do not expect so delightful a result just at present. It is an old saying that it is the unexpected that happens. No man knows how soon or when we may be called upon to vindicate the supremacy of the civil law.

The history of the use of force in peace times is an exceedingly interesting one. If the student will go into the history of English custom and legislation from which we inherit our laws and traditions and our present organizations, he will find it as interesting as any other portion of English history. There was always supposed to be an armed force back of the civil power. The ancient laws of England required every man to be provided with a bow and a certain number of arrows, and men of certain conditions to be provided with horses and fully equipped. In short, the whole nation was an armed camp.

The phrase "posse comitatus" to us now simply implies a collection of unarmed and helpless citizens; but the ancient English officer summoning the posse comitatus, summoned a body of armed men, often organized and drilled men, from the neighborhood, for everybody was in a military organization; and the nobility of higher or lower degree had their armed retainers about them. Time passed on, and depending upon what they called their benevolences or their forced loans and their private property and robberies of various kinds, kings assumed to keep a force of armed men for their own purposes, and that naturally gave rise to that extraordinary jealousy of a standing army, which is our inheritance from the English people, and which is maintained long after the original reasons for such a jealousy have departed.

The controversies during the time of Charles II and James II, resulting in the accession of William and the Declaration of Rights, reorganized the British nation in that respect, and gave Parliament the absolute control of every shilling for an army, and made it impossible to maintain it longer than a year. Since that time the English army has ceased to be a dreaded weapon in the hands of the government. It is regarded there now as emphatically as it is here as the mere instrument of the civil power to command respect, only possibly to be used and not likely to be used.

Our forefathers, whose wisdom I assert is becoming more evident from day to day, left nothing uncertain in this matter of the element of force—the indispensable element of force in government. It is all there. There is the power on the part of the rickety, humpbacked sheriff riding on a donkey, whom a schoolboy could turn over, to call out the regiment of the county to sustain him. The sheriff can do it; the deputy sheriff can do it; the justice of the peace can do it. There is always the musket and bayonet with the constable and sheriff everywhere, in theory and sometimes in practice. Next above that comes the organized militia of the States, subject, in accordance with the traditions of English law and our constitutions and statutes, to be called out by the chief executive of the State and by the sheriffs of the counties. Next above and outside of that comes the regular Army of the United States, whose place and function are duly provided for in the Constitution. Look at its provisions:

The Congress shall have power to raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

That is Article I, section 8, clause 12. The same article and clause, section 13—

To provide and maintain a navy.

Further—

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

Further—

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

And—

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

This bill is only a part of what ought to be considered and ought to be done. It is merely one of the incidents in the scheme of the proper duties before Congress. The responsibility rests upon this Congress. Take the whole field of national defense and it is a fact that we are not only in a condition lamentable, but in a condition absolutely disgraceful. Excepting only the excellences of our regular Army, which I prize highly, in all other things we have fallen into a condition of "innocuous desuetude" and contempt.

With regard to this matter of the militia, whose creation and government is one of the high duties of this nation, let us see just where we are. Very few, I think, ever read the Federal statutes concerning militia. Every able-bodied citizen between eighteen and forty-five years of age is supposed to be enrolled in the militia. "It is the duty of every captain or commanding officer of a company to enroll every citizen residing within the bounds of his company." The existence of captains in sufficient quantity scattered duly all over the country is presupposed by the statutes. I call the attention of such Senators as are between eighteen and forty-five to the duties imposed upon them in the following section:

Every citizen shall, after notice of his enrollment, be constantly provided with a good musket or firelock of a bore sufficient for balls of the eighteenth part of a pound, a sufficient bayonet and belt, two spare flints, and a knapsack, a pouch with a box therein to contain not less than twenty-four cartridges suited to the bore of his musket or firelock, each cartridge to contain a proper quantity of powder and ball; or with a good rifle, knapsack, shot-pouch and powder-horn, twenty balls suited to the bore of his rifle, and a quarter of a pound of powder; and shall appear, so armed, accoutered, and provided when called out to exercise or into service, except that when called out on company days to exercise only he may appear without a knapsack. And all arms, ammunition, and accouterments so provided and required shall be held exempted from all suits, distresses, executions, or sales, for debt or for the payment of taxes.

Here is a puzzler for most of you:

Each commissioned officer shall be armed with a sword or hanger and spontoon.

If there were a civil-service examination, how many Senators, pray, can tell me what a spontoon is? And yet every officer of the organized militia of the whole eight or nine million people who are to be equipped must have a sword or a spontoon by the existing law. I am not reading from a museum; I am reading from a live statute of the United States, and that statute of 1792 has gone on without revision or correction or attention for now ninety-four years. That is the attention the Federal Government has paid to the militia of the several States, and yet we have been informed here by Senators that the militia will answer all the purposes of the Government, and it is not necessary to have a regular, permanent, organized standing army.

Mr. LOGAN. That statute was revised by a gentleman who did not know a musket from a rifle.

Mr. HAWLEY. It never has been revised; I think the statute never has been touched.

Mr. LOGAN. It is in the revision just as it is there; but I say it was revised by a gentleman who did not know very much about muskets.

Mr. HAWLEY. The revision was rather a compilation. The revisers were absolutely forbidden to change the law. It certainly was never sent to the Committee on Military Affairs for revision.

The militia of the several States, as a general proposition, are practically useless for any immediate purpose. The large majority of the States have not an organized militia at all—one that ought to be called such—have not one that can be called out by regiments, brigades, and divisions. They have scattered independent companies of gentlemen who parade for their own amusement. Not half a dozen States have given this subject respectable attention. New Jersey is one that has; I see I have the attention of the Senator from New Jersey. New York is another. To a very considerable extent it is true of New York, and also of Pennsylvania, and to some extent of Massachusetts. I am nearly at the end of the list.

There remains my own little State, of which I am always proud in everything, which has twenty-five hundred fully equipped soldiers. I can call them soldiers, well drilled, completely provided with knapsacks, blankets, tents, and everything else, all ready to take the train or the field in a few hours. So she equips them, and she pays them respectably. She performs her share of her duty under the Constitution, and it is not for her peace or interest that I am talking here.

Indeed I am not talking with reference to any present condition of affairs whatever, but repeating what I said nine, ten, and twelve years ago when discussing this identical subject; I am simply pleading that a government as great as ours should be in a condition always to command respect from every element of society. It is quite useless, it does not deceive anybody here, it does not deceive anybody anywhere else, to indulge in indiscriminate, fulsome, poetical laudations of the great and glorious American people. I believe in them as heartily as anybody else, and am as proud of them as anybody else; but burst all those bands of society and let these men loose, as for example they were set loose, English and Americans, to a limited extent in Australia or California in the early days of the gold discoveries—let them break away from law, and see what becomes of them. Let it be for half a dozen hours in New York or London or any one of the great centers of what is called civilization that the civil and military powers are helpless, and see how the shameful criminals come out from their holes, and riot reigns; theft, robbery, arson, and murder break loose. Yet these are a part of the glorious people whom we indiscriminately eulogize as faultless.

I do not distrust the majority of the American people, the great mass of honest citizens, the farmers and mechanics, whoever or wherever they are, however organized as Knights of Labor or anything else; but I say let it be supposed that the civil and military power are helpless for a day, and see who breaks out and blasphemes the name of liberty and dishonors the name of the laborer. Honest labor assembled in London some time ago, honestly and honorably, a large mass, to protest in Trafalgar Square against the existing condition of affairs. You can not reason with a man who is starving. At the same time from their holes and alleys came the bad elements. For a time it seemed as if London was helpless; the great capital of the boasted British Empire was helpless in the hands of what were really only a few thousand blackguards and thieves out of four million of citizens. No, sir; if you desire peace, be ready to meet the opposite. It is as true in the case of the riot at home as it is in the case of the foreign enemy.

Mr. TELLER. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but as he referred to the condition of California and other sections, I should like to ask the Senator if he has any knowledge that there was any condition of affairs in that country anywhere at any time that required the use of the regular Army except in time of war?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am very glad of the question. I supposed I was speaking on a matter so well understood that amplification was not needed.

Mr. LOGAN. They had vigilance committees there.

Mr. HAWLEY. Exactly. California, in the absence of duly organized civil society, in the absence of even one company of well-drilled or regular soldiers, found itself in such a condition that the Anglo-Saxon, apparently trampling upon law, but really vindicating society and law, organized himself as a vigilance committee and ornamented the lamp-posts of the city with the villains. That was not a triumph over law. In one sense it was a triumph of law instinctively organizing for its own vindication. But one hundred regular soldiers, call them militia or whatever you please, I mean men accustomed to be soldiers, backing a resolute sheriff, would have dispensed with all that. The wholesome influence of that vigilance committee—alas! that we should ever be obliged to create one—the wholesome influence of that vigilance committee broods over that western coast to this day.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask one question. Does not the Senator think that a very much more wholesome influence was exerted by the action of the people than would have been if that condition of affairs had been put down by the regular Army?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not speaking of the regular Army now. I am speaking of the force which theoretically is always behind the sheriff.

Mr. TELLER. We are speaking of the regular Army.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will come to that by and by.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to suggest that at all times all the people are back of the sheriff.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir; so we are, the babies included; they are behind the sheriff; and the Senator is worth no more than a ten-year old child behind the sheriff as against a resolute, trampling mob. The Senator is not organized, or drilled, or trained. He is not in condition to help the sheriff much. I was speaking of the general element of force. Now I will go further and come to the regular Army. The Constitution of the United States has another clause——

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on application of the Legislature or of the executive (when the Legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

Suppose that a civil war should break out in the great Empire State of New York over some question of State organization purely. It might happen that there should be an army of one hundred thousand on each side conducting war on a large scale, surging over the State, fortifying, assaulting, flanking, advancing, retreating, in desperate war, and the United States Government would be compelled to stand by silent and idle, save in case those forces should in some way interfere with the duties of the United States itself, with its courts, its post-offices, its post-routes, its custom-service, and other public property, &c. The National Government could not interfere otherwise than upon request of the Legislature or of the governor. We are not without examples of that interference and of the necessity of such a call. They have been made within a very few years; our history is dotted with the necessities for them from the whisky insurrection, the Shays rebellion, &c., the railroad riots in Pennsylvania, where a squad of a dozen troops, wearing the uniform of the United States, could march through any mob of rioters that was to be seen. It was the presence of the majesty of the National Government that answered the purpose. Take the riot in 1863 in New York, to which the Senator from Illinois calls my attention, the great draft riots.

Mr. TELLER. That was a state of war.

Mr. HAWLEY. So any riot is a state of war. The presence of United States troops was absolutely indispensable there to the reduction of that disturbance. If it has not been thought necessary within ten years, then the executives of some of our great States have been greatly mistaken—the executive of New York, the executive of Maryland, and others. The using of troops, the calling for them, marching them to the field, all this is lamentable. So is the knife of the surgeon; but if we are to have the possibility of vindicating the laws force must always by within reach of a government.

Now, how shall these internal dissensions in the States be best composed? The President of the United States, in case of trouble like the riots in Pennsylvania, is fully authorized to call out the militia of Pennsylvania. The trouble there happened to be to a large extent local. But suppose the trouble should be political and such as divides every community against itself, of what good would it be for the President to call out the militia of Pennsylvania? One-half would side with one side and the other half with the other side in the unhappy disturbance. Would it be any more efficient to call out the troops of New Jersey or Maryland? How would a mob of Pennsylvanians, no matter how sincere and honest they felt themselves to be—how would a desperate band of Pennsylvanians feel to have New Jersey men marched across the border to put them in order? Every man familiar with these matters knows that whereas that might possibly but add fuel to the fire, the presence of a battalion of five hundred United States troops would, wherever it went, put oil upon the waters and silence the open contention, because all men do bow to force in that form. In many cases they bow to force in the form of the troops of their own State, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, but always to the United States. Therefore we are to perform our duty under the Constitution to maintain a standing force. The States are absolutely forbidden to maintain anything in the nature of a standing army or navy. They can have their militia. That has fallen into practical disuse in four-fifths or five-sixths of the States of this Union. It is not in a really valuable, practical, useful condition in more than four, five, or six States.

But the troops that are permanently such become such a machine, such an absolutely obedient force, so to be wielded that they are virtually invincible in a time of peace; and if this Government should be without such force, if it should dissolve the regular Army, as some men propose, it would be liable to contempt and defiance at any moment and anywhere.

Now shall the Army be more than twenty-five thousand? I thought so. I thought there was no harm in it. I can not imagine any harm or danger in it. I saw nothing in it but the question of expense, and on that I am with the Senator from Illinois. While the actual clothing and food and pay of the soldier do not run over about $300 a year,

I can not conceive it possible that the cost to the Government of that soldier should be $800, as our friend from Kansas said, because all the great centers of the Army remain, whether we have twenty-five or thirty thousand men; all the great prominent posts remain, the War Department continues, the Ordnance Department continues, the Commissary Department continues, West Point continues; all these things remain as they are, and I do not see that a single additional officer is needed. Not one single one more is needed, but simply so many private soldiers are added. How much does that add to the available force? I do not know.

I should not be surprised to find that the generals would tell you that it added 50 per cent. if not 100 per cent. to the practical available force of the Army, because whatever you do—and this I ought to say has been well set forth by the Senator from Illinois—whatever the call for your Army, you must leave a certain number of men here, there, everywhere, in one hundred or one hundred and twenty different posts all over the country, and in some places you might have to leave considerable detachments as a protection for the property of the Government. You can not assemble five thousand men without marching or transporting some of them hundreds or thousands of miles at an expense that would pay ordinary cost for a year of five hundred stationary men.

Officers of the Army have pointed this out to us many a time. We have wasted money all over the West by having our troops scattered in squads of twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, and one hundred and fifty, so that when it became necessary to gather them rapidly the enormous difficulties of transportation made it evident that we were wasting our money by having too few men. It seems often, in contending with the Indians, as if we thought it a sort of chivalrous duty to take no advantage of them by overwhelming numbers. Five hundred men on our side might be able to suppress a rising by actual combat. A thousand men might do it by simply going there, or the knowledge that a thousand men could come would wholly prevent the outbreak.

I think we should have the thirty thousand, because as at present I doubt if we have more than ten thousand, scattered over a space 3,000 miles long by 2,000 miles wide, that could be very well collected. I think it would be well to make that fifteen thousand, which would be an increase of 33 per cent. in available force.

I know that there is nothing to boast of in our history from having a small army. It is but a day in the history of the nation since a foreign enemy marched into this very city, contemptuously burned the Old Capitol, and left a smoking ruin of your Executive Mansion. The wife of the President cut from its frame the picture of George Washington, and escaped with it rolled under her arm. That was our punishment for having no efficient regular Army in 1812, and depending upon the unorganized patriotism of the American people. The militia, brave enough and patriotic enough, who would have made heroes at Vicksburg or Waterloo with six months' discipline, ran like sheep from Bladensburg. What a chapter of eternal disgrace that day gave us! A little army of fifteeen thousand well drilled, resolute men—for there were no braver men, there are no braver men now than there were then—would have prevented all that shame.

The Army is useful otherwise, as has been said here in debate. Our friend the Senator from Maine very properly and justly said that we had a gallant body of capable, honorable, educated soldiers in the graduates of our Academy, officers of the regular Army. That is true, and in case of a war there would come to them those who have gone out of the Army, those who have resigned and gone into civil pursuits, as Sherman and McClellan and scores of others did in the late rebellion; but do not forget that if you have an army of twenty-five thousand private soldiers whose term of service is five years, including men from eighteen to twenty-one or forty-five years of age, it follows that you will have in the United States, either in that army or in private life, fifty, or sixty, or seventy thousand—the life-insurance actuaries would make a good calculation of the number—fifty, sixty, or seventy thousand men who will have served terms in the regular Army. They, as well as the officers of the Army, would be available in case of great necessity; and they would furnish their quota of commissioned as well as non-commissioned officers of a new volunteer army.

There were scores, hundreds, perhaps thousands of line officers, certainly thousands of men in the late war who had been during some portions of their lives private soldiers in the regular Army. Even now, honored and not to be distinguished from any of their comrades in the characteristics of gentlemen and qualified soldiers, there are upon the rolls of the regular Army as commissioned officers a large number of men who were once private soldiers in that Army.

Mr. LOGAN. One of our corps commanders was a private soldier, Jefferson C. Davis.

Mr. HAWLEY. Jefferson C. Davis, of the Union Army, who commanded a corps at one time, was once a private soldier in the regular Army. I recall men, one lately gone to his reward, a mutilated soldier and gallant officer of artillery of the regular Army, who was first a private soldier. I recall another, a lieutenant-colonel in the regular Army now, who was a private soldier in that Army, now raised from the ranks to his present position. A term of five or ten or more years in service would be a substitute for a West Point education to a body of men numbering not less than seventy-five thousand of military age who would furnish gallant officers and brave men in time of need.

I have no fears to liberty from thirty thousand or fifty thousand whose officers depend on the Senate for their commissions, whose officers and soldiers depend on Congress for their bread, who are commanded by a President responsible to the people, and who, if they should be by any revolutionary contingency arrayed, apparently or really, against the liberties of the people, would be driven from sight like the thistle-down before the hurricane. They are our friends. The Army is completely in our hands as the ball in the hands of the player; they are our friends, and defenders, and protectors.

I would call to the Army the best young men from our academies; I would give them the best course of instruction to be found anywhere for the qualification of soldiers and gentlemen. I would require of them the highest standard of personal and professional honor, and the punishment for any violation thereof should be correspondingly severe. Having done these things, then I would give them the honor due to their position; I would treat them with the respect due to the character we compel them to accept and maintain. But I see no reason why a regular Army or Navy should be perpetually the subject of ridicule, the butt of jokes, jeers, contempt, and dissatisfaction, as if it were a burden, a thing wholly unnecessary to us, a curse to the Republic.

I avail myself of the opportunity of this bill to say a word or two upon other related matters. I have remarked that in all things, excepting only the excellence of our little Army, we have fallen into a condition of contempt. So we have. Our coast is practically defenseless except against third or fourth or fifth class ships, such as would not undertake to make an attempt against us. The old 10-inch or 15-inch guns are of some possible service against an unarmored ship, but as against the best weapons and ships of modern warfare the coast is defenseless. Those forts which were an honor to the nation thirty years ago, those coast fortifications which were as good as the world knew, are now useless; for the modern great rifled gun of 8, 10, or 16 inch caliber, throwing shot up to 2,000 pounds, will send a projectile through six walls, backing each other, such as our old forts have; that is to say, through 15, 20, or 30 feet of granite walls. Those forts are but death-traps now. We thought for a few years after the war that the great sand-heaps that could be thrown up in a night were good; but the modern rifle projectile of forged chilled steel, thrown from a rifled gun 30 or 40 feet long—for they make guns of that length now and load them at the breech—will go through a sand embankment 40 feet thick.

So the whole problem of war is changed, and we are found without one single modern forged steel gun in the possession of the Army of the United States for coast defense—not one, saving a few light pieces for light artillery—that is in accordance with modern improvements. We have a great mass of cast-iron guns, good of their kind, in their day in advance of the world in their form and in the excellence of their material, but now antiquated and only good for some fourth or fifth class use.

It is true, as has been said a thousand times, beyond all question true, that our great harbors are at the mercy of any fourth-class power in the world which may choose to quarrel with us. Of course some time or other, after several years of effort, we should get in condition to pay back the debt and proceed, as a Christian nation may, to duly avenge the wrong, but meanwhile we should be at the mercy of our enemy. The port of San Francisco is at the mercy of China. I looked up the statistics of her navy. It is twice as powerful as ours. She has vessels that we can not contend with for a moment. Everybody knows Chili can surpass us in effective and aggressive power. I believe these things will receive attention. They did receive some attention from the last Congress, and I believe they will receive more from this.

I need not dilate on the condition of our Navy. It is true that we have not a second-class ship, perhaps not one of the fourth class in power. Twenty-six years ago our Navy for the size of it stood in the front rank of the world. There were no finer ships than the old frigates of that day, none finer in form, none more effective in battle, none better in speed, beauties of their kind, now ornamental inhabitants of the naval museum. Even the 6-inch rifle, to say nothing of the 8, 10, or 12 or 16-inch long steel rifles—the 6-inch rifle, which throws a hard steel projectile of 100 pounds' weight, will send a shot through one of them from side to side, ay, from stem to stern, for aught I know, unless it should hit one of the old cast-iron guns.

Men talk about the expense of reconstruction. Of course it is expensive. Anything good is expensive. They tell us that there is no war. No; there is not. Also that there is not to be a war for us. I do not know that. I hope not. If we were tolerably well armed I I think there would not be; if we are absolutely defenseless, we invite contempt and insult. It is an old remark, I repeat, that it is the unexpected that always happens. Who prophesied in the early peaceful days of 1870 that within a month Germany would triumphantly cross the Rhine, take fortress after fortress, make Louis Napoleon a prisoner, thunder against Paris, mercifully spare what she chose not to destroy, and tell the French people, "Give us a thousand millions of dollars?" Yet, the day before the news came that the King of Prussia had snubbed the French minister, the optimists doubtless declared that there was not a cloud the size of a man's hand in the whole sky of Europe.

Who in 1858, 1859, and 1860, down to December and up to January, February, and March of 1861, would have dared to say that there were soon to be thundering on this continent a million and a quarter of soldiers upon one side in a great internecine conflict? The prophets of that day told us smooth things as they do now. There is going to be no war, and we are at peace; nobody wants to fight us, and we do not wish to fight anybody! The surest protection against the occurrence of war is to be prepared for war. You do not know what may happen in our own country. I anticipate nothing. I say no more than I have said for twelve or fourteen years, since I first began to come here, objecting to the reduction of the Army to twenty-five thousand men, but simply that the dignity and honor of the Federal Government must be maintained, its high constitutional duties discharged, and its power be respected on every inch of our soil in every second of time.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not suppose anybody doubts that we ought to have coast defenses; I do not suppose anybody doubts that we ought to have a navy; but what has that to do with this bill? The Senator gets up here and tells us that the city of San Francisco is liable to be destroyed by the ships of China. Will the appropriation of five or six million dollars a year to the standing Army, or of half that sum, whichever it may be, have anything to do with the protection of the city of San Francisco? If guns are being made to-day which will go through the ordinary ships from stem to stern, are we making any preparation to meet that kind of an emergency by simply adding to the number of soldiers in the Army of the United States?

If there is any argument to be drawn from the necessity of having these things done, it is that we should not waste our money in putting men into the Army that the committee come here and, with a single exception, declare that they have no use for. Put your money then in guns, as I said the other day. Put the money in coast defenses, things that can not be built in a day, things that are an absolute necessity. If you want an army to meet the unexpected of which the Senator speaks, he does not anticipate that 30,000 men will have anything to do with that kind of a contest. They would disappear in the great number of men who would be called into the field if we had a necessity for an army at all.

We can soon make an army. We can not make guns under two or three years; we can not build coast defenses under two or three years; we can not build a navy under two or three years; and yet nobody brings forward a proposition here to construct coast defenses or to build a navy or to build guns, and when somebody stands on this floor and says you are neglecting the things necessary and doing the things not required, the answer from the Senator from Connecticut is, "Why you want a navy, you want guns, you want coast defenses." Who has raised that issue? Who denies it?

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? He says no one has tried to build guns. We are very forgetful, I know, but before the Military Committee was divested of that power a report of two or three hundred pages was made by it and laid upon the desk of every Senator, and upon that report appropriations were made out of which guns are being cast to-day.

Mr. TELLER. I am not ignorant of that fact.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator said no one had ever proposed that.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to proceed I will explain——

Mr. LOGAN. I will, most certainly, and I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him. But I desire to call his attention to one other point, which is this: He says these defenses can not be built under two or three years. I only suggest to him that they can not be manned, when built, with green soldiers, and that two or three years is necessary to prepare soldiers to be fitted for the use of arms in forts and places of that kind.

Mr. TELLER. I have the authority of the honorable Senator himself, and I know of no higher authority in this body, that there is not any present necessity for this increase of the Army. I have his authority that there is nothing in the future that his keen eye can see which will require the increase of the Army. I understand very well that there has been a weak, lame, impotent attempt to create guns. I am not finding fault with the committee; the committee did its duty. Congress has failed to do its duty. I am not finding fault with the Committee on Naval Affairs. But wherever the fault may lie we are without ships, we are without guns, we are without coast defenses, and this proposition does not in the slightest assist us in our destitution.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I interrupt a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. When I referred to coast defenses I distinctly said I was taking advantage of the opportunity to go on beyond the field of this bill. But the Senator's reproaches—and they are justified by the general condition of affairs—will not apply to me individually. There [exhibiting] is a volume which I spent nearly two years to prepare, which contains the sum and substance, according to the best ability of professional gentlemen, of the progress of modern artillery and ships, a report made a few days ago to the Senate, which has been waiting the completion of a similar report in the House, that has been made within a week past. There are bills pending to provide for the beginning of the construction of such guns as we ought to have. I trust we shall have the Senator's support when the bills get here.

Mr. TELLER. I can say once for all, so that the two distinguished Senators need not think I am making any personal allusion to them, that I do not charge that they have ever failed in their duty in this respect. I do not make any complaint of them. I know with what care the Senator from Connecticut has examined into this question, and I know the valuable information that he has given us and that the Committee on Military Affairs has given us. I am only alluding to the fact that, notwithstanding all that, nothing has been done; and when I say that we do not need any more men in the Army, it is no answer to say we need rifled guns. When I say you do not need to increase the number of men in the regular force, it is no answer to tell me you need a navy.

I did not rise to enter into a general discussion of this bill. I find this bill advocated by one man from one standpoint and another from another. If I can understand the Senator from Connecticut to-day, it is upon the theory that we maintain an Army that it may be used for police purposes. I had not so understood it. I had understood just exactly what the chairman of that committee declared in the opening of this debate, that it was but a skeleton, around which was to rally in time of trouble not the regular soldier but the citizen, who was to be made a citizen-soldier for the time being, to rally as the citizens did rally in 1861 and subsequent thereto when called upon by the General Government to defend the integrity of the nation. I do not understand that anybody could be found who would stand on this floor and advocate a standing army to meet such emergencies as the Senator from Connecticut suggests may occur when he refers to the contest between France and Germany. If we are to have a great war, it is to be fought by citizen-soldiery and not by regulars; it is to be fought by the men who are cultivating the fields and who are working in the shops. It is not to be fought by men who enlist for five years' regular service in the Army of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Colorado will pause, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes. If there be no objection the pending business will be proceeded with, the unfinished business being laid aside informally.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; let the unfinished business be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor on the Army bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I do not want in any manner to approve the suggestion, and I do not mean to lose an opportunity to enter my protest against the suggestion, that the police of this country is to consist of the standing Army. I bring no accusation against the committee for proposing this bill for that purpose, for they have disclaimed it from the beginning.

The honorable Senator from Connecticut alluded to the condition of affairs in California in early times, and he said that if there had been a company of troops there stationed there would have been no vigilance committee, and then he turns around and tells us that the beneficial effect of the vigilance committee has lasted from that day until now. Does the honorable Senator believe that if there had been a company or a regiment of troops who would have compelled quiet and order and observance of law within the State of California at that early period its influence would have followed down till to-day? Does he not know that it was because it was public opinion in California that compelled observance of the law that it has had its continual effect? Does he not recognize the fact that public opinion is stronger than the bayonet and worth infinitely more in every community than the bayonet?

It will be a sorry time for the people of the United States when they shall depend upon the National Government for the maintenance of peace within the borders of the States. It will be practically the end of republican institutions. I tell the Senator from Connecticut to-day that when the time comes that the Government shall call upon the regular troops, if the people are against troops, the troops will soon get with the people, and there will be an end of all government. You must maintain your government by the consent and approval and approbation of the people, and that only. When you call upon a man's neighbor to put him down if he goes into a riot, then he is held in check; when you call upon the people of a community to come out to enforce a law, then everybody will respect the law; but when you call upon foreign aid, when you call upon outside influences, then the people will not respect the law, and they will not observe the law.

It has been my fortune to see something of the turbulent communities of which the Senator speaks. I have never seen the United States Army employed for police purposes in the West. In the excitement growing out of great numbers of people from all portions of the country getting together, unacquainted with each other, having diverse and different ideas and interests, I have never yet seen the American Army called upon, nor have I seen the hour in which it was needed.

The people of the Great West are not asking for any army. I do not believe it is needed anywhere; and if the people of Connecticut are not ready to go out and do their duty when the humpbacked sheriff, as the Senator terms him, calls upon them, there is something at least of the decay of the spirit of liberty in Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said that we had the best organized militia in the Union.

Mr. TELLER. We do not depend upon the militia. It is the posse comitatus that stands back of the sheriff.

Mr. HAWLEY. The militia——

Mr. TELLER. It is the posse comitatus, which means every merchant and every farmer and every mechanic in the community, if necessity there be, unorganized or organized as they may be.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to say that the militia is nothing but an organized posse comitatus. That is the theory, the practice, the sense, the law; and the posse comitatus as the Senator describes it is worth as much as a last year's bird's nest.

Mr. TELLER. I beg the Senator's pardon; the posse comitatus is not a military organization, and never was in Great Britain or this country. The honorable Senator says that the Senator from Colorado would be useless as a member of a posse comitatus. I have seen my superiors in every department of life as a posse comitatus back of a sheriff, and I have been there myself. When you forget that every man is bound by law and bound by the obligation that he owes to himself and to his country to be a part and a parcel of the posse comitatus, if called upon by the sheriff, then you have entered on a period of decay of republican institutions. You do not want an army; you want the people with public opinion back of the officer who enforces the law; and I regret that I should hear in the American Senate the suggestion that we want a standing army to put down the people when they shall rise against either fancied or real grievances. It is the people themselves who must maintain the law; and I am glad that the distinguished Senator from Illinois declared over and over again (and I acquit him of any such suggestion) that he wants the Army for this purpose. It would have been disturbing to me if the committee had come here with such a suggestion; and I regret, I repeat, that anybody should suggest it, or that it should receive countenance upon the floor of the American Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not hear what the Senator referred to.

Mr. TELLER. I referred to the fact that you want the Army for police purposes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not remember saying it myself. I do not know that you refer to me, but I did not say it.

Mr. TELLER. If the honorable Senator did not say it, then his whole argument went for naught. It has been said here once before, it has been hinted at by others, and I say that you do not need an army for that purpose. It is contrary to republican institutions; it is contrary to the genius of our Government; and the quicker we get rid of the idea that we are to call in the hour of distress and disturbance upon the General Government, and the sooner the people learn as they have learned and continue to believe as they have believed, that it is their duty to put down insurrection, riot, and disturbance, not with the strong military arm of the law, but by the people who are interested in the preservation of order and the preservation of property and the continuance of liberty in this land, the better it will be for them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish a few moments in which to say some things suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Colorado.

I do not thank the Senator for endeavoring to put me in the wrong in this matter, and to array against me the prejudice of demagogues. He has done it. He has tried to make it appear that I wish the Federal Army used as police—he has used the expression—to put down the will of the people. I said nothing which justifies that. There are tens of thousands of people who would look upon me as the enemy of liberty if he said the truth when he said that; and they would have a right to do so. I said nothing of the kind.

I pointed him to the Constitution, which makes it the imperative duty of the President of the United States to use military force to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, and put down domestic violence upon the call of the executive of a State when the Legislature can not be convened; that is all. I pointed to what every text-book upon political science and every writer upon moral science says. I pointed to the necessity of an ultimate force in human government as in Divine government to back every law and injunction, whether of human or Divine law. I am dealing in generalities here. I am dealing with the constitutions and statutes of the United States and the several States.

These all provide for the use of military power in cases of necessity, in absolute and continual subjection to the civil power. That is all of it; and there is no use in trying to prejudice a brother Senator or to stir the prejudices of demagogues by asserting anything to the contrary. I am not such a coward as to refuse to say to any man in the United States wherever he may be that he has to obey the laws of his country and of his State, and that he disobeys them at the risk of his life. Of course I intend to say that.

I do not mean that the Federal Army is to hang around at the service of any sheriff or marshal. I propose that they shall stay where they belong and wait until they are called upon to act under the Constitution, as they have been doing. At the proper time it is merciful to employ them, it is just to the tormentors of the people to employ them, it is good for the people who are suffering to employ them, as Mr. Powderly himself, chief of the Knights of Labor, would himself employ them in accordance with his own constitution in putting down the thieves and scoundrels who are blaspheming the name of labor; for I consider that he has exhibited more conservatism and good judgment than some men who have been praising him.

Do not let this one body in this country stand here a coward in the face of any question whatever. This is one place where a man ought to speak of his duty to the Constitution and the laws of the country. There is no man among you, either here or elsewhere, who would hold either a State or a Federal army more rigidly to its duty as the mere tool and instrument of civil power than I would, keeping the Federal Army where it belongs until necessity calls for it.

Mr. TELLER. I did not intend to say anything unfair toward the Senator from Connecticut. I understood the Senator to insist upon having a large army because of its usefulness in the case that I mentioned. He alluded to the fact that if there had been an army at San Francisco its value would have been very great. If he disclaims any such purpose in the use of the Army, then I will disclaim any intention to refer to him at all, and let my remarks go as general remarks on that subject. If he did not mean that, I simply misunderstood him, and that is all.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not understand the Senator as intending to be unjust to me; but the inference of his remarks was that I had been asserting what both he and I know would be justly exceptional to the people of the whole country.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I rose to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. He insisted that this army was needed for the purpose of wrestling with those who came out of their holes, as I think he characterized it, but disclaimed that it was by any possibility to be used as against the interest of labor. I desired to ask him in that connection, as he mentioned the Knights of Labor several times in his remarks, whether at any time they had petitioned this body for an increase of the Army. They have been for the last few weeks to a great extent asking what they desired, and I wish to ask whether any intimation had come from them in any petition that they desire this proposed increase.

I have been somewhat surprised by the arguments used more than on account of the proposed increase itself. We have been told that it was to guard against the Indians upon our border; and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. DAWES] protests against the assertion that the Indians now need it. The senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] spoke about the commune, and the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], as I understood him, said that the Army should be used for police purposes.

I desired further to ask him in that connection if he or the people whom he represents have always entertained that sentiment in regard to the regular Army. The Senator's proposition is great allegiance to the Constitution and to the civil laws of this nation, whatever they may be. Sacredness for civil polity, sacredness for law, supreme regard to the Constitution are modified by time and by surrounding circumstances. I would like that Senator to have gone back in his memory thirty years when he found the United States Army doing police duty on the soil of Massachusetts. I desired to ask him in his sacred regard for the supremacy of the law and the obligations of the Constitution whether thirty years ago when the United States Army surrounded the State-House in Boston to prevent a fleeing fugitive to make good his escape to the free soil of Canada what were the Senator's notions then about the sacredness of the law and the obligations of the Constitution.

Mr. HAWLEY entered the Chamber.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was appealing to my friend the Senator from Connecticut, and if he will allow me to repeat, I call his attention to what he said as to the necessity of an army to preserve the public peace. The Senator from Colorado referred to police duty, and then the Senator from Connecticut followed that up by declaring the sacredness of his regard for the protection of the law, for the observance of the Constitution. I said that the ideas of sacredness to the law and obligations of the Constitution changed by changing circumstances and lapse of years; and then I referred to the fact and desired to ask the Senator not so much as to his own sentiments as to the enlightened Christian public sentiment in New England, including the State he now so ably represents, whether when years ago the United States troops under a United States officer, for whom to-day he claims to have the highest regard and sympathy, under the Stars and Stripes surrounded the State-House in Boston, when the object was to protect a fugitive slave and suffer him to escape to the free soil of Canada, the sentiments in New England were the same then that they are to-day?

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator want me to answer?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I propounded the inquiry to the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have only to inform the Senator that New England has changed within twenty-six years.

Mr. VAN WYCK. So I said.

Mr. HAWLEY. But I will answer a little more at length. I thought that the fugitive-slave law was unconstitutional.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely.

Mr. HAWLEY. The officers of the United States Government who were executing it in Boston thought it was constitutional. They had sworn to support the Constitution and laws, and they were endeavoring to perform their duty. I differed with them, as I say, with regard to the constitutionality of the law, but they were bound to do their duty as they understood it. They were simply the instrument of the National Government for the execution of its laws. In the due course of time, by whatever whirligigs and revenges, that has been changed, and it is no longer required; but the successors of those same United States troops and the successors of those United States marshals will be found very willing to execute any other Federal law that may come in question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator said he wanted the United States troops to help the civil authorities to enforce the law. So he said. He has spoken correctly. The world knows the sentiments of New England. The world knows the sentiment of the Christian people, the educated liberal-minded people of this Union when they denounced the exercise of Federal power in the streets of Boston. You ask for the execution of the law. They were executing it. Your people denounced the execution of the law, and Anthony Burns was a violator of the law. As the law then was he violated the laws of his own State in escaping from bondage. He violated the Constitution of the United States when he sought to reach Canada over the soil of Massachusetts. You believed the law wrong. So did I. You believed the law unconstitutional. So did I. As I believed then I believe to-day. As I believed then about the Army of the United States, so I believe now.

The Senator says there has been a change in this country. Then a dominant power governed the United States Army, small as it was. Under the protection of the United States flag they thrust that United States Army across the track of the fleeing fugitive who was seeking to escape from his taskmaster, and rejoice himself in the liberty which this Republic denied him. That was the mission of your United States Army then. As I protested then I protest to-day. When men come here and tell us about the commune, and speak of domestic troubles that may require a larger army, I want to protest now, as I protested then, that that picture shall never be presented again of public disgrace as it was by that use of the United States Army under the flag of the nation, that that Army shall never be allowed to thrust itself against the advance of the free white American laborer in any attempt he may make to have justice done to him and those who have toiled and labored with him. My position then was as my position is to-day.

That is the sequel of this whole matter. Jay Gould and his confederates, Vanderbilt and his confederates, have been allowed to steal millions. Just as your Constitution once allowed a portion of this country to steal from a black man his birthright to liberty, so you have raised another class of slaveholders just as unrelenting, just as unreasonable, just as exacting, and steeled against the instincts of humanity a little worse than the old slaveholders were. That is our attitude to-day.

Gentlemen speak of the commune, and yet in the next breath they say to us that labor has no sympathy with the commune; the Knights of Labor have no sympathy with it. Then they will take care of the commune. That is the safest power to do it. They will handle it. But you want what? You want to use the Army, do you, as the slaveholders of old did? Jay Gould and his confederates and Vanderbilt and his confederates with their stolen millions——

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no feeling about this. I introduced this bill and I reported it. It is the fourth time that the same bill has been introduced. It has been introduced for years at different sessions of Congress. Now, when a Senator gets up here and states that on account of Jay Gould or Vanderbilt this bill was introduced, it is beneath the dignity of any man; it is a species of demagogism that no man should stoop so low as to resort to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is that all? [Laughter.]

Mr. LOGAN. That is all, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The same old argument. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the Chair). The Senator from Nebraska will suspend his remarks. It is the duty of the Chair to call the attention of those in the galleries to the fact that the rules of the Senate absolutely prohibit any marks of approbation or disapprobation. If that rule is not strictly obeyed the galleries will be cleared. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What occurred twenty-five years ago? I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois, for I think in that controversy the Senator did not make himself obnoxious to the charge of demagogism, as he was not then denouncing the aggressions of slavery. I refer to the period before the war in the United States Senate and in the other House when men were denouncing the action of the United States Army, which it was alleged was being used for the protection of slave labor in the South. That was charged not only by gentlemen from the South, but by a certain class of their sympathizers in the North who stigmatized those who opposed them as demagogues. Demagogues, indeed! The same old argument again.

Now I have nothing particular to say about this bill. I was only speaking of the arguments that were used for it—the Indians to frighten on the one hand in the West, and the commune on the other in the East, as the other Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] said, waving the red flag. I have spoken incidentally of some facts. Certainly the bill says nothing about Jay Gould; neither does it say anything about Vanderbilt. I am aware of that; but I was illustrating, as I supposed I had a right to do. When these gentleman talk about the police duty of the Army, I thought I had a right to go back twenty-five or thirty years and show that it did police duty then. The slaveholders and their allies in the North wanted it then. The Supreme Court, for which my friend has so much regard, decided then that the fugitive-slave law was constitutional; but Almighty God did not, as He showed in the thunders of battle and the shouts of victory.

Now the positions are the same, but the Senator says New England has changed. Undoubtedly they then believed the Army was dangerous to those seeking liberty. It may be now or hereafter dangerous to white freemen, who were conceded more rights in this great Republic than the black man had in the days of slavery.

If the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] pictured any necessity, what was it? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says there is no cause of alarm from the Indians. Then why this increase except in view of the other trouble with railroads or strikers? You impeded the fugitive before the war by the Army. This addition to the Army is not to be used against labor-strikers, says the Senator from Illinois. Oh, no, not by any means. Nobody contends that. But why the necessity of the increase? I show it is not for the Indian and not for the white man. The Senator from Connecticut says there is danger from China; that China has a navy double our own. Does he believe for a moment should the Chinese navy start to-morrow for San Francisco, and if the winds and waves allow her vessels to reach that port, that a single Chinese soldier would be allowed to land on the Pacific coast? Without an increase in the Army, without even the skeleton we have, the citizens of that coast would meet and bury them in the sea.

What next? We are not dignified in the eyes of the world. Indeed! Will the nations of Europe attack us? Not as long as they can read the English language, not as long as they have memories, not as long as the nations of the earth across the water remember the history of our rebellion—remember that the great North sprang to arms without any regard to her skeleton army, that the South sprang to arms without even a skeleton of an army to gather around unless it was some United States officers who deserted from the flag and aided to organize their troops. That was all they had. It was the merest kind of a skeleton; and yet that was the position of this great Republic in the face of this awful danger and we marched on, and the sun never shone upon a mightier, braver host than were combined into mighty armies. Why talk about danger to the United States having to meet any nation of Europe that may be induced to cross the ocean and lock horns with this great American Republic?

I merely rose to say what I have to meet the arguments and reasons which have been used in defense of this proposed addition of five thousand men to the Army of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, it is seldom that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] misses an opportunity to make mischief. He seldom makes it. He never fails to try. If there be a disturbing element, if there be a doubtful question, if there be a misapprehension or a dread anywhere, he hovers over it and exaggerates it and makes himself the prophet and champion thereof, attacking the motives and the character of every gentleman in the country with whom he differs. He may always be trusted to appear at precisely the wrong time, saying the precisely unjust thing. I must trespass a little upon the attention of the Senate just now under the sort of provocation that the Senator has given me.

I wish he had spoken even a little more plainly, but I will translate his insinuations and give them a courage that he has not given them. His insinuation is that I am an enemy of the organized attempts of labor to benefit itself. His insinuation is that I would hold the Army of the United States to put down the struggling laborer. That is true, is it not? My whole audience says I am truly interpreting what he said.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no.

Mr. HAWLEY. With one exception—the Senator himself—everybody agrees that I am truly interpreting him. He says here that the strikers are imitating the example of poor Anthony Burns who started for Canada running away from slavery. The strikers do not say that for themselves. But their superserviceable friend, who is their worst enemy in the United States, says that for them. The strikers are American citizens twenty-one years of age and upward and voters. They comprehend that whatever the people will this nation in its laws to be it will be. The ballot-box is open to them; the choice of candidates is open to them. If they like no man of the three or four that are up they can put up another, take to the stump, to the forum, the resolution, the address, all the lawful methods of agitation known to and open to all men in the Republic and guaranteed by the Constitution. If their cause be just they will compel a majority, for never since the world began were sixty millions of people gathered together anywhere or to be collected from the world that surpass this American people in its instinctive sympathy with whatever is just and generous to any man and all men.

Against a race prejudice, against the prejudices, the deep incrusted prejudices of centuries, men who hated the face of a negro and would not have him near them, were led into and plunged into a great war and carried it on for four years, disguise it as you please, the substantial purpose of it all being to make it true that there should not be a slave upon the soil of this continent. Whoever has a just political cause knows where to find his remedy.

I will not prophesy. For no office and no chance of office and no chance of misapprehension will I lie to the Knight of Labor or anybody else, nor will I permit myself to be lied about. I believe that the existing condition of affairs over the whole civilized world is to result in an enormous advance in the condition of the great mass of laboring men. I looked the other day upon a horseshoe-machine that struck out seven thousand two hundred a day, when the old blacksmith could make a score or two, perhaps. How many men did that displace? You have all looked upon the sewing-machine. How many women did that displace? Go through the whole list of marvelous inventions that apparently have displaced the whole body of working people, one fifty thousand, another five hundred thousand, and what is the upshot of it all? Horseshoes cheap, clothing cheap.

Wherever the line of invention has run the product is made cheaper and cheaper. The laboring man in the United States to-day on an average in all the branches of manufacture can buy more of his own product for a day's work than he could have bought twenty or thirty years ago. The man in the carpet-mill can buy more yards of carpet with a week's work in the mill than he could have bought thirty years ago. That I have verified from the record. So in scores of other cases.

There has resulted a marvelous change in productive power due to uncounted improvements, including the telephone, the telegraph, the Bessemer rail, and its swifter and cheaper transportation, due to the possibility of transferring a hundred million dollars from New York to London by cable, making it available there in an hour; yes, of transferring it to China in like manner, welding and wielding the capital and labor of the world in one mass. We have cause enough for the enormous uproar and disturbance, the trembling of the whole industrial earth. But let us be patient and just with each other. Do not be impatient with the agitating or the striking laboring man. Wait; God lives yet. Out of all this will come a more prosperous laboring man, with a better division of all the products of labor and a just and peaceable and honorable relation between capital and labor. It is not to be brought about by machine legislation of any kind.

Legislation may be an adjunct in some things; but this is the only universal solvent of these troubles—something like a Christian faith and justice in and toward each other. When the capitalist shall live near to and with and among all his laborers; when he shall acknowledge their right to a practical co-operation by his ready offer to advance wages when the mills will afford it, and by his simple request to them to let wages be lowered when the mills can not afford to pay so much—that spirit and that relation between them will bring about a settlement. I can name the places and describe the men who for generations have never had one single whisper of quarrel between themselves and their operatives.

When business permits they advance to offer an increase; when business is lingering and dragging, rather than close the factories or reduce the hours they say, "We think you ought to take a little lower wages; can you reduce?" It is a matter of mutual and friendly consultation. So are the readjustments to be settled. Sometimes there are not such capitalists; but can you regenerate men by statute? There are times when I would be with the laboring man for a strike and I would strike to the end of the contest. I would not work sixteen hours a day for any man with half an hour for my dinner. I would strike; I would organize; I would work for a better day, but I would not permit the thieves of the city of New York to rush out when I was striking to destroy the property of the company from which I expected to get my living; and if the sheriff could not do anything with them, if they were too strong for him and too strong for the police, I would have the sheriff do what I saw done in New York once myself, call out the old Seventh Regiment and shoot the defiant wrongdoers down if they could not be made to yield in any way. I would do that for the sake of the laborers themselves, and I would tell the laborers to-day just as I am telling it to you. You can not deceive them by any other kind of talk. There is no use in the Senators tempting them, and I warn them against the worst enemies they have on the footstool, the men who indulge in the sort of conversation we have had here to-day from the Senator from Nebraska. That is all, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I welcome the Senator from Connecticut as an ally to the cause of labor. I rejoice that he has made this declaration that he himself would strike. He said it with emphasis and with a clenched fist, that he would strike before he would work sixteen hours a day. The Senator has been in this city many years. That abuse of which he spoke exists. A few days ago I alluded to the fact that three corporations of this city, the gas company, the street railroads, and the national banks, as owning and controlling the Congress of the United States. That Congress held two hundred thousand people by the throat, pinning their arms to their sides, and suffering these corporations to plunder that people.

The Senator says he would strike. He need not strike. He can help the men who have been patient under these exactions which he denounced as the slaves and more so, for they have been treated worse than the slaves. For five years your railroad corporations here, more brutal than any slaveholder or slavedriver, have required sixteen hours service of men in their employ. They have had men, married men, who day after day and week after week have never seen their wives in daylight or their children when awake. This has occurred in your beautiful capital city! The model city! In Heaven's name remedy it. Where is your regular Army? These corporations are the men who are striking against the peace, the prosperity, the happiness of those who have to work sixteen hours a day. Go to the foot of Capitol Hill and see the half-orphan boys whose fathers were killed in the war and their mothers sewing for a few pennies a day, who are required by these brutal corporations to work sixteen hours a day.

The Senator says he would strike, and yet these men have been struck. Your corporations have done this. Am I to be censured as a demagogue for naming them? I have arraigned them on this floor. I expect hereafter to have the help of the Senator from Connecticut; he has proffered it to-day. Strike down these corporations, shall we? Strike them down to the extent of making them do justice and not require sixteen hours of labor which my friend denounces.

The other Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in his remarks said:

I want to say one thing. There is domestic danger in this country which justifies the maintenance of troops.

He says that there is domestic danger. Where? His colleague, the other Senator, says there is domestic danger in this country "which justifies the maintenance of troops."

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator read what I did say? Will he read the whole paragragh?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well.

There is domestic danger in this country, which justifies the maintenance of troops. It does not arise from the honest industrial classes of the country; it does not arise from any bodies of laborers associated together for their own benefit and to better their condition. There is no danger to be apprehended from them. They have interests to be protected. But the danger does arise from those that have come here from foreign countries with no good intention toward the American Government, toward our form of government, or toward our social order—men who raise the red flag of the commune, and who assert that their object is revolution, and that the result aimed at by them is to be accomplished by bloodshed and the destruction of property.

He says there is danger. I ask has not that danger been met and passed? Not by standing armies; no, the American people object to that feature. The American laborer and citizen has already protected our country from that danger and they will in the future. Why the necessity for an increase of the regular Army when the danger if it existed has come and gone, and if it exists to-day it is no greater than before?

I understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] desires to say a few words in reply before the expiration of the time fixed for a vote. Therefore, I yield the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say but a few words, not by way of discussion as far as the merits of the bill are concerned, but in response to matters which have been thrown in entirely irrelevant to the question before the Senate.

The very remarkable speech of the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is of a character that I will not say might be expected of him, but it sometimes does occur that such remarks fall from the lips of men in places where perhaps they are unseemly.

The argument that has been made against the second section of this bill, the insinuation that there is something behind it, is most remarkable to me, when I have said over and over again that the same bill has been before the Senate at every session of Congress for a number of years, and recommended by every leading officer of the Army and every Secretary of War for years past. I must confess that I did not know until now that anything that I had connection with brought with it so great importance as to have the character of raid made that has been made within the Senate Chamber; and I say now to our friends on the other side of the Chamber—and I certainly have nothing but kindness for them in reference to the manner in which this bill has been debated on their side—that they need have no further trouble during the administration of affairs in this country. The cares of state have fallen upon other shoulders than ours. We were told by the able Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] yesterday evening—and I hope I shall not quote him incorrectly—that the President of the United States had sent no message to this Congress asking for this. I believe that is substantially what he said—he admits it—and that we ought not to crowd upon the administration this character of expense in order to embarrass it. I believe that is what the Senator said, or very nearly, was it not? If not, I will ask him to correct me.

Now, sir, the Senator from Maine being the leader in the opposition to this bill, from his remark in reference to our embarrassing the present administration that we on this side should give thought and reflection to, I can only say that he and his followers are sufficient in ability, in strength, in eloquence, in logic, to protect the administration now in power without your assistance except your votes. I had no idea of embarrassing the administration or of embarrassing any one. Neither had the committee that reported this bill; and when I find the silence running through that side of the Hall and hear the thundering on this side of the Chamber against this bill and the allusions made that have been made this morning that the interests of Jay Gould and others were at the bottom of this, I can, to some extent, understand this combination and what it means.

I have no allusion to make so far as Jay Gould or any other man is concerned. He has no connection with this bill directly or indirectly, nor has any man outside of this Chamber except the people of this great American nation. It is for their benefit, rich and poor, black and white, and not for the benefit of any individual; and the insinuation, come from where it may, upon that point was unwarranted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator is entirely mistaken in his quotation. I never said that Jay Gould or any other man was at the bottom of the bill. I spoke of what the consequence would be and of the purposes for which it would be used.

Mr. LOGAN. Why then was the name used in connection with the argument about the recent disturbances but to create prejudice against those who champion or advocate this bill? Sir, I stand always here or elsewhere upon that justice which the American people deal out to the honest and conscientious performance of duty. There is no terror to me in the insinuations that are made in reference to what meaning there is in this or any other bill that I may advocate. I have always had the nerve, and I hope God has given me the honesty, to advocate that which I believe to be right and oppose that which I believe to be wrong. I have never lived by drinking the soup that falls from the lips of demagogues. I hope to God I never may. If there is anything detestable in the sight of an honest, true, and just man it is he who flaunts around the world as a demagogue and lives upon flattering those who do not understand him.

Sir, when I say that this bill is for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the Army, I say all that there is contained in it or connected with it. When I say that I have advocated this bill and opposed the reduction of the Army when it was reduced from thirty thousand to twenty-five thousand, I state what is the fact. When I say that I always opposed that reduction and have ever been in favor of changing it back to the thirty thousand, the peace establishment as agreed upon in 1870, I state what every man in this Chamber who has served with me that length of time knows to be true. I have always opposed the reduction and always advocated the restoring of the Army to the peace establishment for the benefit of the Army and for the benefit of the country, without reference to any individual, any class of people, corporations or otherwise, but for the purpose I have asserted time and again, of performing my duty to this country, and reorganizing the Army upon a basis just and better than it has been heretofore since the reduction.

Gentlemen talk about relying upon the people. That is correct; it is upon them we do rely; but at the same time in advance of their organization into military bodies in time of trouble you must have an organization to form the skirmish line, in the advance, in the lead, that you may perfect the forces that you need when you wish to organize armies of greater size. There is not a government on earth that does not pursue this policy. Even feeble Mexico by our side, poor as she is, at this very day has an army far surpassing ours in strength and in efficiency, not in bravery, not in energy, not in patriotism, but in organization. It is that to which I have referred all the time in regard to this bill; it is the organization of the Army of the United States that we desire to perfect, which can not be done save by increasing the number of soldiers, that your companies and regiments may at least have some efficiency and some strength and some force and some appearance as well connected with the Army.

Now, Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senate for having said this much. It was called forth by what the Senator from Nebraska said. If he did not mean it, I have no right to criticise him, nor do I; but I did so understand him, and, so understanding him, I deemed it proper to respond to his remarks.

Now, sir, 3 o'clock having arrived, the time agreed upon by the Senate yesterday when the vote should be taken on the bill, I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to strike out section 2.

Mr. HALE. Let that section be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the number of enlisted men in the Army, including an engineer battalion of five hundred and twenty men, hostital stewards, and one thousand Indian scouts, be, and hereby is, established as a force not to exceed thirty thousand men.

Mr. LOGAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). Upon this amendment and the bill generally I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON], who is detained from the Senate by illness in his family. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I understand he would vote "nay."

Mr. JACKSON (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is detained from the Senate to-day by sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea;" the Senator from Vermont would vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). I understood that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was paired with my colleague [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. JACKSON. No, sir; with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] came to my seat a moment before he left the Senate Chamber and wished me, if his colleague failed to announce it, to announce a pair with my colleague.

Mr. JACKSON. I will pair with the Senator's colleague, and that will arrange the matter.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I do not know how he would vote, but if he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. PIKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I am not aware how he would vote on this question. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when Mr. VEST'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VEST] is detained from the Senate Chamber by illness, and is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea." I do not know how the Senator from Illinois would vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Beck,	Coke,	Ingalls,	Teller,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Bowen,	Conger,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Call,	Eustis,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	Gibson,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Sherman,

NAYS—22.

Blair,	Frye,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Gorman,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Gray,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa,
Dolph,	Logan,	Platt,
Evarts,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,
Allison,	Hampton,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Harris,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Butler,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Camden,	Hoar,	Miller,	Stanford,
Cullom,	Jackson,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vance,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Morgan,	Vest,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out section 4 of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That officers of the Army stationed at military posts apart from settlements may, with the approval of the department commander, each employ one private soldier as a servant: Provided, That the consent of such soldier shall be first procured, and that the sum of $20 per month during the period of such employment shall be charged against the officer employing him.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senate having voted to increase the Army by five thousand men upon some supposed necessity for that addition to the present Army establishment, I desire that the men who enlist shall be soldiers and not servants. The Senate having by that vote also determined to increase the expense of the present establishment about $4,000,000 a year, I hope the Senate will not at the same time vote to add to the pay or the emoluments of the official part of the Army, leaving the taxpayer to labor under as many fetters as he possibly may, but will seek to make the expense of this establishment as small as possible consistent with its efficiency.

There can be no suggestion or hint—certainly no one has yet made any positive assertion—that any of the terms of this bill which create additional expense, except that providing for the increase of the number of enlisted men, adds in the slightest degree to the efficiency of the Army. It is simply a proposition to donate, if I may use that term, that much more to those who I think are well enough paid now, and who I do not think have ever had even the assurance to ask for anything to be added to their already ample compensation.

In order, therefore, that we may have as much benefit as possible by the addition of the enlisted men proposed to the Army as soldiers, and in order that they may not be used as servants, and in order that the Government may not be burdened with the payment of a large number of men at a very high price while renting them out to officers at a very low price, I hope this section will be stricken out.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to explain, if the Senate will give me their attention, exactly the intention of the committee. There never has been a time in any army that I have read of when the officers were not permitted to have persons to act as cooks and to attend to the necessary things that pertain to every one. At the outposts it is almost impossible to employ persons to do service for the officers. This provision has been asked for very often by officers; they have complained of the existing condition. At the time of the reorganization of the Army the principle existed that an officer should certify that he had one or two servants, or as many as the law allowed him—some were entitled to three or four, if they had rank enough. We abolished that in the law reorganizing the Army, so that since that time officers have had to employ their servants. As I have said, out on the frontier, at the outposts, it is impossible to do it. So they have soldiers to perform that work; but it is done in violation of law. We thought it was better to have these things done in accordance with law.

The Senator, I think, is mistaken when he says this is another burden on the Government, because the officer pays to the Government $20 a month for the soldier detailed as a servant. The Government pays the soldier now $13 a month, and under this bill it will be $16 a month. The officer pays the Government $4 additional. His clothing costs $3. He will get his rations anyhow. He performs part of his duty and the Government receives $20 a month. That is the object of the section. I think it is absolutely necessary. I could name many of the posts, and in traveling around them I have found officers where there were two or three companies, all messing together, the commanding officer and all. They were all forced to mess together in order to get some person to do their cooking. It was impossible to employ servants, and so they would take a soldier, take him from duty, the Government paying him, and they use the soldier, so that the Government loses the service of the soldier and his pay, too. So we concluded if the Government lost the service and got the pay of the soldier, it would be a benefit and saving to the Government. It is impossible, and there is not a Senator here who would ask, that an officer getting $1,400 a year, a lieutenant for instance, with a family, away out on the frontier, should do his own cooking, do his own house-work. Nobody would ask him to do that. Hence the officers take soldiers to do it, and the Government pays the soldiers.

Now, we propose where an officer takes a soldier to do this service that the Government shall receive pay from the officer for the service of the soldier, and this can not be done except at frontier posts. Why? In a city like Washington the officers employ servants. The Senator is mistaken if he thinks they will get men everywhere as servants. This is to be done with the approval of the commanding officer. What commanding officer? The commanding officer of the department. The commanding officer of a department is a general officer. Do you suppose any general officer of the Army would certify where an officer lived in a town or a city that it was necessary for him to have a soldier as a cook? Of course he would not. He would only certify to those who were at outposts and where they could not get servants. That is the provision of the section. So there will only be few employed, and they will be at the outposts.

I think this is in the line of economy and saving to the Government, because the Government, as I said, receives $4 more per month than the soldier would receive, and his service is gone anyway.

That is all I desire to say in regard to it.

Mr. PLUMB. We have heard a good deal said about the honor of the Army officers, and yet here is the Senator, who has stood before in their behalf, saying now that they habitually violate section 1232 of the Revised Statutes, which has been a part of the code governing the Army ever since there was an Army.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me. He knows it to be a fact that when he was in the service himself the officers on their pay-roll certified to their having servants. He knows that to be true. In many cases they did not have them, yet they made the certificate. That was in violation of law, but it was to get the pay that they were allowed by law. Of course the officers violate the law; I agree to that; but it is a necessity upon them, unless they do their own cooking. They do this; you would do it; there is not a Senator here who would not do the same thing if he was in the Army to-day. He would take a soldier to do his cooking before he would do it himself if he had to perform his other duties, provided the soldier was willing to do it. They all do it at frontier posts. This prevents that evasion of law and saves the Government expense.

Mr. PLUMB. That does not make it any better. Section 1232 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

No officer shall use an enlisted man as a servant in any case whatever.

And yet according to the statement of the Senator from Illinois the officers do habitually violate that provision of law. If they violate that provision of law without exception of rank whenever it is convenient for them to do so, where is the warrant that they will not violate the provision of this law, which apparently limits the employment of servants to posts which are remote from settlements? The manner in which it would be evaded is very obvious. An officer to-day is somewhere on the frontier. The department commander certifies that he may employ a soldier as a servant. He employs that soldier as a servant. He enlists somewhere. He will enlist a man who will enlist for the purpose of becoming a servant, because he can get more pay as a soldier than he can possibly get as a servant. Being enlisted, he is employed then as a servant to this officer, and when the officer changes his station to come to Washington or wherever else he may go that servant will go with him, and I will venture the prediction that within three years' time you will find that more men will be enlisted as servants than there will be under the provision for increasing the Army by five thousand men.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to interrupt the Senator. The intention, as I stated, was for frontier posts. If the Senator thinks the committee is trying to give an opportunity for the enlistment of a number of men, I am perfectly willing to provide in the section, or I will write the amendment myself, that it shall not apply to any officer in a city, in a town, or any place except at posts away from the settlements. Put that in if you wish.

Mr. PLUMB. That will not cover it at all, because the man once enlisted is in the service for the term for which he is enlisted and will accompany the man for whose benefit he was employed.

Mr. LOGAN. We will provide, then, that the officer shall not take him anywhere.

Mr. PLUMB. Why the great necessity now at this time to put into an Army bill a provision of this kind so capable of abuse? Is it out of sympathy for these people?

In addition to that, as I said, we shall pay these men more than twice, yes three times, what we exact in return from the Army officer, and that of itself is an insuperable objection in my mind to the whole provision, and you can not frame it in such a way that it will not be used in the manner in which I have stated, I do not care how carefully the provision may be made.

For one, as we are to have five thousand more men in the Army, I want the present establishment maintained just as cheaply as it can be consistent with the proper payment of men for the service rendered. This compensation has been fixed by law. The officers of the Army were put there with reference to that law. They have no right to claim any more. I do not believe myself that they really want any more. At all events it should not be, as I think, the purpose of Congress to give them more. We ought at least to keep the expenses within some reasonable compass, and not be continually adding to them for useless and totally unnecessary things.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator if this amendment would not cover exactly what he desires, because the committee have no wish to give an opportunity for violating the law:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to any officer serving other than away from any settlement.

So that a man could not then take his soldier-servant with him if he went to where there was any settlement.

Mr. PLUMB. When once you have enlisted this man and employed him as a servant, he will go with the officer wherever he goes. The provision only relates to original employment.

Mr. LOGAN. Under the proviso I suggest the officer who would take this class of soldier away from the command and away from the post where he was employed would be subject to court-martial and dismissal from the service.

Mr. PLUMB. He would violate it exactly as he now violates section 1232 of the Revised Statutes, and does not render himself liable to be dismissed from the Army for doing so, and, according to the testimony of the Senator from Illinois they all do that.

Mr. LOGAN. No, not all.

Mr. PLUMB. They all do that when there is any occasion for it.

Mr. LOGAN. They do that where they can not get a servant.

Mr. PLUMB. The question whether a man will do a thing or not is one that he decides most loosely in his own behalf.

Mr. SEWELL. I suggest an amendment, after the word "may" to add the words "while at such post."

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, I will accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion of the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from New Jersey offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 2, after the word "may," it is proposed to insert the words "while at such post;" so as to read:

That officers of the Army stationed at military posts apart from settlements may, while at such posts, with the approval of the department commander, each employ one private soldier as a servant.

Mr. PLUMB. That undoubtedly makes it better, but still it would be just as easily evaded as the positive provision of the statute now is.

In addition to that, there is an absolute donation of at least $20 a month to every officer who employs a soldier as a servant. It costs the Government much more. Even beyond the frugal computation of my friend from New Jersey these soldiers cost us over $300 a year each. I do not think there can be any question but what they cost us about $800 each, and yet we propose to give the service of people receiving this compensation from the Government to the officers for $20 a month. It ought to be at least $50 a month. There ought to be no such provision at all in point of fact. This would pay for the transportation of the servant.

Mr. LOGAN. The servants are always transported.

Mr. PLUMB. Not now.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg pardon, they are a part of the command.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am sure that there are a great many posts in the Army where it is indispensable to grant some sort of relief to officers by providing that in some way they shall have servants. At a large number of the posts civilians to be employed are not to be found, and the inferior officer must groom his own horse, clean his own stable, cook his own dinner, make his own bed, and do all kinds of servile work for which he would be perfectly willing to pay, but he can not get anybody to do it. Now to help this, and indeed to include a portion of the country where I think the provision is needed, I propose to insert after the word "posts," in the second line, the words "west of the Mississippi River and;" so as to read:

That officers of the Army stationed at military posts west of the Mississippi River and apart from settlements may, &c.

Mr. PLUMB. While the committee are fixing this up in the interest of the Army officer, I do not see any reason why they should take away anything put in here. Why not give it all to them? I am surprised at the Military Committee that they should seek now to take away anything from this favored class.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. HAWLEY. I supposed that had been agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 2, after the word "posts," insert the words "west of the Mississippi River and;" so as to read:

That officers of the Army stationed at military posts west of the Mississippi River and apart from settlements may, while at such posts, with the approval of the department commander, each employ one private soldier as a servant.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to further amend, by striking out in line 5 the word "twenty," before dollars, and inserting "40;" so as to read:

And that the sum of $40 per month during the period of such employment shall be charged against the officer employing him.

I move this amendment so as to make it come somewhat near what the soldier costs the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator well knows that the ration costs $6 a month, the clothing costs $3 a month, and you could not possibly make it over $29 a month if you included everything. Why say $40? I do not think the amount of $20 is unreasonable as it is in the bill. I think it is fair and proper; and such an extravagant figure as the Senator from Kansas proposes strikes me as being merely inimical to the bill and not for the purpose of perfecting it.

Mr. PLUMB. The way in which the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from New Jersey figure the cost of a private soldier leads me to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the officers cost the Government a great deal of money. There are twenty-two thousand private soldiers in the Army. The annual expense is $25,000,000 in round numbers—really about $26,000,000. The soldiers cost about $300 each according to the Senator from New Jersey, which would make $6,600,000. The officers then cost the Government about $19,000,000. That is a tolerably expensive establishment; and yet notwithstanding this skeleton of an army of less than twenty-five hundred officers costs $19,000,000, we coolly propose to add still more to the expense of that particular branch of the service.

Put it which way you will, there is an enormous disproportion in the price we are paying for official service in the Army, and that ought not be added to directly or indirectly. If we are to have a more expensive Army, it should be because we increase the number of enlisted men and not because we increase the expense of those who serve officially in that branch of the service.

But the cost of a private soldier is far more than has been stated. While it is true that we only pay him $13 a month for the first year, or $16 a month as is proposed by the bill, that is subject to an annual increase of $2 a month for every year, I think it is, which he serves. According to the statement of the Adjutant-General it costs more than $100 to recruit every enlisted man put into the Army. I think the sum as estimated by the Adjutant-General is about $112. In addition to that we have of course to take care of them; we feed them; we clothe them; we shelter them; we furnish them medical attendance, and we transport them. Every man we add to the Army increases the expense in all these particulars, and that will make a sum which can not in my judgement be figured out at less than about $800 to each person. Yet we propose to give for $240 a year the service of a man whom we have enlisted at this expense, and whom we are keeping in the Army at this expense, to an officer who may choose to have him for a servant.

As I said, it will result in the enlistment of servants. In that I do not speak of the intention of the Military Committee at all. It seems to have been from the beginning the determination of the Senator from Illinois to impute to every one who opposed this bill some reflection upon him or upon the committee or something of that kind, and thus to shield the bill from that criticism to which I think it is justly entitled.

If the officers are to have these servants they ought to pay what the servants are worth. They would pay very much less than the cost of them to the Government even at the price of $40 a month, because any officer having a servant must of course feed him, he must transport him, he must shelter him, but this man we give to him for $240 a year by the terms of the bill has to be fed and clothed and sheltered and transported, all at the expense of the Government. He has no responsibility for him whatever; he can take him for a short time or a long time as he sees fit. He has all the advantage. What it will result in, as I said, will be that the soldier enlisted west of the Mississippi River will be transported to Washington and to the East. The men enlisted as servants, if not kept in that particular branch of the service, and serving the officers with whom they made the agreement whereby they went into the service, will desert, and there will be the expense of a court-martial, the arrest of the man, and expenses of that kind which the Government will have to bear.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Kansas has endeavored to prove by the naked force of his own statements repeatedly that it costs the Government $800 a year for each private soldier, and that it costs $25,000,000 a year for the support of the Army. The latter statement is correct, but in the items which make up the $25,000,000 a year I find the salaries in the office of the Secretary of War, $110,000—I give the round figures; salaries in the office of the Adjutant-General, $690,000; salaries in the office of the Quartermaster-General, $238,000; salaries in the office of the Surgeon-General, $511,000; pay of the Army, $12,276,000; subsistence of the Army, $1,890,000; quartermaster's supplies of the Army, $2,969,000; transportation of the Army, $2,965,000, transportation of the Army upon Pacific railroads, $715,000; horses for cavalry and artillery, $224,000; clothing, camp, and garrison equipage $1,442,000; medical and hospital department, $215,000; ordnance and ordnance stores, $399,000; ordnance service, $100,000; manufacture of arms at national armories, $400,000; pay at Military Academy, $203,000; and about twenty or thirty items running from $20,000 to $75,000, which I shall not enumerate. The pay is about $12,000,000, $6,000,000 of which goes to the private soldiers and the balance to the officers of the Army in active service and on the retired-list.

As I stated before when I made some remarks on this subject, the private soldier costs to-day $300 per annum as pay, allowance, and clothing, and the necessary transportation to take him to his post and to provide quarters for him, and the balance goes to the general support of the Army, to the keeping up of forts, arsenals, arms, equipment, ammunition, and all the matters connected with the quartermaster and commissary supplies of the Army. It is an unfair statement to say to the Senate that the private soldier costs anything like what the Senator from Kansas said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to strike out "$20" and insert "$40."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I renew my motion to strike out the fourth section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the fourth section of the bill as amended.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the section be read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 4, in the following words:

That officers of the Army stationed at military posts west of the Mississippi River and apart from settlements may, while at such posts, with the approval of the department commander, each employ one private soldier as a servant: Provided, That the consent of such soldier shall be first procured, and that the sum of $20 per month during the period of such employment shall be charged against the officer employing him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. JACKSON (when Mr. HARRIS's name was called). I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. My colleague is detained from the Senate today by sickness.

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VOORHEES (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] who is absent.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were present, I understand he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Berry,	Cockrell,	Maxey,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Coke,	Morgan,	Teller.
Call,	Gray,	Plumb,
Chace,	Hale,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—30.

Blackburn,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Eustis,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Butler,	Frye,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Gorman,	Pike,	Wilson of Iowa.
Conger,	Hawley,	Platt,
Dawes,	Logan,	Pugh,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Hampton,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Allison,	Harris,	Kenna,	Sewell,
Beck,	Harrison,	McPherson,	Vance,
Camden,	Hoar,	Miller,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vest,
Edmunds,	Jackson,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Fair,	Jones of Arkansas,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
George,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out section 5 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to strike out section 5, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That officers serving away from their stations as members or judge-advocates of courts-martial or courts of inquiry, or as members of military boards, shall receive a per diem allowance of $2.50.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the section.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the same motion in regard to section 6, authorizing the appointment of civilian clerks in place of general-service clerks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to strike out section 6, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War may authorize the employment at the headquarters of military divisions, departments, and districts of civilian clerks in place of the general-service clerks now authorized for such employment, at rates of compensation not to exceed those paid to other civilian clerks employed at such headquarters by officers of the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the section.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out section 9 of the bill, which I ask the Chief Clerk to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 9, in the following words:

SEC. 9. That fuel in kind only shall be issued to the officers of the Army, without cost, by the Quartermaster's Department, in quantities as prescribed by the Army Regulations and general orders.

Mr. PLUMB. This has been the subject of debate, and I only wish to say briefly that it is a change of the existing law. After a great deal of discussion and after abuses had been developed in the practice which this bill will restore, Congress provided that fuel should not be longer issued in kind to officers, but provided that the Quartermaster-General should furnish to Army officers the fuel which they needed at a uniform price of $3 per cord. It is stated that that is unequal, because in some places wood is worth more than in others. It will be observed in that connection that the inequality in one case is that applicable to the officers, while the inequality which would ensue to the Government by the adoption of this provision has not, I think, heretofore been mentioned.

The Government pays for the fuel of course whatever the market price may be. If it is worth more than $3 a cord it loses now the difference between that price and $3. The officer pays $3 a cord for it whether he be in Montana or whether he be in Texas. Of course the officer serving in Montana is in a cold climate and buys more, because he requires more wood than the officer for the time serving in a warmer climate; but inasmuch as stations are changed from time to time, it happens that officers who are on active duty get the benefit of this climatic difference as perfectly as they could under a provision of that kind.

Under this section officers in Washington, in New York, or elsewhere, after being entitled to fuel in kind, will go to the contractor who furnishes the wood, order the wood, receipt for it, and receive from the contractor whatever price may be agreed upon between them in lieu of the actual furnishing of the wood itself. It amounts to setting up and legalizing a traffic of this kind on the part of all Army officers. It had that effect before and it will have it again. In my belief, it will add a couple of hundred thousand dollars to the cost of maintaining the Army. I think therefore that the present rule, which has not proved onerous, ought to be maintained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to strike out section 9 of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the yeas and nays are taken I merely wish to say, by way of explanation, that the provision in the bill is the provision which was in the bill when the Army was reorganized on the peace establishment, as it is called. The provision which the Senator desires to have remain is the provision of the law which always existed heretofore where officers drew what they called commutation of fuel. We changed that in the reorganization of 1870 because of abuses which I do not care to speak of, and provided that they should receive the wood or coal, whatever it was, in kind; that the quartermaster should furnish it to them in kind. That was the law then until it was changed on an appropriation bill, and not by any bill reported from the Military Committee. So it was changed back to the old status.

As I stated yesterday, and as the Senator from Kansas will remember when he was on the committee himself for the purpose of reorganizing the Army under General Burnside, they submitted exactly this provision in their report.

Mr. PLUMB. Not by my vote.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know anything about that, but the Senator's name is signed to the report. That is all I know about it. I do not know whether the Senator was in favor of it or not, but that is the universal sentiment of the men who have experience in reference to this matter. In the West, where wood is at a high price, an officer getting but $1,400 a year is on starvation allowance almost when he has to pay $8 and $10 a cord for wood after he expends the amount which is allowed to him, which he has to exceed in such an extreme climate.

Mr. BUTLER. And the larger portion of the officers are there.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, the larger portion of the officers, as is well known, are stationed in the northern Territories.

Mr. SEWELL. Under the present Army Regulations a lieutenant in the Army is allowed from May 1 to August 31 half a cord a month, and from September 1 to April 30 a cord a month. He is allowed to buy that now at $3 per cord, but in the cold latitude in which a great many posts on the frontier are situated the officers may need much more than eight cords between September and May, and at very many places in the prairie country it takes sometimes half his pay to keep himself in fuel.

Mr. PLUMB. If that is true, and if those officers are as the Senator from Illinois says on the point of starvation, why do we not pass a bill giving them additional pay? I think if there is any one thing which there is a common opinion about, it is to the effect that there ought not to be perquisites attached to any public place, and that salaries should be given directly and not indirectly. If those officers are not getting enough so as to enable them to buy food, or fuel, or clothing, or to support their families, let us give it to them directly, and not open a door of this kind whereby there will come up, as there was before, a traffic which, whether legal or illegal, was a bone of contention and source of corruption and a cause of scandal. Let the pay be made $1,500, or $1,700, or $2,000, or any other sum that may be necessary, whatever may be demonstrated to be proper, but do not enter upon this giving of perquisites, which always leads to one result and that an unwholesome one.

Mr. LOGAN. If we should give the officer $1,800 he would be entitled to wood just the same.

Mr. PLUMB. So he would if we were to pass this bill; but I do not want to pass the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. When I spoke of starvation prices, I did not refer to any officers except those who receive $1,400 a year. I had in mind those officers who are receiving $1,400 a year, where fuel is at such an extravagant price that it brought them to nearly a starvation point. I said that, and that is true.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well; and then I said we ought to increase the salary, we ought to give them the pay directly which they need for the purpose of properly compensating them for the service they render.

Mr. LOGAN. But I am afraid you would object to that.

Mr. PLUMB. I would, because I think they are now paid enough. I have heard of Indians starving out on that frontier, but while I read the telegrams with tolerable care I have not yet observed an account of any officer of the Army starving. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois has heard of such a case. And I have not heard of any of them resigning either.

As I said, the objection to this section is, in the first place, that it is adding to the compensation, but the worst objection is that it adds to it indirectly, and that it opens a door to them which Congress sought to get rid of, and which it did get rid of, measurably at least, by the passage of the act of 1873, requiring wood to be sold to the officer, and thus cutting off his private traffic. As I said, I would rather give twice the value of the wood to the officer directly and let him draw it out of the Treasury as part of his compensation, than to give him the wood and thereby set in motion this great traffic, which is liable to result, and which will inevitably result, exactly as it did before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is necessarily absent, and will be absent for some days. I shall not make the announcement again.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired, as I announced before, with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 8, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—8.

Berry,	Bowen,	Maxey,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Coke,	Morgan,	Teller.

NAYS—30.

Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Butler,	Gray,	Pike,	Spooner,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Platt,	Stanford,
Conger,	Kenna,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Dawes,	Logan,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Eustis,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—37.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Allison,	Fair,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sewell,
Beck,	George,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Call,	Gorman,	Jones of Nevada,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Hale,	Mahone,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Harris,	Miller,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Palmer,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Payne,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. There was some discussion in reference to section 16, and that there may be no further objection except to the principle of it, I will move an amendment which would seem to make it conformable at least to the views of many Senators. That is the section in reference to the inspection, and I would make it read "that hereafter there shall be additional inspections made of the Pay Department," so that the section can not be construed to mean that these are to be the only inspections made of the paymasters' offices.

Mr. SEWELL. I suggest to the Senator to make it read "annual additional inspection."

Mr. LOGAN. I will accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 16, line 1, after the word "hereafter," it is proposed to insert the words "an annual additional," and to strike out the words "the inspections" and insert "inspection shall be," and in line 2 to strike out the words "shall be made;" so as to read:

That hereafter an annual additional inspection shall be made of paymasters' accounts, offices, their duties, &c., by officers of the Pay Department detailed for that purpose by the Secretary of War, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to add at the end of the bill, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. —. That section 1106 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America be amended so as to read as follows:

"Each infantry regiment shall consist of twelve companies, one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, three majors, one adjutant, one quartermaster, one sergeant-major, one quartermaster-sergeant, and one chief musician, who shall be instructor of music, and two principal musicians. The adjutant and the quartermaster shall be extra lieutenants, selected from the first or second lieutenants of the regiment: Provided, That all appointments to the original vacancies above the grade of second lieutenant created by this act shall be filled by seniority in the infantry arm of the service: And provided further, That of the number of second lieutenants in excess of the graduates of the Military Academy appointed to the infantry arm of the service, one-half of such number shall be appointed from the enlisted men of the Army of the United States, after proper examination."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON.]

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire simply to suggest that this proposed amendment is the three-battalion bill in substance as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs favorably. It proposes to make one-half of this increase for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the infantry regiments by organizing them under the three-battalion idea. It has, I understand, the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the entire committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I presume that of course will be added, although I did not expect quite so quick a recognition of the fact that more men need more officers. The private soldier with his $300 a year disappears now, and the officers come in in proportion to the number of soldiers; so that these five thousand men add just as much in proportion to the expense as the men who are now in the Army. It is a little swift, as I said, but it is a complete recognition of the fact that one step follows another in regard to matters of this kind, and these five thousand men will cost just one-fifth as much as the twenty-five thousand men we now have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment adds two hundred officers to the Army—fifty majors, fifty captains, fifty first lieutenants, and fifty second lieutenants.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know that debate is in order at this time, but I should like unanimous consent to explain the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is in order.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will take this occasion to explain the statement of the Senator from Missouri, a statement which, perhaps while true in a degree, might create a false impression in reference to the amendment.

It is true that it is proposed to add, for the purpose of reaching the three-battalion organization of infantry, two hundred officers to the regular Army, not however by the appointment of fifty majors, fifty captains, fifty first lieutenants, and fifty second lieutenants, but two hundred second lieutenants, advancing a certain number of officers of the grade of first lieutenants to captains and captains to majors.

This proposition is one which has been recommended year after year for the last eight or ten years by every commanding general of the Army and by the Secretary of War, and it certainly seems to me that the most efficient and the best use which could be made of one-half of the force that is added to the regular Army by the bill would be increasing the efficiency of the infantry arm by adopting the three-battalion organization, an organization which, as I suggested a few days ago to the Senate when talking about the bill as apart from the general Army efficiency bill, is one that is absolutely needed by reason of the changed condition of military matters.

As I said then, I now repeat, the present organization of the infantry arm of the service, consisting as each regiment does of ten companies, constituting one battalion, is as obsolete as the flint-lock musket as an implement of war. I suggest what I before said, that the infantry organization of the United States Army is found in only two other countries in the world, and those two are Persia and China. There is not any army of all the European nations that study the art of war but what has progressed out of the single battalion organization.

Gentlemen are fearful of adding largely to the cost of the Army—something that I do not fear at all; but I believe this proposition is made in the interest of true economy. Still, if they have such fears, it is very easy for them by amendment to this proposed amendment to reach what they desire.

The number of second lieutenants to be added by the amendment is two hundred. A few days ago the Senate passed a bill providing for a certain number of additional second lieutenants in order that the graduating class of this year at West Point might be provided for. The graduating class of this year is seventy-eight in number. Only one-half of that number, thirty-nine, I believe, can be taken care of by the vacancies which have occurred or will occur between now and the day they shall graduate, leaving thirty-eight who will necessarily be added as additional second lieutenants if this measure does not pass. The remainder, about one hundred and sixty in number, of second lieutenants this amendment provides shall be appointed, one-half from the rank and file of the regular Army, giving to the efficient and worthy private soldier, the enlisted man of the Army, a chance for promotion, and the others are to be taken from civil life.

It would be very easy for those who are actuated by what they believe to be economy to reduce the number of second lieutenants for the infantry regiments. I certainly would not myself favor that course, but we might make one hundred second lieutenants to be appointed under this bill. However, I hope that the amendment as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs will be adopted as it stands.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment if adopted will add just fifty majors to the Army to the number already existing; it will add just fifty captains more, and it will add just fifty first lieutenants, and fifty second lieutenants, two hundred in all; but by the hocus-pocus of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska he makes it that there are only to be two hundred second lieutenants appointed. That is true from outside of the Army, but fifty captains who are not entitled to promotion to majorities will be appointed and taken out of the list of captains and made majors, and then lieutenants will be appointed in the place of the captains, those who are already in the Army, and then second lieutenants to the places of the first lieutenants, so that the new appointments from the outside will come in at the lowest grade of second lieutenants. Nevertheless it adds fifty majors to the Army, fifty captains, fifty first lieutenants, and fifty second lieutenants, and the pay to which they are entitled.

I am opposed to the amendment, although the principle is right if it were a consolidation instead of an increase of the Army. But as I have already spoken to the Senate upon this question, I shall withdraw the call for the yeas and nays if I may have permission to do so.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the effect of the amendment is not to promote lieutenants to be captains and captains to be majors.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. But not to hold open so many more additional appointments of persons outside the Army?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, it does not make fifty majors outside of the Army; but it takes fifty captains and makes them majors, and fifty of the first and second lieutenants, so that the whole two hundred come in at the foot of the list as second lieutenants.

Mr. GIBSON. What is the actual absolute increase?

Mr. COCKRELL. Just two hundred.

Mr. GIBSON. I mean the increase to the Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. Two hundred. The new men come in as second lieutenants, but fifty captains are made majors and draw majors' pay, fifty first lieutenants are made captains and draw captains' pay, fifty more are to be first lieutenants, and fifty more are to be second lieutenants. The cost of it will be the salaries of fifty majors, fifty captains, fifty first lieutenants, and fifty second lieutenants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the call is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to add as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. —. That section 1218 of the Revised Statutes, as follows—

"No person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States or of either of the States in insurrection during the late rebellion shall be appointed to any position in the Army of the United States"— be, and is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I shall speak very briefly to this amendment. Until the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States we had no definition of what constituted either citizenship of the United States or citizenship of a State. But the first section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States declares that—

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, &c.

What are the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States?

There had always been some doubt about what was the nature of these immunities and privileges until they were determined by the Supreme Court of the United States. I will not detain the Senate to read the various definitions and discussions of these words to be found in the different decisions of the Supreme Court. It is true that many of them, most of the early decisions, related to the constitutional scope and significance of section 2, Article IV of the Constitution—"The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States"—but since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution with these words therein they have received a more definite and precise and authoritative construction.

Mr. Justice Washington, in Corfield vs. Coryell (4 Washington Circuit Court, 371), says he feels no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are fundamental, which belong to the citizens of all free governments, and which have at all times been enjoyed by citizens of the several States which compose this Union from the time of their becoming free, independent, and sovereign. The Supreme Court, in the celebrated Slaughter-house cases (16 Wallace), interpret the meaning of these words in the Constitution clearly and fully. The court say:

But lest it should be said that no such privileges and immunities are to be found if those we have been considering are excluded, we venture to suggest some which owe their existence to the Federal Government, its national character, its Constitution, or its laws.

One of these is well described in the case of Crandall vs. Nevada, 6 Wallace, 36. It is said to be the right of the citizen of this great country, protected by implied guarantees of its Constitution, "to come to the seat of Government to assert any claim he may have upon that Government, to transact any business he may have with it, to seek its protection, to share its offices, to engage in administering its functions. He has the right of free access to its seaports, through which all operations of foreign commerce are conducted, to the subtreasuries, land offices, and courts of justice in the several States." (Slaughter-house cases, 16 Wallace, 79.)

Here then it will be observed the Supreme Court declares the right "to share its offices," the offices of the Federal Government, among the privileges and immunities guaranteed by the Constitution to the citizens of the United States.

The Constitution of the United States imposes certain qualifications for the offices that are created by that instrument. It declares the qualifications of President and Vice-President, of Senators and of Representatives, and in the third section of the fourteenth amendment we find certain disqualifications for office, or disabilities, which may be removed by a vote of two-thirds of each House of Congress. Whether we regard the third section as constituting pains and penalties upon those who entered the service of the confederacy or not, it certainly does prescribe certain qualifications upon all persons who were engaged in the rebellion to enter the service of the United States. It says in express terms:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President or Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

That is a negative pregnant with an affirmative. It declares certain persons disqualified from entering the Army of the United States. All other persons who are not so disqualified surely have the right under the definition of the Supreme Court of the rights and privileges of American citizens to enter the Army of the United States, and all persons who come within the fourteenth amendment have the right to enter the Army when the disqualifications or disabilities shall have been removed. It is very plain.

It is true the Constitution confers the power upon Congress to raise and support armies, and to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. But the Constitution also confers the power upon the President to nominate and, by and with the consent of the Senate, to appoint all officers of the United States. Congress does not possess the appointing power even of the officers of the Army. The only limitations upon the exercise of this power by the Executive are to be found in the Constitution itself. This statute providing that no person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, or of either of the States, in insurrection during the late rebellion, shall be appointed to any position in the Army of the United States, I submit is an attempt by statute to deprive certain citizens of the right to be appointed to offices by the President, to deprive citizens of the United States of immunities and privileges guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States, for it declares in effect that a person after having his disabilities and disqualifications for office removed in the manner pointed out by the Constitution shall not then and thereupon enjoy the rights that belong to him under that Constitution, and which the Constitution declares shall be his when his disabilities shall have been removed. The statute does not apply equally to all citizens, is not general in its bearing, but designates a certain number of American citizens who shall constitute a proscribed class, and a class thrust outside of the reach and protection of the Constitution. It is not a statute to regulate the Army or appointments to the Army, but to deny the right to enter the Army to certain citizens.

The statute also attempts to place the restriction and limitation upon the power of appointment by the President in the selection of officers in the Army, which is likewise repugnant to his constitutional rights and responsibilities.

Under the operation of this third section of the fourteenth amendment we find a person who has been engaged in the service of the Confederate States after his disabilities have been removed is eligible not only to become a Senator and Representative in Congress, Associate Justice, and even Chief-Justice of the Unied States, to hold the scales in equal balance before the nation and to represent its honor, dignity, and power, and good faith and civilization at every court in Europe—nay, to the Vice-Presidency and Presidency, to be the Chief Magistrate of this nation, the commander-in-chief of their Army and and Navy; and yet this statute declares that he may not become a lieutenant in the Army of the Union.

Sir, the statute is not only in conflict with any just and fair interpretation of the Constitution, but conflicts with those generous and magnanimous sentiments which have invited the whole world to witness the most extraordinary spectacle that has ever been presented in the history of nations, namely, that perfect concord which brings together in this Chamber as the representatives of a united country those who but a few years ago upheld the cause of the Southern confederacy, the peers and companions of those who stood by and for the Union. This remarkable circumstance characterizes the people of this country as not only the wisest but as the most generous and magnanimous known to history, and compensates and consoles the student of political history for the tremendous sacrifices and bitterness of the civil struggle.

This statute conflicts also with that plain common sense which would impose no stigma or bar sinister upon any portion of the American people. It is equally repugnant to those fundamental ideas of equality of right which constitute the very foundation upon which these free institutions rest. Moreover it is in a great measure useless and inoperative. Those engaged in the civil service of the Confederate States have no qualifications and certainly no desire to enter the standing Army of our country. Of those who were in the military and naval service the great majority have been gathered to their fathers, and of those who still remain very few indeed, on account of their years and occupations in life, would be eligible even as lieutenants in the Army. It might be that some beardless boy who wore a gray jacket and followed the standard of Lee or Johnston or Hood from a fondness for military life might desire to enter the standing Army and to become a soldier of the Union and to fit himself some day to lead a division or army corps under the flag against the enemies of his country. What harm would be done if such a one or two or three out of the two hundred lieutenants to be added to the Army by this bill should join it?

Under these circumstances is it wise policy to insist upon such a statute and to preserve such odious discriminations against a body of men who in simple faith and fidelity to the States in which they lived and to the teachings of their fathers joined in upholding the cause of the lost confederacy, and who to-day stand ready to defend the flag of the Union with their lives?

They surrendered in good faith as soldiers of the confederacy. They returned to their broken and devastated homes without murmuring, and by their peaceful and industrious lives have vindicated their title to the confidence and respect of the people of the whole country. They can seek no pensions, for the Constitution denies pensions to them, but have contributed freely from their earnings to pay the millions on millions for pensions to the gallant soldiers of the Union Army, to their widows and children.

Under these circumstances is it not proper, is it not wise, that this unconstitutional statute which inflicts upon them a degradation and imposes a humiliating stigma should be repealed? That is all we ask.

Mr. LOGAN. I have an amendment here which I think would be acceptable to the Senator from Louisiana, and, if so, as far as I am concerned I certainly shall make no opposition to his proposition. I will say to him, however, that there are a great many persons in the Army now, who served in the confederacy in subordinate positions; that is, a great many private soldiers, and some of them at least act as corporals and sergeants. I know that to be the fact.

But perhaps it is best for us not to go too fast, and I propose an amendment, if the Senator will accept it, which I think would be satisfactory to everybody. I know what he says is true, that these men are over age, but there is in the minds of the people an idea that certain persons, if there is culpability in conduct, are more culpable than others. My amendment is to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to any officer of the Army or Navy or graduates from the Military Academy at West Point or the Naval Academy at Annapolis who entered the service of the confederacy against the Union.

That excludes the officers who belonged to the Army of the United States and entered the confederacy, the graduates from those academies, but applies the provision to everybody else.

Mr. GIBSON. I can not accept that amendment. There is less use for it than there is for the statute, because all the officers who graduated before the war at the Military or Naval Academy and afterward entered the confederate service are beyond the age really to take lieutenancies in the Army; and the Constitution itself permits those gentlemen, if their disabilities are removed, to enter the Army.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I rise more to ask the Senator from Illinois a question than to say anything else. Fifteen years ago, when the young men who were boys in the confederate army had a right to enter the service, I thought it was well that men from all parts of the country should have a right to serve in the Army; but now twenty-one years have run since the war closed. A young man then nineteen is forty to-day. I understand that no second lieutenant is ever appointed over thirty years, and no man is accepted as an enlisted man certainly over forty. So this seems to me a good deal like locking the stable-door after the horse is stolen. We might as well strike it out and let it go, for there is no practical use in it that I see, for no such man can enter the Army as I understand now.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to call the Senator's attention to one point with his permission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BECK. Yes; I rose really to ask the Senator from Illinois if there was anything practical at all in this proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that there is no law fixing the age at which persons may enter the Army. There is a rule in the Department which requires that a person shall not be over thirty years old before he can be appointed in the Army, but that is a mere rule, it is not a law. The Senator will find no statute of that kind anywhere.

Inasmuch as those who were graduates from the different academies who left the Army or Navy of the United States and entered the service of the confederacy were a distinct class, it strikes me that as they can not enter the Army, there should be no reason why permission should be given them to enter the Army. As it applies to everybody else, soldier or officer, certainly inasmuch as they are in every character of office in the Government under the laws and the Constitution, I do not propose to make any contest in reference to it. I supposed that my proviso would be accepted. I drew it thinking it would be accepted for that reason, so as to make that distinct before the country, and I think it is just.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that it is not to get anybody in the Army that I desire the statute taken out; it is because it is a stigma, a badge of disqualification which I hope will disappear from our statutes.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me for one moment, I suggest that there might arise an occasion where this disqualification might be a very serious matter, in case of a foreign war.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; I admit that.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose this country should get into a foreign war within the next month, there is not a man who served in the confederate army and might be young enough to command a regiment or brigade or division but would be disqualified under that provision of the statutes, and in that aspect of the question it might be a matter of some consequence. I do not think it of any practical consequence so far as appointment to subordinate positions is concerned.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree to all that, and if that time should arrive no doubt the country would appreciate the services of those men. There is no question about that; but not out of any feeling against those men or against any other men, I maintained in the Committee on the Judiciary and I have always maintained in the Senate that that distinction ought to be made between men who served in our Army and had received the education of the Government and went into the service and those of the same class who went into the service of the confederate government. It has seemed to me that such a distinction was more of a compliment to those men who did not go into the confederate army from our Army than anything else that could be done. I have always said so, and I have always felt so. The Senator says that no such person can go into the Army. It is not the going into the Army I am objecting to; that is not it at all. It is to keep that distinction which I have always thought ought to be made.

However, as the Senator says that no such person can go into the Army, I will say to him that there are one or two persons in the service now who were in the confederate service.

Mr. GIBSON. Not as officers.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; as officers.

Mr. GIBSON. Commissioned officers?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir. One of them is from Virginia and is now in the Medical Corps of the Army. I do not know whether he was a surgeon in the confederacy, but I think he was. He went through an examination here before a board, and the board reported him to the Surgeon-General and permission was asked for his appointment, and Congress gave it to him, and he is now serving, as I understand, in the Army. And I think there is one other case in Maryland, but I am not sure about it. I know there is one case in Maryland where the same thing was asked, but whether it was granted or not I do not remember. I am told it was not. I know it was asked. The other case was granted, the man from Virginia, and I think he is now assistant surgeon in the Medical Corps of the Army of the United States. In places of that kind, in the different bureaus of the War Department, this rule is not applied. It is applied to lieutenants who are appointed in the Army. That rule is not applied to other branches of the service.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator sees my purpose in offering this amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not offered the amendment I suggested. I only asked the Senator if he would accept it.

Mr. GIBSON. I am sure the Senator from Illinois would not think any more of me or my associates if we were to consent that the graduates of West Point or of the Naval Academy, who under a profound sense of duty, as it seemed to them, joined us in this enterprise against the Union, should have a punishment inflicted upon them that we ourselves did not receive; that a greater measure of punishment or of discrimination should be visited upon them than upon us. I submit to the Senator, therefore, that it would be wrong in me to accept any amendment which discriminated in favor of myself or other gentlemen who were associated with me in the confederate army and against others who did no more than we did.

I submit also to the Senator that in the event of a foreign war or of any war, how would he feel if when he saw the flag of our country unfurled he were forbidden by the statute from jumping to the defense of it, as he would to the defense of his own honor and his own fireside, thus being under the ban? I hope that day is passing away when any Senator on this floor shall feel that it is necessary either to satisfy his constituents at home or his own resentment, or to preserve the faith of our country or the honor of our country, that there should be inflicted upon this diminishing band of men who have no pensions, who do not desire any of the emoluments or honors of the Government, but who do not wish to live under the ban and stigma of censure that this statute imposes upon them.

Mr. SEWELL. As a member of the Military Committee, I will say to the Senate that I believe one-third of this body as well as a portion of that committee is composed of gentlemen who were engaged in the confederate army, and they to-day represent the Southern States with fidelity to the United States Government. I believe this statute should not remain, but the question of its repeal ought not to be attached to this bill. I shall be very glad, indeed, if the Senator from Louisiana would withdraw his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I think that the Senate is conscious of the fact that the time may arrive when this discriminating statute ought to go off the book. There may be some sentiment hid away in the hearts of men who are old, and who are inveterate in their opinions, which demands that there shall still remain upon the statute-book an offensive denunciation of the class of men who engaged in the rebellion; but I think the country has very largely outgrown that, and I judge it as much from the character of the sentiments which have been uttered on the floor of the Senate to-day by gentlemen who were in the Union Army as I do from any other fact within my knowledge. I hope, therefore, that we shall not allow a sentiment which is fading out, which is no longer of any service to the country, which is not likely to add anything to its comfort or to its prosperity, to stand in the way of the removal of a statute which now has no beneficial purpose or effect at all, and which really has no actual operation upon appointment to office.

This statute has never been brought in question in any way so that the Supreme Court of the United States could pronounce definitively whether or not it was a constitutional enactment; but the argument made to-day by the Senator from Louisiana and supported by the authority which he read from the Supreme Court of the United States demonstrates, in my judgment, that this was always an unconstitutional law. When the people of the United States undertook the amendment of the Constitution and inserted the fourteenth article of amendment and ratified it, they enacted the only law of disqualification that they desired to enact operating upon the people of the United States to prevent them from the right to hold office. It was a very ample enactment; it included every class of cases that the Congress and the different Legislatures that ratified the amendment thought it was necessary and proper to include. It did not confer upon Congress any additional power to disfranchise or disqualify men from office. It fixed the disqualifications in the body of the amendment and said, "Thus far will we go and no farther." It never said to Congress, "You shall have full liberty to go as far as you please in disqualification." This statute which we are now considering and trying to repeal was enacted long after the offense was committed and after all opportunity had passed away for the commission of the offense, in what was styled the rebellion, the insurrection of the Southern States against the Government of the United States. Every alleged crime that could possibly have been committed in the course of those military operations had been completed, as a matter of fact, absolutely before this statute was passed.

Now, what prevents that from becoming an ex post facto law? I grant you that when you adopted the fourteenth amendment you had the right to make it ex post facto, and you did so make it, and it has operated as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and none of the persons who are denounced under the second section of the fourteenth amendment as being disqualified from holding office can ever hold office in the United States until this political disqualification is removed by a vote of two-thirds of each House of the Congress of the United States. That is the situation as to them. That was an ex post facto law, it was true, but it was a constitutional amendment, and constitutional amendments may operate ex post facto and be entirely valid.

When, however, you come to the matter of enacting a law there is a restraint upon the power of Congress that it shall not enact a statute which relates back to an antecedent condition of affairs and makes that criminal which was not criminal before, or which attaches to that which was criminal a penalty that did not exist before. So that this is in every sense an ex post facto law.

But the ground taken by the Senator from Louisiana is still stronger than this. It is a ground of intent, a ground of construction, which is that those men who framed the Constitution excluded from us the power to disqualify men for anything that related to the rebellion because they took the whole subject up and dealt with it as a whole, and gave to us this constitutional enactment as the final solution and settlement of the whole controversy.

I said, Mr. President, we never had an opportunity of having this question presented so that it could be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, suppose that a man was nominated here to-day for a quartermaster or a paymaster in the Army of the United States, taken from private life as he may be under the statute; the nomination was confirmed by the Senate and he was commissioned by the President and took his place, qualified as an officer; is there any power, judicial or legislative, in the United States which could deprive that man of his office under this law? That would present the question in a light that would bring the whole of this argument distinctly into view; and I think that the opinion and answer of every lawyer in the Senate must be that that man would hold his office by the appointment of the President made after a ratification of the Senate, the law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Suppose that the President of the United States should send in here a man who had been disqualified under the second clause of the fourteenth amendment, and the Senate by a vote of two-thirds should ratify and confirm his nomination? Even in a case of that kind this body would have the constitutional power to waive the provision and accept his services. There might be circumstances where it would become a national necessity that a thing of that sort should take place.

But what I am trying to show is that it is not in the power of Congress by legislation merely to put disqualifications for holding office—mark the words—to put disqualifications for holding office upon citizens of the United States which are not recognized in the Constitution of the United States, either expressly or by some necessary implication, such as unfitness for office. To take a man who is qualified, who is fit, who has all the requisite information to make him a competent and good officer of the United States Government, and enact against that man by name a law that he shall not hold an office under the Government of the United States because he is worth a million dollars or because he is not worth 5 cents or because his politics are this way or that way or for any other cause—for if you can disqualify him for one cause by an act of Congress, you can disqualify him for any—to take an individual, name him in a personal statute, declare that the Congress of the United States enacts "you are disqualified for holding office;" sir, you have not got the power to do it. The President can appoint him and the Senate can confirm him, and the President can commission him, and he can go along and execute the functions of his office in despite of the decree of Congress; all of which merely proves that there are some things which Congress can not do, and among the things that Congress can not do we can not pass an ex post facto law to condemn a man from holding an office in any department of this Government because of an offense committed before the time that he was appointed hitherto or before the time of the enactment of the law. That is the proposition on which I stand.

It has not been necessary, it would have been inappropriate, perhaps it would have been exciting or even aggravating for a man coming as I do from the South hitherto to have made a question of this kind and to have pressed it upon the attention of the Senate; but now you are asking us to vote to increase this Army by two hundred officers and by five thousand private soldiers, and this law stands upon the statute-book to say to us, "The men who are to go into this Army under this new régime must be men who are not of your kith and kin, men who do not live in your section of the country, men who do not think as you do; they must be men who live where we do, that have our opinions on past questions, that have never been involved in any previous difficulty with the people of the United States." You might just as well have attempted to declare by an act of Congress that I could not have taken my seat as a Senator from Alabama because I had participated in the rebellion, and I did it with my eyes open and my heart in my hand—no question about that.

Now when you are asking money to increase the Army of the United States and we have got votes, do not ask us to violate both our sense of constitutional obligation and our sense of respect for the men who have grown up and lived with us and whom we do honor in person and in every way, and ask us to do that while you call on us to vote for the bill to increase the Army of the United States. Never will I vote for a bill to increase the Army of the United States while a single man that bore arms in the South is excluded from it, unless you mention Mr. Davis, and I name him because I know he would not accept it.

That is my view of this question. I am sorry, Mr. President, that the occasion never before arose when I had to discuss it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think the time has arrived when we have approached to a period when the transactions of the war may be regarded as matters of history, when we have survived its passions, its prejudices, and its antagonisms. I think I see on the other side of the Chamber and throughout the entire country, North and South, a disposition to forget whatever was wrong and whatever was violent and bitter in resentment, and to accept the past as one of the inevitable consequences of providential arrangements. The time has come when we may speak a word in defense of those men who, acting in obedience to their conscientious judgment, whatever may have been the correctness or incorrectness of their opinions, followed them to the death. The officers of the Army of the United States who went into the confederate service and the officers of the Army of the United States who remained loyal to the Union were not divided by any very great stretch of opinion. Some at least of the most distinguished officers of the Army of the Union in their judgment stood upon a balance as to which side their convictions of duty, their feelings, and their past associates should lead them. That fact is well known as to each and to both of them whether they adhered to the one cause or to the other. They acted from causes over which they had no control, from the associations of the past, from convictions and judgments which had come to them in the ordinary course of life, and they were conscientious. One was equal in every respect to the other.

I think we might now approach that plane of judgment, of calm consideration, of justice, to say here what Mr. Sumner said long before the war, that the man who followed his conscientious judgment obeyed that which was a higher law to him than the obligations of government or his opinions in regard to public policy. And however we may fail to discriminate in the moment of passion, the judgment of history must ever accord to the man who imperils his life, who goes to the field and into the battle and suffers every form of sacrifice for a conscientious opinion and belief of right, the highest character to which a human being may attain. Therefore, sir, I think we can not now say that the officers of the Army because they were educated at West Point, because after serving under the flag of the Union they conceived an opinion different from those who adhered to the Government are justly subject to any imputation.

True, we all perceive now the unfortunate error of that course; true, it seems now in the light of experience, now when opinion has become developed fact and been crystallized into great and accomplished results, that the country would have been better served if all of us had adhered to the Union and sustained it and there had been no secession and no war; but to impute to the men who differed in judgment a want of either conscientious opinion or of high and honorable performance of duty as they understood it is both unwise and impolitic and narrow-minded, unjust, ungenerous, and unworthy of civilized and Christian men. Therefore I would to-day gladly see a state of opinion and law in which the meritorious men of the Union Army who went into the confederacy at the beginning of the war from conscientious conviction were not only allowed to enter the service but were invited to do so.

It is to the interest of the people that the citizens of both opinions, Union and confederate, should hold office, both civil and military, without distinction or difference as to the part they took a quarter of a century ago. This was the opinion of Charles Sumner, expressed many years ago. It is both the Divine and human judgment that to err is human, to forgive, divine; and he who would perpetuate strife and ill-will and resentments can hold no place in the respect and esteem of an intelligent, humane, and just public sentiment. Under what government and in what period of the history even of barbarous times was it ever before heard that men should be excluded from military service because they thought many years before that they had grievances which justified them in attempting revolution by arms.

Who would deny that if General Lee were living to-day he would not be as loyal to the Union, as brave and devoted as any other man, be he who he may? Who doubts that if war existed and General Grant were alive he would select General Lee with the acclamation of the whole country to be an officer high in command in the Union armies? Who would doubt his loyalty, and who would doubt his honest devotion to what he thought was right? And now when this great war, this great difference of opinion, this antagonism produced from causes which the Senate has nothing to do with, which came in the order of Providence, has passed, who but men of narrow and vindictive judgment can question that the men of the army who went with the South from honest convictions of duty are not equal in every respect in their desire to serve the country, in their capacity to do it in their character as men as any others?

Therefore, sir, I hail with great gratification the expressions which come from some distinguished soldiers of the other side of the Chamber, and I think it would be well not only that this law were repealed but that there should be in the Union Army of to-day some of those men whose misfortune it was to have gone with the South, and sacrificed their places in the Army, their future preferment, their families, and themselves to what they regarded at the time as a duty.

This is certainly the just judgment of a great majority of the people of this country, and it should have expression in the laws.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the proposition is to repeal the law which has been on the statute-book for years—since 1866 I am informed until now—making some little, slight, insignificant distinction between those who sustained the Government and the nation in the time of peril and those who, having sworn to defend the nation and the Constitution and the laws, deserted their country and joined in a rebellion which cost this country hundreds of thousands of valuable lives, millions of treasure, and desolate hearths all over the North. We are asked to repeal that last remaining little indication that in this nation and in this Government and among this people there did exist and still exists some little distinction in favor of the loyal soldier and against the disloyal soldier.

Sir, I have been waiting for some years for the discussion in Congress to assume the form which it assumes to-day. I venture to say that the soldiers of the Army of the Union who read this discussion here to-day are beginning to wonder whether they were not a little more in the wrong and a little more deserving of censure for having girded on their armor to sustain the country than those who had sworn to support the Constitution and laws and went into the rebellion, compelling them to go into battle and into trials to sustain the country. They may begin to think that they are a little worse off and a little more deserving of blame than their opponents.

Why, sir, the honey and the water and molasses speeches of to-day would indicate that our Southern brethren were really so forced by Providential circumstances, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] says, that having resisted as long as they could against all assaults upon their loyalty and upon their patriotism, they were finally compelled by an overruling Providence to go with the South, fight the North, and fight the country! I have been waiting for some years for this day to come around. It has come a little earlier than I expected.

The remarks which have been made to-day are a little stronger than I thought they would be in this year of grace. The appeals to our sympathies come a little more frequent than I supposed they would come for at least a few years more.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], with his high sense of honor and his fine sensibilities and many of those things which I admire in him, has offered an amendment to this Army bill to repeal a law which he himself says has no effect in the world and can not have any effect upon any of those in whose behalf he speaks and in whose behalf others speak here.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], with his usual boldness, not only approves of this amendment, but, as he has done on former occasions, impresses upon the minds of his brother Senators and upon the country the fact that he went into the rebellion deliberately, intentionally, knowingly, and that he would do again to-day the same thing; that he approved the war and that his fellows did then, and that he glories in it to-day. His brother Senators are not as bold as that. I have no doubt that feeling exists, exists to a greater extent than is communicated to us here. I have no doubt that is, in the minds of many Senators as well as of many Southern men, the great redeeming thing of their lives, the glory-point they have reached in their brief existence, that they were rebels against this Government; that they were traitors to their country; that they did engage in a war with their fellows against this Union.

Some of them regret that they were defeated; some of them regret undoubtedly that the Union triumphed; some of them regret that there is not that Southern confederacy with the black-marble slab of slavery as the keystone of its organization, of its system. Those views are not expressed as readily now in these piping days of peace as perhaps they are indulged in. The time has not quite come for that exhibition of sentiment and for that proposed return to a similar condition of opposition to this Government if they saw cause to withdraw their allegiance to it.

Now, sir, repeal this law to-day. The Senators all say it is of no earthly benefit to their constituents and to their people; that those who engaged in the war are too old to come in as lieutenants now. Could they not come in as paymasters? Could they not come in any of the offices that are appointed in the Army from civil life? Have you not a President to make the appointments? With the kindness and delicacy and genial sensibility of Senators aroused as they have been attempted to be aroused to-day, would not this Senate, following on in this era of peace and kindness and hospitality and honey and milk and molasses, confirm anybody whom the President should appoint?

Ah, they will go a little farther than that to-morrow. Repeal this little distinction, an unnecessary distinction as they say, between loyalty and treachery, and to-morrow we shall be called upon—I think to-morrow, but perhaps not till the day after to-morrow, for these things must not succeed each other too rapidly—we shall be called upon to vote thanks to the gallant soldiers of the confederacy, first for the bravery they exhibited—for they could not very well ask me to vote thanks for their loyalty to the country, but for their bravery—to vote thanks to that class of men in the South who every Southern Senator when he speaks of them declares are perfect gentlemen, belonging to the best families, with the highest influence, with unstained reputations, because they are Democrats and because they belonged to the confederate army.

Why, sir, at the South at this very hour the great mark of distinction among the Southern people, let them say and let their representatives say what they choose, the thing that opens the pathway to glory and to promotion and to honor in civil life and to honor in social life, is that men were officers and soldiers in that great army arrayed for the destruction of their country. Look over the list, look upon the faces of our comrades here, see how few ever come from the South here to represent any State or any people that served in the Union Army. I look over that array of my colleagues on this floor and I find but one solitary man that was in the Union Army, and he from away among the mountains of Tennessee. He is tolerated on that side of the Chamber, not from any sympathy with the past, not from any remembrance of the old associations of the war. That is the condition of feeling.

I say to gentlemen that they have begun a little too early in removing all the landmarks and distinctions between the soldiers of the grand army of the Republic and those who unfortunately deserted their country and engaged in a hand-to-hand fight for the destruction of its institutions. Wait a while. You admit that the repeal of this law will do no good; then its existence on the statute-book does no harm. But the Senator from Louisiana says it is a little stigma, there is a faint shadow of discredit thrown by this law upon men who were engaged in rebellion. There is a little thing which in the minds of the people who read the laws of the United States might by some possibility recall the fact that there was a time when loyalty meant something in this country and when treachery against this country meant something too. The little stigma, the little faint shadow of reproach remaining here, the little slight difference that exists between the war-worn soldier of the Republic and the soldier of the confederacy I am not yet ready to vote to remove.

I am as kindly disposed and feel personally as willing to do all that may properly be done to my colleagues or to the people of the South as any man on this floor, notwithstanding the charge that I am, as some say, malignant and hard-hearted and ugly in this matter; but Senators on that side know it, and members of the House with whom I have served for years know it. But I do say in behalf of the people of the North that if there is upon the statute-book some little faint trace remaining that indicates that in this country there has been a time—if it is entirely removed now there has been a time—when loyalty and love of country and fidelity to trust and support of our institutions and regard for the perpetuity of the Union had force enough to enact such a law as that, we will let it remain there a little while longer.

If you repeal this and two other laws that were passed, what do you do but insinuate against those who passed these laws that they were unfeeling, that they were cruel, that they were harsh, that they kept up the differences of sections and of beliefs? I am not quite prepared to say that those who by making the laws or by marshaling the armies of the country saved this nation and saved it as a nation, and saved this Union and saved it with its institutions, and saved it with its accursed institutions that were once fastened upon it removed, are not worthy of some reverence and some respect. When you talk about the stigma upon those who are affected by this law, what kind of a stigma do you cast upon those men who, in this Hall and in the other Hall of Congress, passed the laws that they believed best and necessary to save the Government and to protect it after it was saved?

I do not expect to be called upon in two or three days to pass a vote of thanks to these men for removing the little faint stigma that is supposed to rest upon them, but I do expect, if I live a few years longer, to see such resolutions offered here and passed here, if there is power to pass them, as will remove all distinctions between loyalty and treachery in the past and all that could be a warning to the people in the future. I expect to see the soldiers of the confederate army placed on the pension-roll, if the votes of my opponents on that side of the Chamber can place them there, for the very same reason given by the Senator from Alabama, that the people of the South, including within this term all those who were opposed to the Union, have to contribute part of the money to pay the pensions. The reasoning is just the same which the Senator from Alabama has spoken of now. He says if his people support the Army they should receive the benefits of the places in that Army, because they pay part of the expenses.

Sir, I say that we can not advance any faster than we have in the last fifteen years in removing all traces of the opprobrium of the rebellion; and so proceeding, perhaps in the next five years there will be bills introduced here and advocated here, ay, and passed here, putting upon the pension-rolls the names of confederate soldiers because they were confederate soldiers.

I did not open this discussion. I would not bring up these sectional questions. Our friends on the other side entreat us for God's sake to keep still about old past issues, and yet day after day in speeches, and week after week in amendments or in bills, we would be the dumbest brutes under God's heavens if we did not see that their bills and their amendments necessarily open in the minds of Northern people all these old sectional issues. Let them sleep; be patient and be quiet; and let the laws of the land remain.

Gentlemen condemn the opening of sectional issues here when every day in their bills they revive the thoughts and the feelings connected with them; and if one of us says a word on this side of the Chamber we are taunted to our hearts' content with bringing forward sectional issues, reviving the past, bringing up the old things that ought to have been forgotten. We must say no word here in behalf of those who made our laws which you would repeal. We must say no word in favor of and in honor of our soldiers. We must say no word here in the line of keeping up to some feeble extent the distinction between the loyal soldiers and the disloyal confederates.

I am not prepared to vote for this amendment. I am not prepared to vote for it as it is proposed to be modified. I think if there is no good object in it except to carry insult to the framers of this law and to carry insult to every Northern soldier and every loyal man it had better remain where it is. It has no business in this bill anyway. It is a matter of public policy, a matter of public concern about which Congress can legislate independently of fastening it upon an Army bill.

Gentlemen say they will not support this measure; they do not like to vote for this kind of a bill with that clause of the old law remaining. They are not going to vote for the bill anyway. Whoever dreams that the Senator from Alabama will vote for this bill? And yet he tells us that he can not be asked to support such a bill as this. I do not expect any vote on that side of the Chamber in favor of this bill in the end when it comes to its passage.

Mr. LOGAN. Two or three.

Mr. CONGER. I might expect one or two Union soldiers that I referred to, and I do not know but that there may be others who were Union men during the war; but why do those Senators who for years and years, with their compatriots in the other House, have opposed the presence and the use and the existence of an army anywhere until they succeeded in driving them entirely from their borders—why do they want an army at all or to have it increased at all? Not one man will vote for it, in my judgment, among the Senators on that side who joined with their colleagues in the House years ago in destroying and driving away from the whole South every man who wore the blue on any and every pretense unless it was along the borders of the Rio Grande when the Mexicans were coming over to steal cattle. Then our Texas Senators and members of the House prayed loudly for the Army to keep off thieves, not to protect life, not to protect the rights of citizens, not to put down insurrection, but to protect the ranches of Texas against the inroads of Mexican cattle-thieves. Then there were bills to increase the Army, and bills to call out new regiments temporarily, and bills for all kinds of things, because cattle were in danger. Who ever heard of such bills when human life was in danger? Who ever heard such a demand when the rights and the liberties of hundreds and of thousands of our citizens, either old citizens or newly made citizens, enfranchised citizens, were jeopardized and endangered? Who then ever heard of a call for troops, or who would permit troops to be in a neighborhood where those outrages were inflicted? But whenever property is in danger, whenever the long-horned steer is in danger of being taken across the Rio Grande toward Mexico, then the whole South rises up with indignation that the Army is so small and demands its increase, and demands that its Senators protect the long-horns of the Texas steer and prevent his being driven away by the Mexican greasers. [Laughter.]

Let this matter rest a while. I do not think we want to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to-day. I think we can get along without it for a little while longer. It has called forth these pathetic appeals from the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Florida. The appeal of the latter was most touching to me. The truth is, that when the Senator from Florida makes one of those delicate appeals to my tender susceptibilities I always have to break up for fear I shall be led astray. [Laughter.] Generally I rely upon him to stand by the side of the Constitution of my country. The Lord knows he is never wanting when there is any possible chance to defend the Constitution of my country, and I thank God for it. There are one or two others that I rely upon in a smaller degree on such occasions, but the Senator from Florida I never have any hesitation about. I say to my friends here that if there is an unconstitutional provision in any bill, they need not worry about it; the Senator from Florida, thank God, is at his post, and we are safe yet. [Laughter.]

But when he does appeal to me in those dulcet notes of his to forgive the past and forget the past, when he convinces me in such a logical and impassioned and delicate way that the North, although possibly right, and the South, although in those days possibly wrong; yet by a curious logic, by a curious chain of argument, which he knows so well how to use, he wraps himself around my tender susceptibilities and carries me off with him. Why, he caught the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to-day; even he was yielding this point, not because his judgment was affected by these remarks, but because his tender susceptibilities were aroused. That is what I complain of. [Laughter.]

And the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], who has retired from the conflict now, he too desired to have it understood by the American people that in his bosom or somewhere around there was a great magnanimous heart, easily touched and affected by the sorrows and the sadness which the Senator from Louisiana knows so well how to portray in language pathetic, touching, affecting.

I do not know how many on this side or on the other side desire to vote in favor of this amendment, but I rose to say just a word or two finally in excuse of those who might vote for it, because it is hard to resist these touching appeals to our delicate susceptibilities. I have had to struggle against it to the utmost limit of my power for fear of being led astray by the persuasive eloquence of the Senator from Florida and the touching allusions of my friend from Louisiana. I hope I shall be able to resist them both.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. BERRY. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, the Chair is informed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). On all questions connected with this bill I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. BECK (when Mr. VANCE'S name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. The Senator from North Carolina would vote "yea," if present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. JACKSON. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. BLAIR. My colleague [Mr. PIKE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. BECK (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted "yea," but I am reminded that I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is now necessarily absent. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I will announce for the last time that my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is absent on account of sickness in his family, and is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Berry,	Coke,	Gray,	Payne,
Brown,	Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Butler,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Fair,	Mahone,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—25.

Blair,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Hale,	Platt,	Teller,
Chace,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Sabin,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Dolph.	McMillan,	Sherman,
Evarts,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,

ABSENT—26.

Aldrich,	George,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Allison,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Beck,	Harris,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Blackburn,	Harrison,	Miller,	Vance,
Camden,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vest.
Cullom,	Jackson,	Palmer,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pike,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply desire to state very briefly my reason for voting against this bill. It is not for the reasons assigned by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] at all. It is not because I apprehend any danger from the increase of the Army; but it is because I think it better to appropriate the money which will be necessary to pay the expenses of this increase to some other purposes; for instance, the manufacture of cannon, or the building of fortifications, or the construction of a navy, or some object which I think is very much more needful to the country than the increase of the Army. I have not the slightest objection to the Army or to its increase at the proper time. I do not think that time has arrived, and I shall therefore vote againt the bill.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say only that I am opposed to this bill, because, in the first place, I do not believe there is any need for an increase of the Army now. Ten years ago it was the opinion of the Congress of the United States that the Army ought to be reduced from thirty thousand to twenty-five thousand, and it was so reduced at a time when there was more need for an army than there is now, for there was more likelihood of disturbance in the country in a variety of ways and the Indian problem was in a far less satisfactory condition than it is now.

When the Army was so reduced by gentlemen who do not maintain the same views of politics that I do, and when the country has been carried on successfully with an army that could not be enlisted above twenty-five thousand men from that time to this, that we should be called upon now, after a change of administration which professes to be for reform and economy in expenditures, to increase the Army of the United States by five thousand men and add two hundred officers to our already top-heavy army establishment, so far as officers are concerned, seems to me to be so impolitic, that I, for one, will not vote for any such bill. If that is what we are to offer to the country as the first fruit of the victory of the great party to which I have the honor to belong, I will not be entrapped in that way.

Mr. HAWLEY. It ought to be said that when the reduction was originally made it was not done upon its merits, or, if I may use the expression, fairly, because it was done by an amendment to an Army appropriation bill, and many measures that got through used to get through (until we abandoned that process, as I hope we have now) upon appropriation bills that could not have received the approval of the two Houses upon an independent vote. I do not believe that the reduction of the Army would have carried then if put upon its own merits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECK (when his name was called). I would vote against the bill but for the fact that I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who is now absent.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] would vote "yea" on the passage of this bill. I am paired with him, and if he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL (when Mr. CULLOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VEST], who is detained from the Senate Chamber by illness, is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when Mr. EDMUNDS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who would vote "nay," and my colleague, I understand, would vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). I again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] with the Senater from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is against this bill. I am for it.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I would vote "yea," if I were not paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] who announced his pair with my colleague [Mr. PIKE]. Did the Senator from Mississippi also vote?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I declined to vote on account of the pair.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood it so, but others supposed the Senator voted. I understood that he declined to vote.

Mr. BECK. I announced my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I desire to withdraw that announcement and to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sabin,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Dawes,	Logan,	Payne,	Spooner,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Platt,	Stanford.
Evarts,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,

NAYS—31.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Berry,	Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Bowen,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Fair,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Chace,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hale,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—25.

Aldrich,	George,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Allison,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Manderson,	Vance,
Butler,	Harrison,	Miller,	Vest.
Camden,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,
Cullom,	Jackson,	Palmer,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pike,

So the bill was rejected.

C. B. BRYAN & CO.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask leave to make a report which I should have made this morning from the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the resolution (Order of Business No. 359) to refer the claim of C. B. Bryan & Co. to the Court of Claims, to report it favorably.

ADMISSION OF WASHINGTON—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I beg the attention of the Senate for a moment to a matter of concern to us all. The regular order of business is the bill in charge of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] for the admission of the Territory of Washington as a State. I desire very much to have the consideration of House bill 1297 authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Library, and I shall be very glad to come to an understanding with the Senator from Connecticut upon that subject, not to proceed with it perhaps now, but I am satisfied from the previous consideration which the Senate has given to this identical bill for years past that it can be passed, if I can secure its consideration, in a very short time.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator desire to get consideration for it this evening?

Mr. VOORHEES. I should say not. ["No!" "No!"] It is late.

Mr. PLATT. Will it not answer the purpose of the Senator to call it up in the morning hour to-morrow? The unfinished business is for 2 o'clock.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wanted to arrest the attention of the Senate, and if it be agreeable to the Senate I will call it up after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow, satisfied that it will take but a small portion of the morning hour to pass it. If the Senator from Connecticut will assent to that arrangement I shall be obliged to him, and I am satisfied that it will not interfere with his bill.

Mr. PLATT. The bill for the admission of Washington Territory does not become the order of business until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be no special orders during the morning hour.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I give notice that to-morrow, after the completion of the morning business proper, not the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to consider the Library bill.

Mr. BERRY. On several different occasions I have given notice that I should call up a bill pending on the Calendar. I gave notice a few days ago that on the conclusion of the Army bill I would ask the Senate to take up that bill. I can not consent to any arrangement by which the bill of the Senator from Indiana shall be called up in the morning, because I expect to ask the Senate to take up the bill of which I gave notice before the Army bill was acted on.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say to the Senate that there is a great accumulation of pension business upon the Calendar, and I give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the Library bill I shall ask the Senate to dispose of the private pension bills, and also of Order of Business 347, being the bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 7, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress, with a view to appropriate legislation in the premises, a report of the Secretary of State, with certain correspondence touching the treaty right of Chinese subjects other than laborers "to go and come of their own free will and accord."

In my annual message of the 8th of December last I said:

"In the application of the acts lately passed to execute the treaty of 1880, restrictive of the immigration of Chinese laborers in the United States, individual cases of hardship have occurred beyond the power of the Executive to remedy, and calling for judicial determination."

These cases of individual hardship are due to the ambiguous and defective provisions of the acts of Congress approved respectively on the 6th May, 1882, and 5th July, 1884. The hardship has in some cases been remedied by the action of the courts. In other cases, however, where the phraseology of the statutes has appeared to be conclusive against any discretion on the part of the officers charged with the execution of the law, Chinese persons expressly entitled to free admission under the treaty have been refused a landing and sent back to the country whence they came, without being afforded any opportunity to show in the courts or otherwise their right to the privilege of free ingress and egress which it was the purpose of the treaty to secure.

In the language of one of the judicial determinations of the Supreme Court of the United States to which I have referred, "the supposition should not be indulged that Congress, while professing to faithfully execute the treaty stipulations, and recognizing the fact that they secure to a certain class the right to go from and come to the United States, intended to make its protection depend upon the performance of conditions which it was physically impossible to perform." (U. S. R. 112, page 554, Chew Heong v. U. S.)

The act of July 5, 1884, imposes such an impossible condition in not providing for the admission, under proper certificate, of Chinese travelers of the exempted classes in the cases most likely to arise in ordinary commercial intercourse.

The treaty provisions governing the case are as follows:

"ARTICLE I. * * * The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. * * *

"ART. II. Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, * * * shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation."

Section 6 of the amended Chinese immigration act of 1884 purports to secure this treaty right to the exempted classes named by means of prescribed certificates of their status, which certificates shall be the prima facie and the sole permissible evidence to establish a right of entry into the United States. But it provides in terms for the issuance of certificates in two cases only:

(a) Chinese subjects departing from a port of China; and

(b) Chinese persons (i. e., of the Chinese race) who may at the time be subjects of some foreign government other than China, and who may depart for the United States from the ports of such other foreign government.

A statute is certainly most unusual which, purporting to execute the provisions of a treaty with China in respect of Chinese subjects, enacts strict formalities as regards the subjects of other governments than that of China.

It is sufficient that I should call the earnest attention of Congress to the circumstance that the statute makes no provision whatever for the somewhat numerous class of Chinese persons who, retaining their Chinese subjection in some countries other than China, desire to come from such countries to the United States.

Chinese merchants have trading operations of magnitude throughout the world. They do not become citizens or subjects of the country where they may temporarily reside and trade; they continue to be subjects of China, and to them the explicit exemption of the treaty applies. Yet, if such a Chinese subject, the head of a mercantile house at Hong-Kong or Yokohama or Honolulu or Havana or Colon, desires to come from any of these places to the United States he is met with the requirement that he must produce a certificate, in prescribed form and in the English tongue, issued by the Chinese Government. If there be at the foreign place of his residence no representative of the Chinese Government competent to issue a certificate in the prescribed form, he can obtain none, and is under the provisions of the present law unjustly debarred from entry into the United States. His usual Chinese passport will not suffice, for it is not in the form which the act prescribes shall be the sole permissible evidence of his right to land. And he can obtain no such certificate from the government of his place of residence, because he is not a subject or citizen thereof, "at the time," or at any time.

There being, therefore, no statutory provision prescribing the terms upon which Chinese persons, resident in foreign countries but not subjects or citizens of such countries, may prove their status and rights as members of the exempted classes in the absence of a Chinese representative in such country, the Secretary of the Treasury, in whom the execution of the act of July 5, 1884, was vested, undertook to remedy the omission by directing the revenue officers to recognize as lawful certificates those issued in favor of Chinese subjects by the Chinese consular and diplomatic officers at the foreign port of departure, when visaed by the United States representative thereat. This appears to be a just application of the spirit of the law, although enlarging its letter, and in adopting this rule he was controlled by the authority of high judicial decisions as to what evidence is necessary to establish the fact that an individual Chinaman belongs to the exempted class.

He, however, went beyond the spirit of the act, and the judicial decisions, by providing, in a circular dated January 14, 1885, for the original issuance of such a certificate by the United States consular officer at the port of departure, in the absence of a Chinese diplomatic or consular representative thereat. For it is clear that the act of Congress contemplated the intervention of the United States consul only in a supervisory capacity, his function being to check the proceeding and see that no abuse of the privilege followed. The power or duty of original certification is wholly distinct from that supervisory function. It either dispenses with the foreign certificate altogether, leaving the consular visa to stand alone and sufficient, or else it combines in one official act the distinct functions of certification and verification of the fact certified.

The official character attaching to the consular certification contemplated by the unamended circular of January 14, 1885, is to be borne in mind. It is not merely prima facie evidence of the status of the bearer, such as the courts may admit in their discretion; it was prescribed as an official attestation, on the stength of which the customs officers at the port of entry were to admit the bearer without further adjudication of his status unless question should arise as to the truth of the certificate itself.

It became, therefore, necessary to amend the circular of January 14, 1885, and this was done on the 13th of June following, by striking out the clause prescribing original certification of status by the United States consuls. The effect of this amendment is to deprive any certificate the United States consuls may issue, of the value it purported to possess, as sole permissible evidence under the statute when its issuance was prescribed by Treasury regulations. There is, however, nothing to prevent consuls giving certificates of facts within their knowledge, to be received as evidence in the absence of statutory authentication.

The complaint of the Chinese minister, in his note of March 24, 1886, is that the Chinese merchant Lay Sang, of the house of King Lee & Co., of San Francisco, having arrived at San Francisco from Hong-Kong, and exhibited a certificate of the United States consul at Hong-Kong as to his status as a merchant and consequently exempt under the treaty, was refused permission to land, and was sent back to Hong-Kong by the steamer which brought him. While the certificate he bore was doubtless insufficient under the present law, it is to be remembered that there is at Hong-Kong no representative of the Government of China competent or authorized to issue the certificate required by the statute. The intent of Congress to legislate in execution of the treaty is thus defeated by a prohibition directly contrary to the treaty; and conditions are exacted which, in the words of the Supreme Court hereinbefore quoted, "it was physically impossible to perform."

This anomalous feature of the act should be reformed as speedily as possible, in order that the occurrence of such cases may be avoided, and the imputation removed which would otherwise rest upon the good faith of the United States in the execution of their solemn treaty engagements.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 6, 1886.

SUBSTITUTE EMPLOYÉS IN THE DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information in regard to the employment of substitutes in the several Departments, and transmitting a list of substitute employés in the Treasury Department, showing their respective home post-offices and the compensation received by each; also the names and salaries of the regular employés whose places are so filled; which was referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that that communication be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted March 24, 1886, of which the following is a copy:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General be requested, respectively, to inform the House, if not incompatible with the public service, whether or not employés in their respective Departments are permitted to employ substitutes to perform their duties, and whether or not such substitutes are employed or appointed; and, if so, by whom so employed or appointed, and the amount of compensation paid such substitutes and by whom paid, and the amount of compensation paid the regular employés during the time such substitute is employed and by whom paid, together with a list of such employés, their home post-offices, and date of their appointment, and a list of such substitutes, their home post-offices, and date of their appointment, and whether or not any of such substitutes are assigned to duties of positions included in the classified civil service, and whether or not such substitutes have passed examination by the United States Civil Service Commission and been certified for such appointment; and if such subemployment or subappointment is had or permitted, by what authority it is so had or permitted."

In reply thereto I would say that when employés of this Department are obliged to be absent on account of sickness, it has been customary to allow substitutes to act in their places if additional clerical force is required during their absence for the proper transaction of public business. The designation of such substitutes is made by the direction of this Department, and the substitutes so designated are compensated out of the regular salaries of the persons whom they represent. They perform such duties as may be required of them from time to time in the bureau or division to which they are attached.

This Department is not informed as to whether such substitutes have passed examination by the United States Civil Service Commission, as they are designated to said positions without certification from said commission.

Inclosed herewith is a list giving the names of such substitutes, their home post-offices so far as known to this Department, and date of their designation; also the names of the regular employés who are represented by said substitutes, their home post-offices, and date of their appointment, together with the amount of compensation allowed said substitutes and the salaries of said employés.

Respectfully yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Name of substitute.	Home post-office.	Date of designation.	Compensation of substitute.	Salary of regular employé.	Name of regular employé.	Home post-office.	Date of appointment.
Allen, Mrs. H. E.	District of Columbia	Mar. 22, 1886	$840 00	$1,000 00	Renfro, George W.	Kentucky	Sept. 29, 1863
Brown, Miss K. T.	do	Jan. 23, 1886	900 00	900 00	Brown, Miss F. R.	District of Columbia	May 1, 1869
Carter, Miss V	do	Nov. 19, 1885	500 00	900 00	Korhaunner, Mrs. Tonnia	do	Nov. 2, 1874
Cartwright, Miss S. M.	do	Mar. 20, 1886	700 00	1,000 00	Crane, Miss K. G.	Massachusetts	Sept. 1, 1869
Cole, Mrs. E. K.	do	Feb. 6, 1886	800 00	1,400 00	Duvall, Louis	Texas	June 16, 1877
Doty, Mrs. A. W.	do	Aug. 7, 1885	720 00	900 00	Stockdale, Mrs. A. P.	Louisiana	Feb. 17, 1870
Dorsett, Mrs. B. M.	do	Feb. 11, 1886	700 00	1,200 00	Frank, Charles A.	Massachusetts	Sept. 13, 1884
Fox, Miss Imogene	do	Oct. 8, 1885	800 00	1,400 00	Chase, William H.	New York	Apr. 2, 1880
Godey, Miss C. C.	do	Mar. 4, 1886	500 00	900 00	Harkness, Mrs. M. C.	Connecticut	Nov. 4, 1884
Harper, Miss Annie	do	Dec. 14, 1885	500 00	900 00	Harper, Mrs. S. F.	Indiana	Oct. —, 1875
Heap, Miss Maggie	do	Dec. 15, 1885	600 00	1,000 00	Heap, Mr. E. L.	District of Columbia	Aug. 16, 1871
Hayden, William F.	do	Jan. 11, 1886	840 00	1,200 00	Reese, Henry F.	Alabama	July 26, 1884
Doran, Thomas F.	do	Jan. 23, 1886	1,200 00	1,800 00	Goodall, F. H	New Hampshire	May 18, 1864
Herron, Peter H	do	Feb. 3, 1886	900 00	1,200 00	Miller, Charles	Pennsylvania	Oct. 5, 1874
Jones, R. L.	do	Mar. 12, 1886	360 00	720 00	Hancock, F. F.	Maryland	Aug. 3, 1885
Warfield, L. G.	do	Jan. 4, 1886	720 00	720 00	Armstrong, J. L.	do	July 30, 1885
Moulthrop, Mrs. J. F.	do	May 20, 1885	840 00	1,200 00	Taggart, Daniel	New Jersey	Sept. 4, 1869
Miller, Miss Alice	do	Oct. 16, 1885	840 00	1,200 00	Shelly, R. L	Louisiana	Jan. 1, 1880
McLeod, Miss Mary	do	Nov. 16, 1885	450 00	900 00	McLeod, Miss Maggie	Pennsylvania	Jan. 15, 1878
Mann, Miss H. N.	do	Oct. 14, 1885	840 00	1,200 00	Pancoast, Miss M. E.	New Jersey	July —, 1869
Moore, Miss Agnes	do	Oct. 29, 1885	720 00	900 00	Alexander, Miss M. C.	West Virginia	Dec. 6, 1869
Mulquin, Miss Mary	do	Mar. 8, 1886	720 00	1,000 00	Fisher, Miss Ellen P.	Maine	Oct. 21, 1865
Nichols, Miss J. W	do	Oct. 1, 1885	800 00	1,600 00	Jones, F. W	Illinois	May 2, 1881
Petingale, Samuel K.	do	May 22, 1885	900 00	1,800 00	Petingale, Thomas.	New York	Mar. 10, 1863
Peacock, Miss Sarah	do	Nov. 14, 1885	480 00	660 00	Millar, Miss C. V.	Colorado	June 1, 1881
Reynolds, Miss Maud	do	Aug. 6, 1885	900 00	1,800 00	Reynolds, J. E.	New York	Apr. 29, 1872
Rickey, Joseph M.	do	Mar. 9, 1886	1,000 00	1,800 00	Ellis, Zabina	do	Sept. 24, 1864
Ryan, Mrs. H E	do	Mar. 3, 1886	720 00	1,000 00	Leet, Mrs. S. B.	Pennsylvania	Dec. 19, 1881
Stahl, Mrs. Lillian	do	Mar. 3, 1886	500 00	900 00	Plant, Miss M. A.	District of Columbia	Dec. 11, 1871
Varden, Miss E. R. T.	do		900 00	900 00	Varden, Mrs. A. C	Maryland	June 8, 1868
Yarnell, Mrs. R. A.	do	Mar. 11, 1886	800 00	1,400 00	Jennings, Halsey	New Jersey	July 21, 1884
Wood, Mrs. E. T.	do	Nov. 16, 1885	1,000 00	1,400 00	Blake, James	Kansas	Apr. 4, 1878

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information in respect to the employment of substitutes in the several Departments, and inclosing a circular order of the Secretary of War, dated July 2, 1883, prohibiting such employment in that Department; which was referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

PEREZ DICKINSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the order and findings of fact of that court in the case of Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of the firm of Cowan & Dickinson, vs. United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LATE TREASURER NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from Hon. B. F. Butler, late acting treasurer of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, asking for a re-examination of his accounts as such acting treasurer; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE RESOLUTION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, in accordance with the rule, a concurrent resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, authorizing the printing of a revised list of papers touching unpaid claims on account of French spoliations prior to July 31, 1801, transmitted by the President on the 17th instant; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PIDCOCK, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. KELLEY, for three days.

To Mr. NEGLEY, for three days.

To Mr. HAYDEN, for six days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 73) authorizing the printing of committee reports;

A bill (S. 683) granting a pension to Henry O. Hill;

A bill (S. 1363) granting a pension to William Blanchard;

A bill (S. 1127) to amend and correct the act approved March 3, 1885, granting a pension to Sarah Hague;

A bill (S. 811) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Gilman;
A bill (S. 197) to increase the pension of Florence Murray; and
A bill (S. 814) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline M. Putnam.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1270) to authorize the Mississippi Water-Power and Boom Company, of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 18) for the further distribution of the report of the Public Land Commission.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on yesterday there was a privileged report pending, being a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill providing for the erection of a public building at San Antonio, Tex. On the question of the adoption of the report of the conference committee the point that no quorum had voted was made, and the House accordingly adjourned.

The question now is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The question was taken.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, demanded a division.

The House proceeded to divide on the adoption of the report.

Before the count was concluded,

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not insist upon a further count. Evidently a majority is in favor of the report.

So (no further count being demanded) the conference report was concurred in.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the conference committee was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. FARQUHAR. On behalf of the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. BLAND. If the resolution does not give rise to debate I shall not object.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service is hereby authorized and empowered to have printed the evidence taken in the investigation under the resolution of the House requiring said committee to investigate certain charges against the employés of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported back with sundry amendments the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to reserve all points of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. Inasmuch as the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures lost yesterday, which had been assigned to it under the special order, I move to dispense with the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to dispense with the call of committees for reports. This requires a vote of two-thirds.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 114, noes 22.

So (further count not being called for, and two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—HURD VS. ROMEIS.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Under leave of the House heretofore given I present the views of part of the minority of the Committee on Elections on the contested-election case of Hurd vs. Romeis, State of Ohio.

The views of the minority were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent to present some adverse reports of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the consideration of bills, which begins at twelve minutes of 1 o'clock.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to reduce the amount of silver in the dollar and to increase the value of the standard dollar.

Objection was made.

CONSIDERATION OF FREE-SHIP BILL.

The Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests was called.

Mr. DUNN. I am directed by the Select Committee on Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests to call up from the House Calendar a resolution heretofore reported by that committee.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 24th day of April next, be set apart for general debate on House bill 1219, commonly known as the "free-ship bill," and that the following Tuesday and Wednesday, the 27th and 28th days of April, after the morning hours for the call of committees for reports and for the consideration of bills, be set apart for the further consideration and disposal of said bill, the previous question on which, and all amendments thereto, then pending, shall be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock on said last-named day.

The committee reported the resolution with the following amendments:

Strike out "24th day of April" and insert "22d day of May."

Strike out "27th and 28th days of April" and insert "25th and 26th days of May."

Mr. DUNN. This resolution simply sets apart three days for the consideration of what is known as the free-ship bill. Saturday, the 22d of May, is for general debate only, and the Tuesday and Wednesday following are to be devoted to the concluding consideration of the bill. It is thought that the bill is of too much importance to be presented in the House within the two hours allowed for the call of committees for consideration of bills; and at that late day in the session the business of the House will be so far advanced and so many appropriation bills, it may be presumed, will be out of the way that those three days may well be devoted to that important subject. Unless there is a desire to make some suggestion or change I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 9.

So (further count not being called for) the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN COMMISSION.

The Select Committee on Expenditures for Indians and Yellowstone Park was called.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am instructed to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 6973) to provide for the appointment of a commission to inspect and report on the condition of Indians, Indian affairs, and for other purposes, heretofore reported by the Select Committee on Expenditures for Indians and Yellowstone Park.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill so that it may be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I should like to hear the bill read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the bill read subject to objection.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commission, to consist of six persons, three of whom shall be detailed from the officers of the Army not below the rank of ——, who shall report to the Secretary of the Interior for duty, the other members to be appointed from civil life or detailed from officers in the service of the Department of the Interior. It shall be the duty of the said commissioners, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to inspect from time to time, as he may require, the condition of the Indians of the various tribes and bands on the different reservations under the care, control, or jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. That it shall be their duty in making such inspection to ascertain and report in detail as to the exact condition and needs of the Indians; what steps are necessary to be taken on behalf of the Government to improve their situation in the direction of their self-support and complete civilization; what, if any, of the reservations may be reduced in area, and what portion thereof, not needed for Indian occupation, may be held by the Government in trust for the Indians having title thereto by law or treaty, and disposed of for their benefit; what, if any, Indians may, with their consent, be removed to other reservations, with a view to their concentration, and the sale, on their behalf and for their benefit, of their abandoned reservations; what, if any, lands reserved by executive orders for Indian occupation are no longer needed for such purpose and may be restored to the public domain; what Indian lands now held in common should be allotted in severalty, the quantity to be allotted to heads of families, unmarried adults, orphans, or others, and what, if any, Indians are not provided with or located upon reservations or land which may be patented to them; what is the exact number of Indians belonging to each tribe or band, the extent to which they are civilized and engaged in industrial pursuits, and what occupation is best suited to their circumstances and surroundings; whether they should be furnished with implements of agriculture or stock, and of what kind; in what cases and to what extent the support of the Government should be withdrawn; in what manner the annuities or other funds appropriated or payable by the United States to the Indians under existing treaties and laws should be expended to insure the greatest and most permanent benefit to them; wherein and in what manner the present plans of procuring and distributing Indian supplies should be changed; the conduct and fitness of the several Indian agents and agency employés; the number, kind, and qualification of employés required for the proper conduct of the service at each agency and on each reservation; where schools should be established or discontinued; the relative efficiency of the Indian reservation schools as compared with those Indian training schools not on reservations; the best plans and methods for accomplishing the educational and industrial training of the Indian youth, and to make such training effective for their self-support; in what manner and to what extent the Indians upon the reservations can be placed under the protection of our laws and subjected to their penalties, and which, if any, Indians should be invested with the rights of citizenship; the extent to which the Indian reservations are occupied or intruded upon by unauthorized persons, and the best methods for correcting this evil, and to prevent the introduction upon Indian reservations, or the sale to Indians, of intoxicating liquors, and of arms and ammunition to such tribes or bands whose facilities for procuring such things should be further restricted.

SEC. 3. That it shall be their duty to arrange with the various tribes and bands, in the manner and upon the terms most favorable and just alike to the Indians and to the United States, and to procure the consent of the Indians thereto, in accordance with the treaty, law, or customs governing the tribes or bands in such matters, for the cession or relinquishment of any portion of their reservations; for their removal to other reservations, and consolidation with other Indians thereon; for any changes in the manner of expending their annuities, and, generally, other matters calculated to promote their advancement and civilization. All such arrangements as may be thus made and agreed upon to be reported to the Secretary of the Interior, who may, in his discretion, approve them in whole or in part: Provided, That no such arrangement thus made which involves the change of any existing treaty or law shall be binding or operative until ratified by Congress.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may direct any two or more of the commissioners to take charge of, superintend, and put in operation the plans, not inconsistent with existing laws or treaties, which he may decide upon for the improvement of the condition of any of the tribes or bands of Indians. Where resurvey of the lines or remarking of the corners of old surveys may be found necessary in order to locate the Indians upon allotments of land in severalty upon any of the reservations, the work may, when practicable, be done under the direction of competent officers of the Army, to be detailed for that purpose.

SEC. 5. That the commissioners appointed from civil life under the provisions of the first section of this act shall be paid at the rate of —— dollars per diem while actually and necessarily employed in the service; and that each member of the commission detailed or appointed shall be paid his actual and necessary traveling expenses, including transportation; and for the purposes of this act the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior:

For payment of the traveling expenses, including transportation of the members of the commission, $——.

For payment of the per diem for services of the civil members of the commission, $——.

For expenses of resurveying any portions of the reservations, for ascertaining the exact number of Indians of the different tribes and bands, as hereinbefore required, for such clerical services as may be absolutely required, for stationery, rent of offices when necessary and away from Indian reservations, and for other necessary expenses, $25,000.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect from and after the date of its passage.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. No objection is made, and the bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary for me to occupy, for the present at least, only a few moments in explaining the purpose of this bill. The Indian appropriation bill which passed the House a few days ago provided for an expenditure of $10,000 for a commission to determine what policy should be adopted by the Government in regard to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota.

The purpose involved in this bill is the same as in that provision of the Indian appropriation bill, except that this bill is designed to cover the entire field of the Indian reservations and of the Indian agencies and of the subjects connected with their administration. That appropriation of $10,000 for the organization of the commission provided for in the Indian bill will of course be dispensed with if this bill becomes a law, as the commission here provided for will cover the whole ground.

Bills are also pending in both Houses of Congress providing for organizing a similar commission to adjust the relations of the Government with the Indians in the section of country occupied by the Blackfeet, Assinaboines, and other tribes north of the Missouri River, in the Territory of Montana, also in the great and important field of the Indian Territory. If this bill becomes a law, as the commission herein provided for will cover the entire field, the other commissions will be unnecessary. This bill proposes to organize a commission composed of men of high standing and large experience, who will readjust on a permanent basis the whole Indian question.

The bill proposes that this commission shall be composed of six members, three taken from the Army and three from civil life. This will constitute quite a large commission; and it has been suggested that perhaps a smaller body would accomplish the work more speedily; but the recommendation comes to Congress from the President of the United States and also from the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the commission be composed of six members, and therefore that number has been provided for in the bill.

The three commissioners who are to be taken from civil life must, of course, have stated salaries, and one question left open is, what their compensation shall be. I suppose that the compensation of the civilian members of the commission should be substantially the same as that which will be received by the military members; and, in view of the propriety of that, I shall presently move an amendment providing that their pay shall be $10 a day while actually employed, which will be at the rate of something over $3,000 a year.

Mr. WELLBORN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLBORN. Is this to be a permanent commission?

Mr. HOLMAN. It will probably continue up to the limit of the appropriation. This appropriation, of course, will not extend beyond one year, and it is hoped that the whole field can be investigated and a proper report made upon the various subjects inside of that period. Yet gentlemen will see the field is a large one.

But in any event the commission will last only during the year for which the appropriation is made. I suggest the propriety of appropriating $9,000, or so much thereof as may be required, for the pay of the civilian members, and $10,000 to meet the current expenses of both the civilian and military members; for of course provision should be made for the traveling expenses of the whole commission. Judging from the experience which a recent committee of the House has had in investigating this Indian question in the field, I should think that $10,000 would be found an ample provision for expenses, especially if the War Department furnishes transportation beyond the railroad limits.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What is the real necessity for this commission? Can not the desired information be obtained through the head of the Indian Bureau?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, and I again call the attention of my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to the fact that we have already provided as to the House for a commission to cover a very small portion of this ground, which commission will not be required if this bill shall become a law. For instance, the Chippewas of Minnesota occupy quite a number of small reservations there—Mille Lac, White Earth, Red Lake, and others.

We have provided an appropriation of $10,000 for a commission, to be appointed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to adjust the relations of the Government with those Indians. It is also proposed to organize a similar commission in regard to the Indians occupying lands north of the Missouri River in Montana, as I have said, and bills for that purpose are now pending in both Houses; also as to the great Sioux reservation of Montana. In that region, as my friend will remember, we have the Black Feet, the Assinaboines, a portion of the Sioux, the Bloods, and some other fragments of tribes.

It will be seen that all these fragmentary commissions might be dispensed with and the cost greatly reduced by creating one general commission for the adjustment of the Indian questions now pressing, such as what amount of land shall be held by the Indians for themselves, what amount shall be set apart for them in severalty, what portions of the Indian lands shall be held by the United States in trust for the benefit of the tribes interested in them.

My friend will observe also that this bill does not apply merely to the general Indian reservations scattered throughout the Western country, but also to the Indian Territory. It is intended to cover the whole field of Indian affairs in all the details of administration. If any better plan than this can be suggested of course it ought to be adopted, but, as far as I am able to judge, this is the most satisfactory suggestion yet made.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It seems to me that there is great danger of our having too many of these commissions and of their getting into conflict with each other. There is a bill pending before the House, and likely to be reported immediately, providing for a commission for the Indian Territory alone, and that certainly would be in conflict with the one which this bill would create. A bill has already passed providing for a commission relating to a certain tribe. Now it does seem to me that we are in great danger in having too many Indian commissions, and I wish to say——

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman let me answer that point right here? The object of this proposed commission, as I have already remarked, is to cover the whole field. I repeat again, in the Indian appropriation bill we have provided for a discretionary expenditure of $10,000 on a commission in connection with the Chippewas in Minnesota, and, in addition to that, we are having pressed upon us the other bills I have mentioned, one providing for a commission in regard to the Northern Montana Indians and the other for a commission in regard to the Indian Territory. This bill is designed to avoid this multiplying of commissions. If this bill becomes a law those other commissions will be unnecessary, and it seems to me that the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior is entitled to great weight as to the best plan of dealing with this subject.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But, Mr. Speaker, we have now not only a Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but Indian agents for every one of these tribes, and special Indian agents, and what else have they to do but to gather this information and make their reports to their chief? I really can see no necessity for creating this new commission.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall regret very much if the gentleman from Iowa or any other gentleman believes that a mistake has been made in reporting this bill, and I hope I shall have his ear while I endeavor to convince him that some such agency as this is indispensable. Take a single instance, the lands of the Blackfeet and other tribes that I have referred to in Northern Montana.

Those lands are mostly held under executive orders. Now, what it may be proper for the Government to do as to the quantity of land to be set apart for those Indians which, if any of them can be removed to other reservations, which can be combined in one agency, how much of the land shall be held in trust for each tribe? These and other questions require the exercise of a high degee of intelligence and capacity for investigation. Another question which necessarily arises is whether these Indians or any of them are to remain on that international line? Here are 21,000,000 acres of land—a region of country almost as large as my own State—and several small tribes of Indians. These lands, as I have said, are mostly held under executive order.

Now, how much of those lands shall they continue to hold if they remain there? Can the Indians be peaceably removed from them? It is not a good region for agriculture. Can the Blackfeet Indians, for instance, be removed to the Joko reservation? I think they can be. Can the Sioux, still farther east, be removed to the Sioux reservation? Can the Bloods and the Piegans be removed to the Crow reservation? These questions all arise. There is not only required an efficient and able commission, but a commission invested with very extensive powers of investigation and adjustment, that all these questions shall be properly and finally settled at an early day. In view of the importance of these various questions it seems to me a commission of a less efficient and comprehensive character than the one proposed would hardly be adequate for the purpose.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman from Indiana does not reply to the point I make. We now know the area of each one of these reservations. We also know the Indian population there. Now, we are just as competent as anybody else to determine whether they can be confined to a smaller area. And if there is any lack of information on our part it seems to me the Indian agent there—the special agent or the resident agent—can supply such information without the expense of this additional commission, which appears to be a kind of "fifth wheel to the wagon." That is the point I make.

Mr. HOLMAN. But does not the gentleman from Iowa overlook one important fact? There are to be negotiations and agreements with these tribes, and all of them, to a greater or less extent, subject to approval either by the proper Department of the Government or by Congress touching the manner in which the lands shall be held, the portion which shall be set off to be held in trust for ultimate sale, and the investment of the proceeds, and innumerable other questions. For myself I will say—I do not know how the case might be with my colleagues on the committee which recently visited these reservations—that after having spent several months in this investigation I would not myself be able at the present time to determine exactly what would be just in reference to any one Indian tribe holding lands by executive order.

As to the Indians upon the smaller reservations—the Joko, the Umatilla, and all that small body of reservations west of the Rocky Mountains—it would not be difficult to determine exactly what should be done by the Government, to what extent the lands are not needed by the Indians, to what extent they should be sold, and in what manner they should be disposed of, or how divided, or how held. But when you come to consider the Navajoes and Apaches; when you take into consideration the Indian lands in Montana, the great Sioux and Crow reservations, and especially the Indian Territory, and consider whether or not the Indians farther west, the Cheyennes and Arapahoes and other western tribes, should be removed eastward and can be induced to remove eastward and the western portion of that Territory thrown open for settlement; to what extent Indians like the Sacs and Foxes and Kickapoos should hold their lands in severalty and by what tenure; whether they are now in a condition to take lands in severalty, and what portion of the lands should be assigned to the Indians farther east in lieu of the lands they now hold, and with a view to the concentration of the tribes in the eastern section of the Territory—all these questions, it seems to me, require the most careful investigation and all of them require patient negotiation, and I think no less efficient and comprehensive commission than that which this bill proposes to organize would be suitable for the purpose. It involves one of the greatest subjects Congress has ever considered of internal policy.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order at this time to offer an amendment to the first section of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is on the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield, as a matter of course, for any amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Interior," in the ninth line of section 1, insert:

"Provided, That members of Congress may be appointed to the places to be filled by civilians; and that those who may be appointed on this commission and who are in receipt of salaries from the Government shall receive no additional compensation; but their traveling and other expenses shall be paid on sworn vouchers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if this commission is to be appointed, it ought to be so constituted as to be of the greatest practical efficiency. The bill proposes that there shall be six commissioners, to consist of three military officers and three persons to be taken from civil life or detailed from the Department of the Interior. Now it seems to me if such a commission is to be appointed, there ought to be no implications in the bill that members of Congress may not constitute a portion of the commission. I am induced to offer this amendment from the conviction that if, as civilian members of the commission, such gentlemen could be appointed as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who has presented this bill, or the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]—all these gentlemen being so well qualified by reason of their great familiarity with this subject—efficiency, utility, and value would be given to the results of the commission. Such gentlemen would understand the policy and purpose of Congress; they would carry into this work the experience obtained during the investigation of last summer, which gave them much very valuable information in relation to the management of our Indian affairs.

I trust, if we are to adopt the commission, we will leave it in the power of the Government to select men of this description and of this character of experience to constitute a part of that commission, if they see proper to do so.

Mr. ROGERS. I have a suggestion to make to my friend from Texas in that connection.

Mr. REAGAN. I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. ROGERS. I favor the amendment, but, if it be adopted, the commission should be constituted, as I suggest, by permitting the President to detail these Army officers, and then the Speaker of the House of Representatives to select the members of Congress who shall form a part of it.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like that section to be amended, and I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas is better than the amendment I have offered, as it is calculated to secure a better commission than can be secured in any other way.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to an amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I yield to a further amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas is in harmony with the bill, and, as I have already stated, in my judgment will better accomplish the objects of the commission than the one I have submitted.

Mr. DORSEY. I move to strike out the words, in the seventh and eighth lines, "appointed from civil life or;" so it will read: "The other members to be detailed from officers in the service of the Department of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands these amendments are being offered by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; this is offered by consent.

The SPEAKER. Otherwise the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska would not be in order to perfect the bill while the other is pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand these amendments are all pending.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas may again be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. It will again be read.

The Clerk again read Mr. REAGAN'S amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas proposes an amendment which would be better than the one I have offered in accomplishing the purpose—that three military commissioners be appointed by the President, and that three members of Congress be appointed by the Speaker of this House. I think it would be better, and better accomplish the object.

Mr. HOLMAN. But if the amendment suggested becomes law the appointments would have to be made I think by the joint action of the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. This is to be a law and requires the action not only of the House but of the Senate, and therefore I suggest this ought to be left discretionary with the President, for the reason the duties involved in the commission may require a very considerable period. Negotiations with some of these tribes may be tedious, and my friend will discover it will be especially so with the smaller bands of Indians—with the small bands in Montana north of the Missouri River. Many small tribes are to be considered.

I am confident that there will be tedious negotiations with many of those small tribes as to the amount of land to be held by them or as to removals. The Indian is intense in his local attachments. I think no Indian should remain on the international boundary-line. A special effort should be made to move them away. I do not think any permanent reservation should be established on the international line, for the Indians of the North are constantly intermingling with our tribes, and it is impossible to tell what Indians belong to the United States and what to British Columbia. There the duties of the commission would be tedious. I suggest to my friend it would be impracticable for a member of the House or Senate to engage in this duty if it should become protracted. At least I hope my friend will leave it discretionary with the President if it be deemed proper for such a provision to be inserted.

Mr. REAGAN. I overlooked the point suggested by the gentleman from Indiana that this is to be done under law, and therefore the selection had better be done by the President. I shall insist on the amendment I have offered. I wish to get that provision inserted in the bill, because the character of persons I have named, members of Congress who were engaged in that sort of investigation last summer and who have acquired so much information as they have displayed this session on the subject, would certainly be valuable on such a commission. Therefore I submit the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, from the fact that no member of Congress can give to this subject the time which ought to be given to it for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this bill.

It is true that a commission composed of members of Congress did during the last vacation visit the various Indian agencies of the country, and in this manner gained very much useful information. But a careful examination of that report will show that that investigation was limited and necessarily so, and that the members of the commission remained at each of these agencies so short a time as to have rendered it impossible for them to have had any practical negotiations with the Indians themselves with a view to carrying out the provisions of this bill. For the same reasons I am opposed to having any person employed in the Interior Department detailed for any such service. If there are such persons in that Department whose services are not needed they ought to be weeded out.

I undertake to say that the provisions of this bill impose upon the persons who may be appointed to perform the duties described by the bill a vast amount of labor, likely to occupy two, three, four, or even five years in order to secure their proper discharge. Look at the second section of the bill and see what is contemplated by it. Why it embraces the whole Indian problem.

It not only embraces the condition of the tribes in the aggregate, but each individual tribe in detail. This commission will be required to visit each agency and consult with each and every one of the headmen of the tribes with regard to the location of Indians upon lands in severalty instead of allowing them to occupy them, as under the present system, in common. That single provision of itself imposes a vast amount of labor upon any commission, and this must be apparent when I call the attention of the House to one single fact, that a few tribes of the great Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota, numbering only about fifteen thousand individuals of all sexes, composed of the Red Cloud, Cheyenne, Spotted Tail, and Standing Rock agencies, have set apart for their use and occupancy twenty-four million of acres of land, an area as large nearly as the State of Ohio.

Will any gentleman say that that vast empire shall be occupied by fifteen thousand persons to the exclusion of the white settlers of this country who are demanding homes? The best interests of the Indians themselves do not require it; and I am sure that none will deny that the best interests of the white men require that some provision should be made and at an early day by which this vast area of arable land may be opened to actual occupancy and settlement by our white people.

The duties required of this commission are of such a nature as make it physically impossible for it to perform them within any limited time, because, as I have said, if carried out as contemplated by this bill, they will be required to enter into negotiations with the various Indian tribes and the individual members of the tribes to determine whether certain portions of this land can be set apart to each individual family for its exclusive use and occupancy and the other portions of the reservations opened up to white settlement.

When you consider the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Indians of this country, numbering to-day not exceeding two hundred and sixty thousand people, occupy an area of country equal in extent to the whole of New England, and the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio combined—I say when you remember that this vast empire of the public domain is now set apart for the exclusive use of two hundred and sixty thousand Indians, and you remember the teeming millions that occupy the States to which I have referred, it must be apparent that the Indians can have no use for such a body of land.

Mr. CURTIN. But if you have given the Indians homes in exchange for lands taken from them, have you any right to take it away from them again?

Mr. SPRINGER. We do not propose to do so. This bill proposes to treat with them for the purpose of acquiring the right to go and settle the Indians upon lands in severalty by distributing the lands among them suitable for agricultural purposes, and then allow the other lands which are useless to them to be opened to actual settlement by white people. No more munificent provision could be made for the Indians than that contemplated by this bill.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the necessity for giving these large reservations to the Indians no longer exists. The purpose was undoubtedly in the beginning to give them a large area of country over which they might roam in search of game. The game has disappeared, and these lands are now only useful for agricultural and grazing purposes, and hence the necessity for these Indians occupying an immense, almost unlimited expanse of lands, beyond the necessities of the Indians themselves, no longer exists.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCADOO. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman so much time as will enable him to ask the question.

Mr. MCADOO. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether these large reservations are not necessary and serve a good purpose at present, at all events to preserve the public domain, so long as it is being gobbled up by railroad corporations who have been getting them for nothing?

Mr. SPRINGER. Heretofore the great cattle syndicates have had little difficulty in getting lands whenever they wanted them; but I hope in the near future they will be opened to actual settlers, which will put a stop to this practice.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas so long as he may desire.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire, on page 4 of the bill, to offer an amendment as a proviso to the third section, in the following words:

Provided, That it shall be the duty of said commission to negotiate with the Indians in the Indian Territory for the purpose of setting apart to them lands in severalty, to dispose of their surplus land for settlement, and to negotiate with all other Indians for a like purpose, in all cases where such other Indians are or may be in a suitable condition to take lands in severalty.

The SPEAKER. That amendment can be offered at this time only by unanimous consent, because there are two amendments already pending. Does the gentleman from Indiana consent to the offering of this amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to its being offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill finally to be attained, or which we hope will be attained, is to set apart to the Indian his land in severalty, and to give him a perfect, an absolute, and indefeasible title to it, that he may cultivate it and make it his home, precisely as the white man cultivates his land and carves out for himself and for his family a home, and finally to absorb the Indian into our own civilization, making him ultimately a part of the citizenship of this country.

This amendment is mandatory to the commission to endeavor to negotiate with the Indians in the Indian Territory with a view to setting apart to those Indians in severalty homes for themselves and the disposition of the surplus lands of that Territory for white settlement in accordance with any fair and just agreement that may be made with them. Of course, all this action must subsequently be ratified and approved by Congress before it can become effective in any degree.

This question is not a new one here. Congress at the last session, as has already been stated, passed a law authorizing the President of the United States to negotiate with the Indians of the Indian Territory for the very purpose expressed in this amendment, so that Congress has already passed upon the question; and all I ask now is that it shall be incorporated into this bill, so that it shall be mandatory on this commission to do what the President was authorized by law to do at the last session of Congress, but which he has not done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] what time he desires.

Mr. CANNON. I will at the proper time ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me to offer an amendment, so as to make it the duty of the President to appoint this commission. In line 1, after the word "authorized," I shall propose to insert "and directed;" so that the President shall be authorized and directed to appoint a commission.

The reason for this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is obvious. The administration by its action in the case referred to by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN has held that a mere authorization by Congress confers a discretion. I do not want any doubt to rest in the mind of the President as to whether this matter is discretionary or mandatory. I believe this commission ought be appointed, and I believe further that the commissioners ought to be active, energetic, practical men, who will under the authority conferred by the proposed legislation devote their time to the investigation of this question.

Why, sir, look at it. I believe there are nearly two hundred reservations, some of them very large, that these Indians occupy. Some of them are ready now to take their lands in severalty; others can be divided up and placed upon small reservations. Some of them, like the Navajoes, ought to continue no doubt to occupy the reservation they are now on, following pastoral pursuits, in which they are doing very well.

If this commission is an able and industrious one with the power that is proposed to be given to it, to investigate touching what can be done for the benefit of these Indians and to recommend action, or for the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, where he has power to approve, or for the satisfaction of Congress where treaties are made or modified, it can be seen at once if this commission is so constituted that all the while the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Interior has the machinery ready to use in making treaties, a commission well up on these questions, and whose findings and recommendations would have authority, not only with the Executive, but with Congress and with the people at large.

I am inclined to think there is much wisdom in the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]; for, after all, where treaties are modified Congress has to act; and I have no doubt it is much better if persons performing this duty could also have a chance to present the proposed action to the House and to the Senate by being members of the respective bodies.

But especially do I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is important, because it directs this commission, it declares it shall be its duty, to enter into negotiations for the modification of the treaties with the Indians in the Indian Territory, having expressly in view that the Indians should be treated with for throwing open these lands to settlement upon terms equitable both to the Indians and the white people. This includes Oklahoma and the Cherokee outlet, as well as all other lands in the Indian Territory that are not required and are not utilized by the Indians for agriculture or otherwise.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There is another bill having that object in view uow pending.

Mr. CANNON. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that it is not safe at this stage of the session to let bills take their chances of being called up or being reached, especially bills of this importance.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is just as likely to pass as this one.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly, it is just as likely to pass as this bill, provided you can get at it to consider it. But consideration at this time of the session is much. I have no pride in this bill; and I suggest to the gentleman if there are proper provisions in the bill he speaks of calculated to accomplish the object, would it not be well to move them, if the provisions of this bill are not satisfactory, by way of amendment to this bill?

However, this is only by way of suggestion, for I think the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is sufficient, provided the Executive should administer the law in good faith.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments to this bill heretofore presented and those which may be presented later be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

By Mr. REAGAN: "After the word 'Interior,' in line 9, of section 1: 'Provided, That members of Congress may be appointed to the places to be filled by civilians; and that those who may be appointed on this commission and who are in receipt of salaries from the Government shall receive no additional compensation, but their traveling and other expenses shall be paid on sworn vouchers.'"

By Mr. DORSEY: "Strike out in section 1, lines 7 and 8, the words 'appointed from civil life or.'"

By Mr. RYAN: "Provided, That it shall be the duty of said commission to negotiate with the Indians in the Indian Territory for the purpose of setting apart to them lands in severalty and disposing of their surplus lands for settlement, and to negotiate with all other Indians for a like purpose in all cases where such other Indians are or may be in a suitable condition to take lands in severalty."

By Mr. CANNON: "In fourth line, section 1, after the word 'authorized,' insert 'and directed.'"

By Mr. COWLES: "Strike out in section 1, lines 7 and 8, the words 'appointed from civil life or.'

"Strike out all of section 5 down to and including the word 'service,' in line 4, in said section.

"Strike out lines 15 and 16 of said section."

By Mr. DORSEY: "In line 41 of section 2, after the word 'self-support,' insert the following:

"'Also to ascertain the amounts due from the Government to the different tribes of Indians for educational purposes, as agreed upon and promised to be paid by treaties heretofore made.'"

FREE COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the special order for this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES] calls up the special order, which is the bill (H. R. 5690) for the free coinage of silver, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act all holders of silver bullion of the value of $50 or more, standard fineness, shall be entitled to have the same coined into standard silver dollars of 412½ grains troy of standard silver to the dollar, upon like terms and conditions as gold is now coined for private holders; that the standard silver dollar heretofore coined and herein provided for shall be the unit of account and standard of value in like manner as now provided for the gold dollar, and shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except where otherwise stipulated.

SEC. 2. That so much of the provisions of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and restore its legal-tender character," as provides for issuing certificates on the deposit of silver dollars, shall be applicable to the coin herein named; and so much of the said act of February 28, 1878, as provides for the purchase of silver bullion to be coined monthly into standard silver dollars be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary to enforce the provisions of this act.

Mr. BLAND. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. That motion can be pending, but can not be voted upon until the debate is closed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, a number of gentlemen desire to speak upon this measure who can not get an opportunity to do so at the regular daily session. I therefore ask unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock this afternoon the House take a recess until 7; the evening session to be devoted to debate upon this bill, no other business to be transacted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is utterly impossible to discuss a question of the magnitude and importance of this one within the brief period of an hour. I shall therefore be compelled to confine myself to some of the principal points mooted upon the subject of the coinage of silver. It may not be inappropriate at this time to go back and, if we can, to trace the cause of the difficulties under which silver labors to-day. We find that in 1867 a monetary commission or convention was held at Paris composed of representatives of the states of the Latin Union, Germany, Great Britain, and the principal metallic powers of the Old World, and also a delegate from the United States, Mr. Ruggles. Two years prior to that what is known as the Latin Monetary Union had been formed, made up of France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Holland, afterward joined by Roumania and Greece; the object of which was to adopt a uniform coinage for the nations thus joined in a monetary league. It was found, as a matter of course, that it was quite convenient for contiguous nations like those to have the same monetary standard, the same coinage in weight and fineness, which would be a legal tender in the several countries; for the same reason that Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, and all the other States of this Union find it a matter of great convenience to have the same monetary system.

But it was thought by those scientific gentlemen and doctrinaires that their monetary system could be extended so as to embrace the entire civilized world, and the delegates who met at Paris in 1867 undertook to devise a scheme to unify the coinage of the world.

The first question that came up for discussion and solution was the question as to the standard—whether they should adopt the gold standard or the silver standard, or both gold and silver—and there was the beginning of what is called "the battle of the standards." These scientific gentlemen, it would seem, without taking into consideration what effect their monetary system might have upon the different nations of the world in respect to their internal trade, thought only of the question of unifying the coinage and the monetary system of the world, and they finally adopted resolutions recommending the gold standard, with silver as a subsidiary coinage or aid to the gold standard, to be limited in its use. In pursuance of that scheme Mr. Ruggles, our delegate, after having made one report, sent to Congress in 1870 a supplementary report, in which he made the following statements:

The undersigned also begs to state that it was perfectly understood by the conference that none of its delegates were empowered in any way to bind their respective governments to any plan or proposition which the conference might adopt. On the contrary, time was given for laying the question before the different governments, for which purpose the conference fixed the 15th of February then next succeeding as the time for receiving answers, the undersigned expressly stating (Ex. Doc., page 74) that the United States could not give a positive answer until the subject had been submitted to Congress.

Several sittings of the conference were devoted to the subject of the double standard of gold and silver, and the necessity of gold alone for an international coinage; also to the discretion to be left to the several nations respectively in regulating their silver coins, the necessity of a period of transition for nations having the single silver standard; also to the expediency of a 15-franc gold coin, to facilitate monetary unification in the Netherlands, Germany, and Sweden.

The plan of international coinage finally adopted by the conference, with only one dissenting voice, embraces:

1. A single monetary standard exclusively of gold nine-tenths fine.
2. Coins of equal weight and diameter.
3. Of equal quality (or titre).
4. The unit to consist of the weight of the existing 5-franc gold coin, with its multiples.
5. The coins of each nation to bear the names and emblems preferred by each, and to be a legal tender in all for public and private payments.

The subordinate details of the periodical examinations and assays needed for ascertaining the weight and quality of the international coins of the different nations, and also the proper regulation of the rate of "tolerance" or allowable variation in coining, were left to a further conference or diplomatic conference or diplomatic correspondence.

After full and careful discussion the conference passed a resolution by a unanimous vote, by ayes and noes, recommending the issue of a gold coin of 25 francs, to be similar in weight and quality to the half-eagle of the United States and the sovereign of the United Kingdom. Its passage was actively urged in behalf of the United States for the reason expressed in the argument (Executive Document, page 68) that "the three gold coins, types of the three great commercial nations fraternally united and differing only in emblems, would go hand in hand around the world, freely circulating through both hemispheres without recoinage, brokerage, or other impediment."

It further appears (at page 101) that Prince Napoleon (Jérôme), president of the conference, speaking in behalf of France, declared that "if she consulted her individual convenience, she would see no necessity for issuing the new coin; but for the purpose of facilitating the work of unification she would make the concession required by the United States," adding that "the new coin would also promote the convenience both of England and of Austria." The delegate from Spain, the Count Nava de Tajo, thereupon stated that "it would equally accommodate Spain." The question being then put formally to vote, the issue of the 25-franc coin was unanimously recommended.

He also refers to a bill that had then been introduced by Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, as designed to carry out the scheme, or in aid of the scheme, agreed upon at Paris in 1867; and in April, 1870, Mr. John Jay Knox, then Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, formulated a bill and sent it to Congress, within the provisions of which was a section demonetizing silver. Thus began the carrying out of the scheme in this country in 1870. I know it has been generally stated upon this floor and throughout the country that this Government demonetized silver or suspended its coinage because Germany had previously done so. Mr. Ruggles, our delegate to the Paris conference, in his report to the Secretary of State, says:

Apologizing for the mass of details which the necessary presentation of the subject has required, the undersigned has only to state, in conclusion, that the bill introduced into the House of Representatives by Hon. Samuel Hooper, of Massachusetts, a member of the Committee on Coinage, on the 16th of March, 1870, and now pending in the committee, reduces the weight of the gold coin of the United States to that of France and the eight other continental nations, as hereinabove exhibited. The 124⅘ grains specified in the bill are practically equiponderant with 8,064 milligrams.

The demonetization of silver in Germany may have hastened demonetization here; it may have been the controlling cause, but the proposition to stop the coinage of silver was pending in Congress from April, 1870, until 1873. German demonetization did not take place until December, 1870. So that we find that, immediately after the Franco-Prussian war, Germany, carrying out, I suppose, the idea of this monetary conference at Paris, adopts a gold standard, takes time by the forelock, puts her house in order, and makes ready for the coming event.

The United States, following in the footsteps of Germany, and for reasons stated by Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint, in his report to the Secretary of the Treasury, November 9, 1872, at which time the coinage act of 1873 was pending in Congress, in discussing the silver question in the light of its increased production in connection with the demonetization of silver by Germany, in which he says: "The facts above stated indicate the gradual, but eventually, its certain adoption of the gold standard and consequent demonetization of silver by all commercial countries. Not only is the tendency to adopt gold as the sole standard and measure of value, but to use paper money redeemable in gold as the bulk of the circulating medium." (See Linderman, Money and Legal Tender, page 49), passed the act of 1873.

It will be remembered that during the months of January and February, immediately preceding the passage of the act of February, 1873, suspending the coinage of silver, there had been coined at our Mint nearly one million of silver dollars.

We coined in 1870	$588,308
We coined in 1871	637,929
We coined in 1872	1,112,961
We coined in January and February, 1873	977,150
	3,335,348

This shows that silver had begun to flow into our mints, and that from 1870 to 1873 $3,300,348 had been coined; that, immediately before suspension, during the months of January and February, 1873, over nine hundred thousand had been coined.

The act suspending the coinage of the standard dollar was approved February 12, 1873. In a month just prior to its passage, as before shown, we had coined nearly a million of silver dollars. This is a fact that answers the argument that we were on the exclusive gold standard when the act of February 12, 1873, demonetizing silver was passed. In 1870 we had passed a law to convert all our public debt payable in legal tender or greenbacks into a coin debt, the coin to be of the standard of January, 1870, which at that time was the gold dollar, 25.8 grains, or silver dollar, 412½ grains. So soon as silver began to flow into our mints we cut off the supply so as to make the bonds payable in gold only.

I have thus referred to the beginning, as I understand it, of what is called "the battle of the standards." We come down to 1873, when a bill was pending in Congress. After passing the Senate it came to the House; and conference committees of the Senate and House reported the bill. It was stated on the floor of the House that it made no material change in the coinage laws; that it was simply a bill to regulate the Mint laws. And I have yet to find in either branch of Congress among the gentlemen who reported and recommended the passage of that bill, or those present either in the Senate or the House at the time of its passage, a single man who will admit that he voted for that bill, knowing its provisions—a single man who will assume the responsibility of having reported that bill, knowing its contents, or voting for it, knowing that there lurked in it this provision dropping from the coinage one of the metals of the world.

Mr. Speaker, if there has been any act condemned by this country, if there has been a measure against which the anathemas of the American people have been hurled more than any other it is this act suspending the coinage of the legal-tender silver dollar. If that act was a fraud, if its passage was wrong, if the American people have, as I have stated, condemned the passage of the law, what must we expect from them if the American Congress to-day, having it in its power to do so, refuses to pass a bill which simply places the silver dollar where it was before the passage of that act. In such a case would we not to a certain extent at least condone the wrong?

In 1878 this House passed a bill precisely such as that now pending, except the provision as to silver certificates—almost a literal copy. This bill simply provides that silver shall be coined at the mints of the United States for all comers on the same terms and conditions as gold, and that the silver thus coined shall be a full legal tender for all public and private debts. This simply restores the law as it was before the act of 1873—nothing more and nothing less.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to 1878, at which time this House passed a silver coinage bill such as I have described by a vote of 168 or 170 yeas and 37 nays. That bill went to the Senate. The Senate incorporated in it, instead of free coinage, a provision limiting the coinage to not less than $2,000,000 and not over $4,000,000 worth of bullion per month. That is the law we have to-day. What inducement had the Senate to put that provision in that bill? What is the argument in favor of sustaining the law as it is on the statute-book to-day? It was contended in the Senate, and we hear it urged to-day on this floor, that because silver bullion had depreciated, owing to demonetization or from whatever cause you please, the Government had the right to make the seigniorage the difference between the value of the coin and the market value of the bullion; in other words, inasmuch as silver had been demonetized and its bullion value thereby decreased, the Government had the right to take advantage of this law demonetizing and depreciating silver to coin it at the ratio of its depreciation. Now, what is the effect of this? The effect is to continue the gold standard which was proclaimed for us in this convention at Paris in 1867. It makes silver in effect a subsidiary coin, not what we call technically subsidiary, but it does coin silver subject to the conditions of the gold standard; and silver coin is paid out to-day, as we are told, only so far as it may be paid out without disturbing that standard. We have then not only a limitation on its coinage, but also a limitation on its issue from the Treasury after it is coined.

In Secretary Manning's answer to the House resolution questioning his policy of silver payments (Appendix, page 33), it is shown that on the 1st of January, 1885, we had in circulation—coin silver dollars, $41,315,040; silver certificates, $113,858,811; total, $155,173,851. On the 1st of January, 1886, we had in circulation coin silver dollars, $51,411,376; certificates, $87,761,609; total, $141,172,985.

The result is that we expended $24,000,000 for the supposed purpose of increasing the amount of money in circulation, the result of which was to contract the currency to the extent of $14,000,846 so far as silver concerned.

This policy of holding silver in the Treasury so as to maintain the gold standard was adopted and enforced by Mr. Sherman, the first Secretary of the Treasury after the passage of the silver coinage act, and his policy has been persisted in by all his successors up to the present hour. In this we see the baneful influence of a bad example. What good the present limited coinage of silver was intended to have has been hampered by the failure of Treasury officials to give it a friendly execution.

Mr. SHERMAN, then Secretary of the Treasury, just before the time fixed in January, 1879, for the resumption of specie payments, when we had coined about twenty millions of silver dollars, entered into an arrangement with the New York Clearing House Association for the purpose of making a combination of the Treasury Department and the national banks of New York, composing the clearing-house association, by which silver should be repudiated and demonetized as far as it was in the power of the Treasury Department and these banks to do it, and especially to demonetize it in so far as the payment of the public debt was concerned. The basis of this agreement is found in the following letter of Mr. W. A. Camp, manager of the New York Clearing House, found on page 26, Miscellaneous Document No. 34, House of Representatives, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, in a conference with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, of which at that time I was a member:

No. 692.

Mr. Camp to Mr. Sherman.

NEW YORK CLEARING HOUSE,
14 Pine Street, New York, November 12, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to report that a meeting of the Clearing House Association was held this day at the clearing-house. Fifty out of fifty-eight banks' members of the association being present, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That in order to facilitate the payment of drafts and checks between the Treasurer of the United States and the associated banks, the manager of the New York Clearing House is authorized to make such an arrangement with the assistant treasurer as will accomplish that purpose through the medium of the clearing-house.

"Resolved, That the reported interview between the members of the clearing-house committee and the Secretary of the Treasury, with the views expressed by them to him in the paper presented to this meeting upon the subject of the restoration of specie payments, meets the cordial approbation of this association, and that the practical measures recommended for the adoption of the banks in respect to their treatment of coin in their business with the public and with each other, be accepted and carried into practical operation; and, in pursuance thereof, it is hereby further

"Resolved, That the associated banks of this city, after the 1st of January, 1879, will, first, decline receiving gold coins as 'special deposits,' but accept and treat them as lawful money; second, abolish special exchanges of gold checks at the clearing-house; third, pay and receive balances between banks at the clearing-house, either in gold or United States legal-tender notes; fourth, receive silver dollars upon deposit only, under special contract to withdraw the same in kind; fifth, prohibit payments of balances at the clearing-house in silver certificates, or in silver dollars, excepting as subsidiary coin, in small sums (say under $10); sixth, discontinue gold special accounts, by notice to dealers, on 1st of January next, to terminate them.

"Resolved, That the manager of the clearing-house be requested to send copies of the proceedings of this meeting to clearing-houses in other cities, with an expression of the hope that they will unite in similar measures for promoting the resumption of coin payments."

Very respectfully,

W. A. CAMP, Manager.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary, Washington, D. C.

It will be observed that this letter specifically prohibits the payment of silver dollars or silver certificates from the Government in the settlement of clearing-house balances, all payments being confined to gold or legal-tender notes convertible into gold; and convertible into gold because of the ruling of Mr. Secretary Sherman giving creditors the choice of demanding and receiving gold in the redemption of greenbacks or other debts held by them against the Government after January, 1879.

Under this arrangement silver was virtually repudiated by the Government and by the national banks. From that day to this the policy inaugurated by Mr. Sherman has been adhered to by the Treasury Department; and that, too, notwithstanding the law of 1882, prohibiting national banks from thus refusing silver. Every law passed by Congress and looking to the circulation of silver has thus been repudiated by this combination of the national banks, Government creditors, and the Treasury Department. The question is, ought not the law be so changed as to permit free coinage? Then the money would never reach the Treasury. It would be coined for all persons like gold, and would never reach the Federal Treasury except by way of taxation.

In so far as you restrict this coinage you restrict the right of the debtor class to pay their debts in the legal-tender metal; and this restriction is adopted for the purpose of continuing the gold standard and preventing the minting of silver except in limited quantities, in order to make money more valuable, to depreciate all property and all prices, and to compel debts to be paid by the gold standard instead of the standard regulated by gold and silver freely coined at your mints.

Now I want to discuss further this seigniorage question, and discuss it upon principle; for, as I understand it, it is one of the most important questions we have to discuss here.

Our gold and monometallic friends, and some of our silver friends also, think if we coin silver free we simply pay to the bullion-holders the difference between 80 cents and $1. That is to say, bullion to-day in the markets of the world, measured by gold, is worth but 80 cents, and therefore, if you open the mints of the Government for all the bullion to go there to be coined into silver dollars and legal-tenders, you to that extent give the bullion-holder 20 cents on each dollar more than he is entitled to to-day. Is that so? For if it be true, Mr. Speaker, then all that has been contended for under the principle of free coinage is admitted. You acknowledge that for which we have contended, that free coinage will have the effect to give silver the same value as gold, and that under it every coined piece of silver will be at par with gold at the ratio of 16 to 1. It is worth it to-day. Every silver dollar that has been coined at our mints is worth a gold dollar. Who can say that all we may coin will not be worth a gold dollar?

And when gentlemen tell us this law will restore silver to the same value as gold, but that in doing so we give the seigniorage or profit to the bullion-holders, they simply admit all that has been contended for, and that is the silver dollar and the gold dollar will be at par everywhere. Does any gentleman object to that?

The only serious argument made against the coinage of silver is that it will not restore this parity of value—that it will not give that value to it—that it is not possible for the coinage laws of any country to give additional value to a metal. If that is true, then the argument about seigniorage is a myth and a humbug.

But we are told it is true that for a short time this loose bullion will be gathered up and brought here and dumped down upon us, and they will get a dollar for it in gold or its equivalent, and after they have coined up the surplus—how much they do not know—then silver will begin to sink and go down to bullion value again. How convenient this question is for our gold monometallists! Drive them from one point, turn their own batteries against them, and then they go off into the realms of prophecy. [Laughter.] They rise up here and tell us that if we do this or that certain things will occur. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the old Jewish law were in effect here to place false prophets beyond the outer walls and there stone them to death—if that law were in force in this country to-day we would have many less of these gold prophets among us. [Laughter.]

If this predicted fall of silver be true, it means that gold also would fall, because silver being tied to gold by free coinage both must fall together. That is, labor and the products of labor and all species of property would rise, being measured not by gold only but by a volume of money swelled by unlimited mintage of silver.

But on this question of seigniorage again—and I hope I will be pardoned, for I will have to be somewhat disconnected—how much interest do you want the Government to make, and at whose expense must it be made? We are making, it is said, 20 cents on the silver dollar to-day in the way of seigniorage. How can you make more? Simply by limiting coinage, and further depress silver. I suppose the only way to make more is to coin less. Let us only coin $1,000,000 a month of silver and perhaps we will make 30 cents on the dollar; and if that is not enough, let us go down and coin only $500,000 a month. Then we could make 50 cents of seigniorage on the dollar. If that is not enough, and it does not seem to be with some, then coin only $1,000 a month, and you can make still more seigniorage in the dollar as coinage.

The law permits us on the other hand to coin $4,000,000 a month. If that law is executed up to the maximum of $4,000,000, the seigniorage will be less in the dollar, but the bullion-holder will be making money out of the Government again.

So, Mr. Speaker, when you come to the question of seigniorage you come into the vital question of gold and silver coinage. None but the tyrants of the old world, the kings, and those who desire to make money out of the people, ever charge seigniorage, except that which is necessary to pay the cost of coinage.

I will further explain this point.

An argument of the opponents of free coinage is that silver bullion at the ratio of 16 to 1, or 412½ grains of silver to 25.8 of gold, gives to the owner of silver bullion, or the silver miner, 20 cents on the dollar on his bullion.

This, at first blush, looks plausible, but it is not true, unless, as before stated, the coined dollar, by virtue of its coinage and legal-tender power, has this greater value; and if it does, then all the silver bullion, having free access to our mints, is at once restored to a parity with gold bullion at our ratio, for no one would take less for his bullion than the price fixed at the mint—that is, every piece of silver bullion containing 412½ grains of standard silver is at once worth one dollar, less the expense of coinage. It is worth one dollar because the holder can take it to the mint and have it coined into a dollar.

Then there will be no more buying and selling of silver bullion in the market; unless, at this ratio, it should go to a premium over gold, for it will have a fixed value at the mint. This now being the law as to gold bullion, we would then have silver and gold bullion at par. The owner of silver would then have the same advantage as the owner of gold—no more, no less. Free access to the mint, it must be admitted, is greatly to the advantage of the holder of either of the precious metals, but it is an advantage they must necessarily have as long as we make metal money the standard of values; and so long as we maintain such a standard it is necessary to coin free in order to have a sufficient supply of money.

Seigniorage, or a gain to the Government in coinage, is a tax on the money of the people.

The idea of gain to the Government in coinage grows out of the old idea that the king should have his profits out of the coinage permitted at his mints. The consequence of this prerogative was that the greater the king's tax, or seigniorage charge, the less amount of money there was coined; because the tax or charge tended to drive the holder of the metals from the king's mint to some other mint where the tax was lighter. Discovering this, that the mint seigniorage was driving the metals out of his realm and rendering his subjects destitute of money, his mints were finally opened to the free coinage of the metals for all comers thereto. Our Government has the most odious form of tax on silver. It limits its coinage, thus depreciating its value 20 cents on the dollar in order to buy it at that rate in the market. In order to accomplish this we coin only $2,000,000 worth per month, while we produce four million per month. Now, all our silver thus inhibited from coming to our mints is driven to the mints of other nations, or taxed out of circulation. In this way $24,000,000 of our own production is annually lost to our money circulation that ought to be coined at our mints. Who is benefited by this operation? It is the owners of gold, for the more silver we thus drive away the more is the gold worth which remains, by reason of the scarcity thus created in our circulating medium. By this operation the bondholders, the mortgage owners, and all classes of creditors are largely benefited, because it makes gold, the money in which his securities must be paid, more valuable.

If there were only $2,000 in all this country, and by some means one-half of it should be lost, the remaining half would become at once worth just as much as the whole formerly was to the creditor, while it would at the same time impose on one who happened to be a debtor exactly double the burden to pay his debt that he would have been under without the loss. It is quite plain, therefore, why the bondholding and creditor class are willing to outlaw silver at our mints. Seigniorage then is a tax not on the silver miner merely; it is a tax on the vast body of our people who need this money to pay their debts with. It is a tax on labor and the product of labor. It is a tax on the laborer because he can not get work unless there is money to employ him. It is a tax on wheat, corn, cotton, meats, and manufactured products, because these products get no market unless laborers get money to buy them. For this reason bread and clothing are cheap because there is no demand for them, and no demand because there is no money to buy with.

There are a million of men out of employment in this country because there is not sufficient money among the people to employ them. The report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, just published, shows this large number of men to be idle, and that in the last year we lost $300,000,000 by this lack of employment. These men have nothing to buy with; hence they must suffer almost to starvation while bread is cheap. Thus we have the awful spectacle of millions starving and naked in the midst of plenty. Gentlemen call this overproduction. I call it underconsumption, caused by a lack of money to effect exchanges. This want of money is caused by the tax or limitation put on the coinage of silver in order that the gold kings may have their seigniorage of 20 cents in the way of dear money, brought about by driving silver out of the country, and to other countries, India, for instance, where it is utilized in stimulating the production of wheat and cotton there to compete with our own productions of these staples. Of all the rascally wrongs perpetrated on our people this seigniorage business, or limited coinage, is the most insidious because of its apparent plausibility.

If the silver miner, or bonanza kings as they are termed by the wily gold advocates were the only sufferers it would matter but little. If they were not satisfied with their status they could hunt some other calling. But if we are to rely on the metals for money we ought to have all the metal that can find its way to our mints.

Hence it has always been considered a blessing to have both silver and gold miners to delve into the earth for us in quest of the precious metals for our money.

It is the invention of latter-day legislation to enact statutes to drive from us the metals out of which we coin money, either by seigniorage, tax, or limitations on their coinage. Down with the fraud!

We should have no such prerogatives of seigniorage here for the special benefit of the gold kings. Let the king's prerogative go. The monopoly of gold must go. Gold is not king nor is silver, but in this free country the people must exercise all kingly prerogatives.

What is the principle of free coinage? And you will pardon me if I state a few elementary principles connected with the subject of metallic money before I proceed further. For bimetallic coinage of gold and silver you first establish your ratio. We have done that two or three times in our history, changing the relation of gold to silver, never changing the silver dollar—it was always the gold dollar. When you have established the ratio of coinage you continue at the mints the unlimited coinage of both metals at that ratio.

Having done this, the law of supply and demand regulated the volume. This was our monetary system from 1792 until 1873, when, under the pretext of amending the mint act, the provision that authorized the coinage of a legal-tender silver dollar was omitted, and thus, in effect, demonetizing silver.

Without discussing the circumstances under which this demonetization was done or the purposes for which the same was accomplished, it may be said that the act was passed at a time when the country was on a paper basis, neither metal being in circulation. Therefore, it was done at a time when legislation, with reference to the coin circulation of the country, was not likely to attract the attention of the people.

This act was clearly an infraction of the true theory of bimetallism, and in conflict with the Constitution. It assumes that Congress should exercise the power of controlling the volume of money, by prohibiting the coinage of one of the monetary metals recognized in the Constitution. If, under the Constitution, Congress has the power to prohibit or limit the coinage or silver, so it has that of gold.

To admit that it can demonetize one of the metals is to admit that it can demonetize both; therefore, the gold monometallists, who are so swift in their denunciations of the Supreme Court for holding that Congress has the power to issue paper legal-tenders, should consider the result of their own theory of monetary science. For, if Congress has the power to demonetize the metals, it must necessarily result in exercising the authority claimed by the decision of the Supreme Court—that is, in printing legal-tenders and forcing them into circulation.

As a constitutional question, it is here claimed that Congress has no lawful right to demonetize either gold or silver; but it is the plain duty to provide for the coinage of both at some regulated value or ratio. The Constitution says, "The Congress shall have power * * * * to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin." Again, "No State shall * * * make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts."

By the mint act of 1792 the silver dollar as it is now coined—that is to say, a dollar containing 371¼ grains of pure silver, was made the standard of value, and was continued until 1873, when it was dropped from the coinage.

But again we are confronted with the statement, and I have heard it made by my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT], who sits in front of me, who stated in the Forty-eighth Congress that if we gave unlimited coinage to silver its effect would be the loading of vessels from India, France, from Germany, and from other silver nations with their silver, which would be dumped down upon us.

THE DUMP FROM EUROPE.

The enemies of free coinage of silver allege that its effects would be to cause all the silver of other countries to be dumped down upon us. The same persons also claim that free coinage would not increase the value of silver.

These positions are wholly inconsistent.

If the free coinage of silver will not raise its bullion value then all the silver that would be sent here would be sold at a great loss. France has six hundred millions of silver coin at par with gold at the ratio of 15½ to 1, Germany about two hundred millions, India a thousand millions, Great Britain one hundred millions, all at par with their gold coin.

The bullion value here is but 80 cents to the dollar at our ratio, and would be about 77 cents at their ratio; hence France would lose about 23 cents on the dollar by sending her silver here to exchange for our gold, or about $138,000,000 on her entire stock of silver coin which she now carries at par with the gold; India over two hundred millions, and other nations in like proportion, making for them, combined, a total loss in their circulating medium of $437,000,000. Does any sane person believe that such an exchange would ever be made? And that, too, in the face of the fact that none of these countries, unless it be France, now have a large enough circulation to meet the wants of their people? Not a single dollar would be thus exchanged.

Should free coinage restore silver and gold bullion to a parity at our ratio of 16 to 1 they would still lose 3 per cent. by the exchange, or about $57,000,000. These facts would effectually bar such an exchange and inundation of silver we hear so much about.

Gold will buy more silver here than in any other country, and silver will buy more gold in any other country than here, unless it be in Mexico where it is a little cheaper than here.

Why then talk of losing our gold for cheap silver? There is no such thing as cheap-coined silver. As compared to the price of labor and all commodities silver is worth more than it was twenty-five years ago. Gold has risen everywhere. The Edinburg Review of January, 1886, in an article upon the scarcity of gold, after reviewing the prices of the world, says:

> In short, so far as information could obtain upon this subject, it certainly supports the conclusion reported by the American commission of 1876, that while there has been no fall in the value of silver in any country the value or purchasing power of gold has risen in all countries.

As to manufactured silver, that, of course, had its value enhanced many fold by the labor bestowed upon it.

The silver in a spoon, cup, or pitcher is worth on account of this labor four or five times as much as it would be worth in bullion or coin. As to the bullion there is practically none except the annual product of the mines, which is about one hundred and fifteen million annually, as estimated by the Director of the Mint. More than one-fourth of this, or about forty million, annually goes into the arts for manufactures and ornaments. So there is but about seventy million remaining for coinage. We now coin about twenty-seven million of this; India coined last year thirteen million; Mexico, twenty million.

The report of the Director of the Mint shows the coinage of the various countries for the calendar year 1884 as follows:

COINAGES OF THE WORLD.

> So far as advices have been received, coinages were executed during the calendar year 1884, in eighteen countries of the world, amounting in round numbers to $99,500,000 in gold and $90,000,000 in silver. As heretofore the United States has been the largest coiner of both metals. The coinage of gold by Australia was only $1,800,000 less than that of the United States. The gold coinage of Russia amounted to $19,840,510—within $1,000,000 of that of the United States. Germany coined nearly $14,000,000, and Great Britain over $11,000,000.
>
> In the coinage of silver, Mexico is but little behind the United States, having coined $25,000,000 as against $28,000,000 by this Government. The silver coinage of India was $13,800,000—a large decline from the coinages of recent years of that country—and of Spain nearly $7,000,000.
>
> I am, very respectfully, yours,
>
> JAMES P. KIMBALL,
> Director of the Mint.

This shows a coinage of ninety million of dollars in silver, or twenty million more than the annual production after deducting forty million used in the arts and for ornamentation.

It is thus seen there is no surplus silver, except that which is from time to time thrown upon the market before it can find its way to the mints.

Were our mints open at all times, there never would be a surplus in the markets; consequently our coinage value would be the standard of its bullion value.

It will be borne in mind that all the silver now in use as money to the amount of $3,000,000,000 is at par with gold. It is this vast amount of coined mass of silver that should govern in adopting a ratio for our coinage rather than the small amount that from time to time may be thrown upon the market in London to be depreciated by speculators as necessities of owners may determine. The fact is the most of the silver of the world is at par with gold at 15½ to 1. What we want to do is to coin what little we may be able to get. We will get none of Europe's stock, because no Frenchman, Englishman, German, nor even ignorant Indian or Hindoo will give his silver in exchange for gold when he must do so at a loss of 3 cents on every dollar, as he would do to send it here. Nor will any American exchange his so-called 80-cent dollar for 97 cents in gold, nor for 99 cents.

Now let us inquire what would be the effect of free coinage? It would settle, to begin with, a great and important question, a question probably the most important to the American people of all others now pending or that will be pending until this is settled; and gentlemen need not suppose that they can long postpone the settlement either. What is the difficulty to-day? We began to coin silver in 1878. From 1878 to 1879 and 1880, 1881, and 1882 there was a revival of prosperity in the country. We resumed specie payments, and because we were coining silver which aided us according to Mr. SHERMAN. But no sooner had we coined about $50,000,000 than Mr. SHERMAN, then Secretary of the Treasury, began to clamor for its demonetization and suspension. This clamor was on the ground that we had coined as much as would circulate on a par with gold. He began it, and through all these years 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, every President of the United States and every Secretary of the Treasury has been clamoring for the demonetization of silver until the whole country has become excited and the national banks, which the Government chartered, have set their faces steadily against it and have undertaken to demonetize it so far as in their power.

This silver question ought to be settled. It is disturbing the business interests of the country. Men who are capitalists, that have money to loan, claim that should we suspend coinage they would then know that the money they might loan would come back to them in kind as to value; that the coinage of silver will bring us to the silver standard, and then the money they might loan now would be paid back to them in a depreciated currency. For this reason they claim they can do better by holding on to their money. This causes money to be hoarded, and depresses business. They say if we suspend coinage they will put their money out. All this seems plausible. But if a revival at all, such a revival would be spasmodic, and of short duration. It would be such activity as a galvanic battery would impart to a corpse—a spasmodic flutter, without living, circulating blood to sustain it.

Being thus brought to the single gold standard, with the output of the gold mines constantly decreasing, an annual supply of only ninety millions and seventy-five millions of that going annually in the arts, manufactures, and ornamentation, as statistics show, where would the giant America get the circulating life-blood in the way of money to keep alive? It is preposterous nonsense. A grain of gold would be worth its weight in diamonds. England, France, Germany, and all the gold countries are deprecating gold scarcity and the consequent depression of trade and hard times. If the overdeveloped and densely-populated countries of the Old World find the gold standard too narrow how can we in this new country, just entering upon a new era of industrial development, increasing population and enterprises, limit business to the gold standard? It can not and will not be done. The money proposed for us by the gold advocates, to consist of gold and bank notes only, will not be accepted. A revival of business will come with free coinage of silver—not otherwise.

My friends who say they are in favor of silver but are against unlimited coinage, remind me a good deal of the adage we heard during the war in regard to certain gentlemen who were in favor of the war, but opposed to its prosecution. If one piece of silver bullion is fit for coinage, the whole of it is. And if it is not all fit for coinage none of it should be coined, not a dime. There is no compromise or half-way house in this matter; and when gentlemen oppose free coinage they should consider how near they are approaching the gold camp.

That was the mistake made in 1878 in the Senate, according to my view of it. Had they passed the free-coinage bill then, and could that bill have become a law, all this difficulty about silver, and all this distress and unsettlement of business never would have occurred. Whatever you may say against silver coinage, I have heard no gentlemen yet offer a substitute for it. Nothing except to stop its coinage and get to a single gold standard.

Now what would be the consequence of a single gold standard? We have six hundred millions of gold to-day. Will any gentleman assert that that is sufficient metallic money for our sixty millions of people? If not, where are you going to get the rest, when to-day you find that Germany and Great Britain, and even France, the whole of Europe, are ready to go to war before they will give up a grain of gold. They can afford to see the streets of their large cities run with the blood of their laborers; they can afford to see their populace starving; they can afford to go to war, but they can not afford to give up one grain of gold without bringing on probably internal or civil war among themselves.

And where are you to-day in this country on the gold standard? You are not much better off. We are in the same condition—probably not so bad—but we have difficulties at home. We have been trying the gold standard. It has proved a failure here and everywhere up to this very hour, and is confessed to be a failure by the very gentlemen who were most active in bringing it about.

I believe the most of our gold advocates have turned to be bimetallists. They are in favor of bimetallism with a condition which has heretofore proven to be an utterly impossible condition, and that is the condition that Great Britain, and Germany, and France agree with us to coin silver at an international ratio. That was the delusion that prevented the settlement of this question in 1878, when, as I have stated, the House passed a bill giving free coinage to silver. It went to the Senate. The idea the Senate had was to limit the coinage until we got an agreement with foreign countries, and it provided in the bill for an international conference. We sent our commissioners to Paris. They held that conference, and what was the result? Why, the delegations from other countries simply told our commissioners if they believed in silver, it was good for money, they said, "Go home and coin it." That in substance Mr. Dana Horton and Mr. Walker were among the gentlemen representing us. They did not like the treatment they received, and in connection with Mr. Cernuschi, and other bimetallists of Europe, they conceived an idea that if this country would stop the coining of silver we could flood England with cheap silver bullion, and in that way bulldoze her into submitting to an international agreement. And that was the outcome of the monetary conferences at Paris in 1878 and 1881.

Now, I want to remark in passing, these bimetallists are international bimetallists. Their whole theory is based on the idea of having metallic money that will be good money at par everywhere; that a piece of silver will be the same in our coinage as in France and throughout Europe so that you can travel wherever you please without having to submit to brokerage. But this is almost impossible without disarranging the monetary affairs of various nations. As I have stated the double-standard and gold-standard interfere; and on the other hand these gentlemen did not take cognizance of the fact that a national trade, ours for instance, amounting to $10,000,000,000 requires a consumption of money at home of vastly more importance to our people than international trade.

But, Mr. Speaker, this idea has been a failure. This idea of international coinage, this idea of an agreement between the nations of the world in a standard of coinage, has never occurred from the very dawn of history until now, except among the Latin states and Scandinavia. But is there any reason to suppose that by suspending the coinage of silver here and sending the bullion to Great Britain and to other European countries that that is going to terrify them so much? What is the difficulty to-day, especially with our Southern producers of cotton and our farmers in finding a market for our Western wheat?

We find that European countries, by purchasing bullion silver and sending it to India, are stimulating the industries of India to such an extent that its wheat and cotton are coming in competition with ours. I will not go into statistics—I have not the time—to show the vast increase in the production in India, during the past few years, of wheat, which is taking the place of our Western wheat and can come here and compete with us at home. The very fact that we have demonetized silver and cheapened it and sent it abroad, has stimulated India in the production of these commodities. I can not go into an explanation of this point here, but I will print in my remarks some extracts going to show how the result is produced. Silver being demonetized in England and cheap when converted into bullion, it is not a paying business for India to settle her balances in England in silver, but it does pay her to sell her wheat and settle her balances in that way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have the advice of Mr. Cernuschi in last Sunday's Herald as to the best way out of our difficulty. I can not state his proposition precisely, but in substance it is this: If a free coinage bill should fail to pass, or, having passed, should be vetoed, he proposes that we purchase silver, so much every month and send it to England; that we purchase say $600,000 worth of silver bullion one month and ship it to London, double the amount the next month, and so on until, within the year, we shall have dumped down upon the London market about $22,000,000 worth of silver bullion, selling it at a lower rate every month, and in that way make a panic in the silver market and disturb the exchange between Great Britain and India, so that Great Britain will succumb and enter into a pact with France and the United States for the purpose of restoring silver.

Now, if it be true that Great Britain and France and those European countries are getting cheaper wheat and cotton from India with this cheap silver, certainly that would disarrange nothing. But is that statesmanship; is that sensible? If it is statesmanship, if it is sensible, and if Mr. Cernuschi is so anxious to have a par with Great Britain, France, and Germany—and certainly there is some reason why those countries should have the same money—let France and Mr. Cernuschi go into the market and buy the silver and ship it to England and run the risk. That they do not do it shows the fallacy of the argument. He says that France has got six hundred millions of silver that she wants to get rid of. If that is so, why not dump that silver down on the London market and strike terror into the Englishmen and compel them to submit to French dictation? Suppose this scheme should fail; suppose that (as we are invited to do by the gold advocates) we suspend silver coinage, for the purpose of shipping this silver bullion and disturbing the English exchange and flooding Europe with cheap silver in order to bring them to better terms—suppose that policy fails and we find, after we have demonetized silver and suspended its coinage and adopted this plan, that it does not have the desired effect, in what condition are we left?

As to Mr. Cernuschi and the bimetallic school, no matter which way it goes they have won. They do not believe in bimetallism unless it can be international bimetallism, in order to carry into effect their particular views upon the monetary question. They are quite willing that the United States shall step into the breach and suffer all the loss and all the consequences, if their predictions and theories prove to be fallacious. Mr. Cernuschi is certainly a gentleman of education and ability; there is no doubt of his being well versed in financial questions, but, like other gentlemen, and probably myself among them, he may be a little inconsistent at times, and certainly he has changed his views within the past few years. To show this, I propose to read an extract from his statement before the silver commission of the United States in 1876, of which body I was at the time a member.

Hon. Mr. Bogy, at that time a Senator from Missouri, asked him this question:

By retaining sixteen here, and fifteen and a half there (in France) our silver of course would go right to France. Would not that compel France to abandon the bimetallic system?

Answer. The policy of France would be not to coin, but to wait. France committed a great mistake when in 1874, after the example given by Belgium, she limited the coinage of silver. It has been a great mistake. If France had continued to coin silver freely the German silver would have flowed into France and some of the gold of France would have flowed into Germany, and silver would have maintained everywhere its value relatively to gold. In limiting the mintage a difference has been created between the value of bullion and the value of coin.

This, gentlemen, is the authority quoted on this floor by the gold advocates; yet he insists, and it no doubt is the fact, that had France continued the free coinage of silver, there would have been no silver question to-day, because for seventy years—so long as silver was coined free—gold and silver were at a parity at the French ratio of 15½ to 1. This is Mr. Cernuschi's statement, notwithstanding he has made a different and inconsistent statement in a little pamphlet which we have all had occasion no doubt to read, copies having been sent to us by Mr. Manton Marble, called The Great Metallic Powers.

Now, if it be true that France by continuing the free coinage of silver could have maintained the parity between the two metals, what may we expect by free coinage in the United States? Why, Mr. Speaker, we have a bimetallic union of our own. Under a bimetallic constitution we have a bimetallic union consisting of thirty-eight States in addition to the Territories. This bimetallic union includes a population of 60,000,000, and an area of over 3,000,000 square miles, embracing 2,000,000,000 acres of land. Here is a bimetallic union compared with which the Latin Union is a mere bagatelle so far as the resources of the future are concerned. Having a population of 60,000,000, increasing at the rate of 1,000,000 annually spread over this vast area, before we could coin the quantity of silver that France has to-day we would have a population probably as large as or larger than that of the Latin Union, whose territory compared with ours is insignificant.

I say, then, if it was possible for France in 1874 to continue the parity of the two metals by free coinage how much more is it possible to-day for this great Government of ours to do what little France could have done. And where is all this surplus silver bullion that gentlemen speak of? We have been threatened with the surplus silver of Germany. But there is more. She did melt down and sold a quantity at a loss in the beginning; but the silver bars have gone into subsidiary coin, as will appear from the following extract taken from the New York Bankers' Magazine:

[From the New York Bankers' Magazine of February, 1888.]

A city paper has been led into an error in supposing that the German Government has any such great sum as $75,000,000 locked up in silver bullion. All that it had ever acquired was in buying up silver coins with a view to melting them into bars for sale. When that operation was brought to a sudden halt in May, 1879, it was believed to have some silver melted down but not sold, but the amount has always been understood to be small, although no official statement about it has ever been made. There has been a recent increase of the German subsidiary coinage, to correspond with the increase of population shown by the census of 1885, and statements have been made in German newspapers that the small quantity of melted-down silver belonging to the government was used up in that way.

So all the silver Germany has is in circulation to-day as money. It circulates on a par with gold; and her people are demanding more silver coinage, instead of demonetization. The surplus silver bullion which has been talked of does not exist at all, except that produced from the mines from month to month which does not reach the mint, and is thrown upon the London market, where like all other commodities—wheat, corn, oats, or anything else—it sells at a lower rate than it did ten or fifteen years ago. Like anything else which does not find a ready market at a fixed price, it must bear the loss consequent upon the depression of trade, and the loss consequent upon the exactions made on the necessities of the person holding by those who desire to purchase.

Suppose silver is 20 cents lower than gold and will so continue after we provide for free coinage, what then? All statisticians admit that so far as the value of silver is measured by commodities there has been no fall of silver whatever.

Then the question comes up, shall we in adjusting this ratio put more silver in a dollar or less gold in a dollar in order to do justice to debtor and creditor and to the business interests of the country? That is a debatable question. But the gold advocates and the suspensionists make no proposition on that subject, but simply say, "Because silver has depreciated therefore we will coin none of it; we will have nothing to do with it." Why, sir, in all our history, whenever there has appeared any disparity in the market value of the two metals it has been remedied by readjusting the ratio. No one has ever before contended for demonetizing a metal because it happened to fall in the market. Yet that is the proposition made to us to-day. If gentlemen propose to increase the bullion value of the silver dollar I say that is a debatable question; but they show there is no sincerity in proclaiming that they want bimetallism when they ask us to totally demonetize silver and suspend its coinage, simply because there is a depreciation in its value.

Mr. Speaker, in our past history silver was never before demonetized. At one time the silver dollar was worth 3 cents more than gold; but the mints remained open, so that when the ratio might change silver would come back to our mints. Mr. Gallatin, in his report to Mr. Ingham, Secretary of the Treasury in 1830, upon the state of the coinage, makes this significant statement in reference to bimetallism:

The whole amount of the inconvenience arising from the simultaneous use of the two metals consists in this: Their relative value being fixed by law, if this changes at market, the debtor will pay with the cheapest of the two metals; and, therefore, at a rate less than the standard agreed on at the time of making the contract, if the change in the market price is due to a fall in that of the metal with which he pays his debt; and it is obvious, in the first place, that if the change is due to the rise in value of one of the two metals, and that had been the only legal tender, the choice given to the debtor to pay with either enables him to do it according to the standard first agreed on.

But the true answer is, that the fluctuations in the relative value of the gold and silver coins arising from the demand exceeding or falling short of the supply of either are less in amount than the fluctuations, either in the value of the precious metals as compared with that of all other commodities or in the relative value of bullion to coin, and even then the differences between coins, particularly gold coins, issued from the same mint; and, therefore, that those fluctuations in the relative value of the two species of coin are a quantity which may be neglected, and is, in fact, never taken into consideration at the time of making the contract.

By this I understand that where you are using and coining both metals debtors have the right to pay in the cheaper, and that the equity of the contract is not disturbed by this unless the cheaper metal has fallen in value as compared with commodities; if it has not, then the equity of the contract is preserved. On this point Mr. Weston, in his work on the silver question, says, "Upon this Mr. Gallatin observes that it will not be true that the debtor pays less than was agreed, unless the change in the market price is due to a fall in that of the metal in which he pays his debts," and that "if the change is due to the rise" of the other metal, he pays all that was agreed.

An argument which was made, I say, in 1830 when it was to be considered coolly and calmly, without our present contest, and coming from a gentlemen whose integrity and financial ability none can dispute. That is to say, the equity of contracts is not disturbed unless the value of bullion has fallen as compared with commodities, and confessedly silver has not fallen as compared with commodities.

And when gold advocates ask us to demonetize silver in order to crush out the silver as money of this country and to build up gold monometallists, they are asking what the American people will never assent to, and gentlemen had as well make up their minds to it. [Applause.]

I know that in 1878 by limiting the coinage of silver providing for this international conference they expected finally to get their hands on the law to stop its coinage, and that is their only hope to-day. But I say that hope will be in vain; and they need not depend on it. I tell you the silver advocate who is an opponent to free coinage, as I said before, must get out of that position and take sides either for silver or against it. These half-hearted supporters will not satisfy their constituents on that subject. They, their constituents, are brave enough to do it. They are brave enough to say it shall be as it was from 1792 down to 1873. We ed the double standard then and it proved to be beneficent. And if you have argued until your brain begins to boil as though it was burning within you; if you have investigated this subject until you do not know what you ought to do with it, if in doubt, then do what the history of the country teaches you to do, and do as the people want—make money of gold and silver—go back to the laws of your fathers. In 1873 a great wrong was perpetrated on the American people, and if there is any doubt what ought to be done that doubt ought to be solved in favor of undoing an admitted wrong on the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. BLAND. There are other phases of this subject I had intended to allude to, but I shall not do so. I would not ask that my time be extended as there are other gentlemen who wish to speak, and it would not be right to encroach upon the time, it being already so limited that many gentlemen can not be heard.

I wish to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that if I had not believed in free coinage I would not believe in any coinage. No man can support himself in this House or before his people upon the present law. I never advocated it; I took it simply as a compromise, as better than no law at all. I advocate it or hold to it to-day and stand to it because I believe in free coinage; because I believe silver ought to be coined, and coined free. If I did not believe it ought to be coined free I would not advocate the coinage of one cent of it. It is illogical policy. The idea of making money of silver or gold and limiting its coinage is an anomaly in the history of money. To limit the coinage of silver is an outrage upon the constitutional rights of the people. [Applause on both sides of the House.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say as I said in the Forty-eighth Congress, I have not for twenty years owned one cent's worth of mining interest, either gold or silver, and may add never did own any such property that did not prove a loss to me, nor do I own a Government or other bond, nor a share in any national bank. I am impelled to this statement because the gold press has endeavored to make it appear that I have a personal interest to subserve, because at one time, over twenty years ago, I resided in California and Nevada.

To sum up—the demonetization of silver is the outcome of the convention held at Paris by so-called experts and doctrinaires. The theories of these learned gentlemen, whose financial opinions the world is asked to view with awe, having been put in practice, have depressed prices, demoralized trade, and turned millions of law-abiding laborers into strikes and mobs. They have compelled the payment of all sorts of debts in the dearest money of the world—money made dear by the elimination of one-half of the money metal of the world from its legitimate use as a debt-paying and labor-employing medium—the effect of which upon the American farmer and producer has been to drive his breadstuff and cotton out of European markets, in this way. India, with a population of 250,000,000 of people, is under the government of Great Britain. For this boon to India (?) Great Britain charges a good round sum, called "Home charges against India," and which are paid in what are called "council drafts," drawn in favor of England by the secretary for India. These drafts, it seems, amounted to about $80,000,000 in 1884.

Now, India, having no money but silver, can not afford to pay these charges, which are payable only in gold or its equivalent, in her silver, nor to settle any other balances against her in silver, for her silver, when it reaches London, where it is no longer money, must be placed on the market and sold as bullion at a loss equal to the depreciation of silver below gold. Hence Indian merchants, to avoid this loss, buy up wheat, corn, flour, and cotton, and send them to England in payment of Indian debts or balances. This operation stimulates the production of these articles for export, and in consequence there has been an enormous increase in India's export of breadstuffs and cotton to England; and, further, we find that these exports are driving our wheat and cotton out of European markets.

Again, silver, being worth more as money in India than as bullion in England, is imported into India for the purpose of employing laborers in building railways and in opening up wheat and corn fields, and in this way India is not only destined to drive us out of European markets, but it is claimed can at this time place wheat in New York, and even in Chicago, cheaper than we can raise it. Thus our gold policy is driving the products of our silver mines to India, there to be used as money to employ Hindoos to raise wheat, corn, and cotton in direct competition with the farmers of America. By this means the cheap Hindoo laborer is made the active competitor of our own farmers and laborers. Fifty-two millions of silver was thus imported the last year.

Why not give free coinage to silver here so as to permit our people to employ laborers to stimulate our own productions? Why send it to India for the purpose of stimulating the development of that country to the depression of our own agricultural interests? Are they of so little importance as to deserve this fate? Will the day never come when others will be made to share with the agriculturists and laborers of our land the burdens of hard times?

On this point I quote from Mr. Moreton Frewen, an English writer, in the October number of the Nineteenth Century, who, after noting the drain on India's money resources by reason of the decline in silver bullion, says:

India, therefore, looks round for an intermediary which has not lost its exchange value in gold to the same extent as has silver, and such an intermediary to effect the exchanges is to be found in wheat, as well as in other commodities of native production. In putting the government in the place of a trader in produce I do not, of course, mean that the Indian Government themselves export the wheat, but they sell council drafts, and the exchange is made by Indian merchants, who sell their wheat and cotton in England for gold and with that gold pay the interest on the debt. And while the value of silver estimated in gold has depreciated, its purchasing power to buy commodities in India has not fallen; that is, the ryot who sells his wheat for silver gets no more silver than before for the bushel of wheat.

The change, therefore, in the ratio of silver to gold exercises a twofold influence on trade: it encourages selling to England because English gold buys more silver, and this silver has as yet not lost its purchasing power when brought back to India; and it discourages buying from England, because Indian silver buys less gold, and less of those commodities which have to be paid for in gold; and this tendency to increase exports and diminish imports will continue till silver has been attracted to India in such amounts as to expand the currency there and occasion a rise of all prices. And the only explanation of the fact that silver has not already flowed to India in sufficient quantity to expand the currency is to be found in the effect of the return current of silver to England to pay the disbursements of the Indian Government; and thus it happens that, although India annually sells to England commodities to the amount of twenty millions in excess of those she buys from England, yet the specie, the silver received by India from England, does not exceed four millions sterling.

APPENDIX.

Mr. Moreton Freewen, an English writer of note, in the Nineteenth Century of October, 1885, on the subject of "Gold scarcity and the depression," makes the following observation on the effect of the demonetization:

People of little education are accounting for low prices on the hypothesis of a general overproduction; but it is hardly necessary to point out that, while overproduction in any particular trade is frequent and quickly adjusts itself, general overproduction is impossible. What is really taking place at present, all the world over, is a rapid readjustment of prices toward the point from which they were violently disturbed by the immense gold discoveries of 1849 and the succeeding twenty years. By the time that this readjustment is complete, if it is allowed to continue so long, every trader, who bought anything between the years 1855 and 1875, the years of cheap gold, and who adopted a standard of living compatible with the profit percentage of those times, will find himself, from no mistake of judgment of his own, probably ruined, but certainly the loser by twenty years of steady toil. And of the possibility of this gold shrinkage we have been repeatedly warned both by geologists and by political economists.

The position that when the production of gold expands, prices measured in gold will be high, and that when the volume of gold contracts, prices will fall—this statement had only to be enunciated to be accepted as self-evident. It is not necessary to illustrate the position further than to say that, should the output of gold, now diminishing so steadily, continue to decline until only five sovereigns remained to be a measure of value for mankind, the fortunate possessor of one of these could buy, if he pleased, diamonds the size of the Koh-i-nor for shirt buttons; so enormous under such conditions would be the purchase-power of gold! And if we compare a table of the prices of to-day with the prices obtained only five years since, what do we find? That prices have fallen more than 20 per cent. Instead, then, of an impossible position of general overproduction, we have to consider a particular instance of lessened production. Prices all around are falling lower and still lower because that circulating medium which measures values has diminished.

Again, the same author says:

Mr. Alexander Delmar, an authority on currency subjects in America, and who was a Federal office-holder at that time, has recently stated publicly that he knows who the financiers in Europe were who had enormously oversold Indian council drafts and other silver securities, and between whom and the realization of great profits was the single obstacle of the free coinage and legal-tender position of silver in the United States. In any case the fact remains that currency alterations of enormous future importance were sanctioned by Congress, neither party having the least idea of the reforms which were smuggled through under their very eyes. Upon a motion to codify the mint laws for the sake of public convenience, the word dollar was omitted in one context and added in another. The omission was from the list of coins which the Secretary of the Treasury might allow to be coined, and in this way the dollar coinage was limited to those coins already in circulation. The addition was where this dollar had been previously excepted from the class of smaller token coins, which were not legal tender for more than $5. The old act thus mutilated became law. Congressmen rubbed their eyes when later they were shown the statutes and that the dollar of their fathers had been legislated away. Some were candid enough to confess that they had been tricked through their ignorance of currency laws, an ignorance which, judging from the activity of certain speculators on the European bourses, had been very profitably forecast on this side of the sea.

The prosperity of India as compared with our decline in the export of cotton, year commencing September 1:

From September 1 to December 31—

	Bales.
1884	816,594
1885	668,134
Decline in 1885	148,460

India cotton shipments:

	Bales.
In 1880	913,000
In 1884	1,214,000
Increase	301,000

Over 33 per cent.

The exports of India's manufactured cotton in 1876, the year of the demonetization of the trade-dollar, was 6,630,000 rupees, or less than $3,500,000; comparing with now (1884-'85), 33,380,280 rupees, or over $16,500,000. Similar figures for the United States in 1876 were $7,722,978, and now, in 1884-'85, they are $11,836,691. That is, while our foreign shipments were four and one-half millions more than India's in 1876, they are now nearly four and one-half millions less.

In 1879 we had 10,111,387 spindles in the North and 542,048 in the South.

India had, in 1879, 1,100,112 spindles, while in 1885 she has 2,145,616, almost doubling its capacity; while in the United States we have to-day 13,250,000 spindles, an increase of only 31 per cent.

In 1876 India produced and exported to foreign countries 6,228,000 pounds of yarn, while in 1885 she exported 65,897,000 pounds, over 1,000 per cent.

Her other manufactured cotton goods, in 1876, amounted to 14,344,000 yards, while in 1885 they included 47,820,000 yards.

Exports of wheat for the month of December, 1884, 8,261,153 bushels; December, 1885, 4,211,850 bushels.

Exports of flour for the month of—

December, 1884	barrels	1,016,617
December, 1885	do	757,829

Total value of breadstuffs for six months, July 1 to December 31—

1883	$88,014,626
1884	79,700,507
1885	52,998,732

India wheat was exported to Europe in 1876 to the amount of 96,000 bushels; last year (1885) over 42,000,000 bushels.

Corn, unknown almost in 1883, is now one of the leading export articles of India to Europe.

Wheat crops, always two in one year, but often three crops; corn, two crops.

Annual export prices of the principal commodities exported from British India during each year ending March 31, 1875, to 1884, inclusive.

[Computed from data obtained from British India Statistical Abstract of 1884.]

Articles.	1875.	1876.	1877.	1878.	1879.	1880.	1881.	1882.	1883.	1884.
Coffee, cwt.	$20 35	$21 28	$21 33	$21 91	$22 02	$22 01	$21 04	$20 19	$18 97	$20 33
Cotton, raw, do.	13 26	12 90	12 54	13 20	12 98	13 74	14 19	12 92	12 50	13 76
Rice, do.	1 33	1 27	1 42	1 84	2 06	1 84	1 62	1 40	1 32	1 55
Wheat, do.	2 23	1 76	1 71	2 19	2 40	2 49	2 14	2 22	2 09	2 06
Jute, raw, do.	2 89	2 62	2 83	3 14	3 07	3 18	3 30	3 26	2 75	3 18
Oils, galls.	61	41	30	36	61	50	48	44	44	43
Opium, chests.	614 15	614 08	461 61	648 77	693 26	660 58	717 91	677 21	608 66	597 68
Silk, raw, lbs.	2 24	1 55	2 59	2 20	1 98	1 76	1 99	54	1 91	1 89
Spices, do.	06	07	08	08	08	09	11	09	10	11
Sugar, refined, cwt.	3 43	3 62	4 25	4 56	4 63	3 77	3 83	3 56	3 37	3 23
Tea, lbs.	44	43	46	44	44	39	32	36	31	33
Wool, raw, do.	22	22	22	20	19	20	22	19	19	19

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, Washington, D. C., March 2, 1886.

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

The Indian fiscal year ends on the 31st of March.

During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1884, the excess of imports of silver over exports was $32,174,445, but increased to $35,598,877 during the year ending March 31, 1885. (Senator Hill's address at Providence.)

During the calendar year ending December 31, 1885, according to figures obtained from the Bureau of Statistics, India imported $57,760,080 of silver, and exported only $5,562,949, which makes a net import of $52,197,140. In this calculation, the silver is reckoned at its coining rate at our mints, being the same rate at which the Mint Bureau computes the silver production in this country, Mexico, and South America.

Average price of silver from 1744 to 1843, inclusive; also the value of a piece of silver same as our dollar, 412.5 grains, .900 fine.

Period.	Value per ounce.
	In Hamburg.	In America.
	Pence.	Dollars.
1744 to 1750	63 1/2	1 06.95
1751 to 1760	64 1/2	1 09.75
1761 to 1770	63 11/16	1 07.95
1771 to 1780	64 3/8	1 09.10
1781 to 1790	63 7/16	1 08 25
1791 to 1800	61 1/4	1 03.60
1801 to 1810	60 7/16	1 02.40
1810 to 1820	60 13/16	1 03.15
1821 to 1830	59 11/16	1 01.15
1831 to 1840	60 1/16	1 01.85
1841 to 1843	59 1/2	1 00.90

Average price of silver in Hamburg for one hundred years, 62*d*, and our American dollar equal to $1.05 in value, while during same period the price of silver in England averaged 64 1/16*d*., and our dollar was worth $1.08.65.

In the Report of the Director of the Mint for 1885, and at page 37, giving the monetary statistics of various countries, we find the following tables of the exports and imports of the precious metals:

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Minister Lowell, under date of April 1, 1885, transmits a communication from Mr. Fremantle, the deputy master of the mint of Great Britain, containing replies to the inquiries contained in the circular of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Description.	Value.	Value in United States money.
Gold coinage	£2,324,015	$11,309,819
Silver coinage	658,548	3,204,824
Imports, gold	10,870,000	52,898,855
Exports, gold	11,725,000	57,059,712
Net loss, gold	855,000	4,160,857
Imports, silver	9,535,000	46,402,077
Exports, silver	9,720,000	47,302,380
Net loss, silver	185,000	900,303

The amount of gold coin in circulation and in banks at the end of 1884 was estimated to have been £123,309,000 ($600,083,248), and of silver £19,877,000 ($96,731,420). The amount of bank notes outstanding at the same date was £40,924,713 ($199,160,115).

Mr. Freemantle states that throughout Great Britain gold and silver coin and bank notes are taken in business tranactions at par.

FRANCE.

Hon. Levi P. Morton, under date of March 9, 1885, furnishes a statement from the French Minister of Finance containing the information desired by this Government.

The only coinage executed at the French mints during the year 1884 was 120,000 silver piasters for the colony of Cochin China.

	Coin.		Bullion.
	Francs.		Francs.
Imports, gold	69,069,306	$13,330,376	58,354,997	$11,262,514
Exports, gold	71,515,596	13,802,510	10,276,962	1,983,453
Loss	2,446,290	472,134
Gain			48,078,035	9,279,061
Imports, silver	79,522,523	15,347,846	21,709,127	4,189,861
Exports, silver	35,071,912	6,768,879	11,243,202	2,169,937
Gain	44,450,611	8,578,967	10,465,925	2,019,924

GERMANY.

Minister Kasson forwards under date of April 27, 1885, a communication from the minister of foreign affairs of the German Empire, giving the information called for by the circular of the Secretary of the Treasury, except in regard to the imports and exports, which statement is forwarded under date of May 11, 1885, by Mr. Chapman Coleman, secretary of legation.

The coinage of the German mints during the calendar year 1884 was, gold, 57,661,740 marks ($13,723,494); silver, 483,336 marks ($114,319).

The import of gold coin was 4,407 kilograms ($2,928,892), and of gold bullion 2,649 kilograms ($1,760,525), making a total of 7,056 kilograms ($4,689,417).

The export of gold coin was 8,340 kilograms ($5,542,764), and of gold bullion 3,434 kilograms ($2,282,236), making a total of 11,774 kilograms ($7,825,000), a net loss by export of 4,718 kilograms ($3,135,582).

The imports of silver coin were 5,647 kilograms ($234,730), and of silver bullion 33,088 kilograms ($1,375,137), making a total of 38,736 kilograms ($1,609,868).

The exports of silver coin were 3,673 kilograms ($152,649), and of silver bullion 104,491 kilograms ($4,342,646), making a total of 108,164 kilograms ($4,495,295), a net loss by export of 69,428 kilograms ($2,885,427).

This shows that Great Britain lost in that year over four millions of gold, and Germany over three millions of gold and ten millions of silver; while France, a double-standard country, gained nine millions of gold and ten millions of silver; and the United States

Imported gold	$26,691,746
Exported gold	8,477,892
Gained in gold	18,213,854

SUFFERERS BY OVERFLOW.

Mr. NORWOOD obtained the floor.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to yield to me to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NORWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. FORNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 7645) for the relief of the sufferers by the overflow of the rivers in the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House joint resolution 155, which was reported back at the same time, was laid on the table.

SILVER QUESTION.

The House resumed the consideration of the special order.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, nothing but a proper respect for some of my constituents who differ with me on the subject of silver coinage could induce me to break that silence which to me is always so pleasing. It is also expected that, being a member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I should have something to say on this question. I shall not indulge in statistics. Senator BECK, who delivered the first speech on this subject during this session, and many other gentlemen in the Senate and House who have followed in very able speeches, well considered, have laid before the country all the learning on the subject of statistics. I shall follow a line of thought different from that which has been followed by any gentleman I have heard speak upon the question.

I have a view of what is the cause of the evils which have fallen upon our common country, and to that I shall mainly address myself. But before doing so I desire to take a hasty glance at some of the views that have been presented by members upon this floor.

Ever since Paul Dombey propounded the question to his father, that great financier and banker, "Papa, what is money?" volumes have been written, as volumes were written before, to answer the question. But the most satisfactory answer that I have ever heard is the one given by that great banker. As he looked down upon that diminutive financier, who was born tired, and who was pondering that great question, he said, "Money, my boy, is guineas, shillings, pounds, gold, silver, and copper." And there I shall let that question rest. [Laughter.] The question with which we have to do to-day, I think, is not what is money, but how shall we regulate money, what quantity shall we have, and of what kind shall it be. Every gentleman has a theory.

Everybody has a theory. In fact, Mr. Chairman, finance and rheumatism are the only human afflictions about which, by a special dispensation, all men are well informed. We can readily understand why this universal mastery of the malady of finance exists. It is due solely to the simplicity of the subject. But why there should be a like mastery of the other complicated disease is inexplicable, except on the theory that as both are governed by the same law of uncomfortable and sometimes violent contraction and expansion they must be of the same family. [Laughter.]

There exists no man, even though sad-eyed and chronic impecuniosity may have always claimed him for her own, who can not diagnosticate any attack of finance; and every rheumatic man, when bent hilt to point, like Falstaff in the buck-basket, has a remedy that will cure his rheumatic neighbor. The perfection of this knowledge is not to be discounted (as the subject is finance, I offer no apology for professional terms) by the variety of opinions, which, like men's watches, all differ, and yet each man believes his own. The leaves of the forest and the flowers of the field, though almost infinite in variety, are each and all perfect.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] prescribes gold as a sovereign remedy—in fact, a panacea. He stakes his professional reputation on the infallibility of his therapeutic formula—that "what is good for the goose is good for the gander;" what is satisfactory to the lender must be equally satisfactory to the borrower; what will support the wealthy must be equally nourishing for the poor; that a homeopathic dose for a poor man is as curative as an allopathic quantity for the rich, even though the latter's soothing draught may be an infusion as rare as that of Egypt's luxurious and lascivious queen when she drank the costly pearl. The immortal Doctor Sangrado was an advanced apostle of the doctrine of evolution which the gentleman from Maryland spoke of, though of the doctrine the doctor never had a thought. From all materia medica his genius evolved two remedies that he maintained against the world were a certain cure for every mortal disease, and they were "bleeding and hot water." But the gentleman from Maryland, who succeeded in the presence of this House in demonstrating that iron was evolved from dirt and brass from iron, silver from brass, gold from silver, and, finally, greenbacks and bank notes from gold, has taken a step in advance of Doctor Sangrado in that method of evolution which proceeds from the complex to the simple—from the heterogeneous to the homogeneous—by maintaining that hot water is not only a useless but hurtful application, and that all our maladies can be cured by simply bleeding the people.

When a patient, by dissipation and excessive drafts on his vitality, has lapsed to the stage of physical decay that saps his blood, his physician sends him to a slaughter-house to drink the warm blood of the fresh-slain bullock; and our financial doctors, when the Goddess of Commerce, standing on deck deserted and desolate, with cheeks wan and pale and eyes that have lost their luster, gazed on sea and air that are dead, without a tender breeze to fan her brow or move her vesture, assure her of the vitalizing power of deep potations of the toiling people's blood.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is equally clear that there is healing in the application of fiat shinplasters. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has discovered a potent sedative surpassing Clingman's tobacco cure, in a poultice of silver certificates. The chairman of the Committee on Coinage predicts the return of bloom to the pallid cheeks and of brightness like the gazelle's to all eyes by an airing behind a double team of yellow and gray, harnessed abreast, so that if one should back the other will pull us through—if one should dash away for Europe, the other will fall back on the breeching, and hold the first in check and prevent a smash-up.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], while approving the team of the Bland doctrinaire, advises a tandem, with a yellow Percheron in the lead and in the rear a puny piebald pony mule, with Yum Yum's ambling gait, with one fore leg sound, but which every veterinary doctor in the Treasury certifies can not travel, and the other so wasted from swinney that all admit it can not travel, and with subsidiary hind legs, one of which is shriveled from inanition and the other so shrunken and dry that even a starving disease would not waste time in an attack upon it—the relative indicated horse-power in those four supports being respectively represented, in the order named, by the figures, 412½, 420, 347, and nothing. The rich man takes the fine horse and the poor man rides the mule, and, mounted thus, they move cheerily on, presenting a spectacle of unmixed felicity in front and of infelicitous mixture in the rear.

Had I time, there are other shades of opinion I would like to notice, but the five gentlemen I have named represent the principal or main positions occupied in this contest. It has two angles more than were in Midshipman Easy's triangular duel; but there are really only three parties to the engagement, one is for an advance, one for a retreat, and the third for standing still and fighting it out on the present line. The first would advance by establishing free or unlimited coinage; the second would retreat by repealing the law requiring silver coinage, and the third says—do nothing; let well enough alone. I am a humble disciple in the third class.

To advance is to experiment—to test a theory. It is to abandon a certainty for an uncertainty. It is to speculate, it may be "to fly to ills we know not of." What the result might be rests now in argument, and about it wise men differ. The laws of finance are as subtle as the laws of life. We see their manifestations, but we know not their hidden movements. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth." This I say with commensurate respect for the Signal Service Bureau, and with the apologetic acknowledgment that the language quoted was uttered sometime before the bureau was established. In the physical as in the financial world a depression suddenly comes, whence and why no man can tell, and then follows fast and furious the cyclone or tornado, and men, helpless and dumb, go down before the pitiless storm. Where is the prophet who foretold the tempest that swept this country in September, 1873? It came as noiseless as the angel of death to the households in Egypt, and scarcely a roof in the land escaped its devastation. As a proud ship secretly scuttled at night suddenly goes down, a tall monarch of the forest in a dead calm falls without apparent cause, so the house of Jay Cooke & Co. in a night disappeared, and soon the whirlwind spread ruin in a swath as long and wide as the Union.

Whether free coinage of silver would raise the coin to a par with gold; whether it would create a depression that would force foreign silver in to fill it; whether it would brew rebellion in India and compel Great Britain to agree to an international standard; or whether it would create a panic and oppress the poor, no man can know, and therefore I hold it to be the part of wisdom at present not to try the experiment.

For the same reasons, in part, I oppose the suspension of silver coinage. There is nothing in our experience in the past eight years to convince us of the necessity for suspension. There is nothing to show it would be wise to go backward. The Bland law has done no demonstrable hurt to the country. Volumes have been written by financial essayists and economists and spoken by Congressmen against that law, but who among them has shown that the condition of the country is worse to-day than in 1878, when that act was passed? The experimentum crucis is better than all theories. Those who are now crying for the leeks and flesh-pots of Egypt were the ones who protested against setting out from the dark region under the leadership of the Missouri Moses, and who with wails prophesied that pharaoh would overtake us, and that our last end would be worse than the first. They were the purse-proud and the pampered few, and not the many who had to make bricks without straw and hew the wood and draw the water, and they played the rôle of prophets, and with affidavit faces foretold that gold would leave the country like an exile, never to return. They are of the Wiggins family of prophets. If their prophecy hits right, they are prophets; if it misses, they continue to prophesy.

But "tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon"—gold, then $228,000,000, has increased to more then $600,000,000. True, they say, but it just happened so. The balance of trade happened to be in our favor. But why did it happen so? We have not had a period of signal prosperity for the past eight years. The burden of complaint by the advocates of gold monometallism is that the silver coinage has depressed prices, stagnated business, disemployed labor, kept the people poor, and diminished their ability to purchase. This is a "petitio principii," a begging of the question. Does the existence of the facts stated prove the truth of the alleged cause? If so, why was not the country prosperous and everybody happy between 1873 and 1878, a period of five years, when gold was monarch and had no brother near the throne threatening its supremacy? Why is it that business is improving; that furnaces closed last year are in blast this year; that looms idle then are busy now; that stocks and bonds are higher this year than last, and higher last year than in 1884 or 1883; that there are fewer failures and for less amounts than two or three years ago; that confidence in business circles is stronger, while the mints, horribile dictu, are monthly stocking the country with two million cart-wheels that the Government, with all its reserve, not to say its suppressed power, can not make revolve.

And this suggests another objection to silver money, which is, that the people do not want it; that as fast as it is paid out it returns to the Treasury. This is the resort of a winged and crippled logic. What else should it do but return to the Treasury, as the law makes it payable for debts due the Government—for duties, customs, and internal revenue? The gold advocates speak of silver returning to the Treasury as if the people give it away, disown it with contempt. No, sir; the fault is in the Government, not the people. Gold is paid to the bondholders and the silver held in the vault. Silver is dishonored and depreciated by its own mother. It is not without honor save in the banks and Treasury.

I listened with close attention and deep interest to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] when he opened the debate as the advocate of gold, and with admiration divided between the ingenuity of his logic and his rhetorical decorations. His was no masked battery. He unlimbered in the open field, with the black flag waving over his magazine, and proclaimed he would give no quarter to the enemy—silver. And he must forgive me and attribute the vision I beheld to hallucination—a figment of the overwrought brain—when I tell him that floating hard by his black flag I saw, or imagined I saw, the union-jack—not planted there by him, but generously advanced by an ally ready to do battle in a common cause. I may have been dreaming like the king who in visions of the night saw the image which Daniel explained, but I am sure I did not mistake the motley image for the British lion.

I imagine I see him open his arms for an embrace and hear him tenderly say to the gentleman from Maryland, "I honor the steps that Ajax takes when they go from Achilles." He assaulted the silver dollar on the ground that it is too bulky for circulation; and yet in the next breath he admitted that neither gold nor silver is largely used as a medium of exchange, and that "the world's commerce has come to be carried on in great part by a secondary or representative currency." That is to say, the statue with feet of clay, legs of iron, body of brass, arms of silver, and head of gold, in the progress of modern financial evolution, is now crowned with a variegated chaplet of greenbacks and silver certificates. How consoling this must be to the gentleman from Iowa. What a curious piece of ingenuity this logic is. In trying to prove that silver is too bulky for currency he admits that gold is not used as currency and is chiefly valuable as a base on which paper or representative currency rests. While trying to advance in a charge on the position of silver the gentleman has backed away from his own position. His logic is like a piece of mechanism invented by a genius who called it "The compound duplex back-action hen elevator," the object of which was to prevent predatory chickens from invading his dwelling, and which, when adjusted to the locomotive power of a hen, would, by its back-action and elevation, convert her attempted forward motion into a backward step. Instead of advancing in the house, the hen found herself moving from her first position to the rear.

But the gentleman from Maryland is skilled in polemic warfare, and I take the liberty of warning him that the back-action logic he has used in his attempted advance on silver will end in his backing into the camp of General WEAVER, who may or may not "welcome him with bloody hands to a hospitable grave." His disappointment on seeing his idol of gold give way to greenbacks will be as great as that of Apollo, who, madly enamored of Daphne, gave chase to her, and at the exquisite moment of his expected triumph he witnessed her transformation into the laurel.

But the gentleman from Maryland and others reiterate the charge of Lombard street (London) that our silver dollar is dishonest, is a licensed swindler, a land pirate, bearing letters of marque and reprisal granted by the United States to roam over the country and pick the pockets of the poor (for the rich, he says, it can not reach to despoil), and when gorged with spoils and weary of pillage it returns to its place of departure like a discharged criminal returning to his prison. Why is it a dishonest dollar? Mr. Chairman, I have heard this charge repeated with "damnable iteration," and yet I have not heard one reason given to sustain it except the one I shall hereafter speak of. Is it not of standard weight and fineness? Is it not one-half ounce more in the pound than our silver dollar was for eighty years? Is it not about in the ratio of silver to gold the world over—15½ to 1? Will it not purchase at home as much as a gold dollar will? Is it not coined by the United States, bearing the stamp and declaration of sixty million people that it is a dollar and worth a dollar in gold? Is it not receivable by our Government in payment of all dues to it? Is it not a legal tender for all debts, public and private? Can any more be said of gold? Then why dishonest? Why is this insult to the honor of every American citizen given abroad, repeated at home?

Sir, it is only because Great Britain values it as bullion, and will not pay any more for it. This is the head and front of its offending, no more. And for this alone contempt is cast upon it by calling it the "buzzard" dollar. The gentleman spoke of this age of evolution. It is one, indeed. The superior learning of the children in ornithology has discovered that the eagle of our fathers is the buzzard of their children. And now, disassociating the gentleman from Maryland and all others from what I shall say, and speaking of "the force and pressure of the times" in a general way, I will say, that, if the eagle was evolved from the buzzard, when we scan America closely we will find very narrow ground on which to establish proof that the law of reversion is not in rapid operation. It is a law of nature that the stomach is adapted to what the animal feeds on; and, viewing our history for the last quarter of a century with the preceeding three-quarters, well may the eagle molt his royal plumage and put on sable, for the earth is strewn with garbage and the air is filled with offenses that smell to heaven. I speak not as a Democrat, nor as a partisan, nor as a Southerner. I speak as an American citizen, proud of my country and her glory and physical achievements, but ashamed of her moral decline. But I will speak of that hereafter.

The capacity of the sons of this day to see a buzzard in the form which to the eyes of the fathers was nothing less than an eagle is doubtless due to difference in thought and education. The father was educated at home, in America; the son is educated abroad, in Europe and by Europe. The father was narrow in his views—was American in feeling, instinct, hope, and pride; the son is broad and generous, and takes into his bounty Great Britain and Germany. The father struggled to build up an American fleet to carry the commerce of his country to all the world; the son in his generosity has destroyed the Navy, sold out his stock to let England monopolize the business. The father believed it his duty to coin money for the benefit of his own country; the son thinks it his duty to coin silver for the benefit of Great Britain and Germany. The father believed in a strict construction of the Federal Constitution; the son calls the old man "an old fogy," and goes for the greatest latitude. The father was a plain gentleman, dressed neatly, believed in good government, called stealing "theft" and punished it, and worked for his living; the son dresses as richly as a gambler, believes in good government for everybody except himself, calls stealing "unfortunate speculation," using trust funds "crookedness in his accounts," and lives by generously dividing with the laborer the laborer's own earnings, that is, when the son is not hard up and needs it all for "margins" or a yacht. The father in sixty years was unable to produce but one great sensation in the way of embezzlement, the case of Swartwout in 1836; but the son with steadier nerves and improved tools astonished the world with at least a dozen of greater brilliancy in fifteen years, such as Credit Mobilier, three-card monte, whisky ring, division and silence, District of Columbia vast enterprise, star-route rapid service, and Freedmen's Bureau slight-of-hand. With such advanced knowledge of the sons can it be a matter of wonder that they have discovered a buzzard on the dollar of their fathers? If the dollar at which they look is polished like a mirror the mistake is very natural.

It is charged by the friends of silver that a conspiracy exists for its destruction. I will not go to the length of saying that a conspiracy is formally organized. But there is a consensus among and subordination of the monometallists to a foreign power, and the effect is as damaging to silver as if it were produced by an actual conspiracy. The head center is not in America; it is in London—the world's financial focus.

I once stood on the east bank of the beautiful Satilla, flowing gently as sweet Afton, and, pitching my voice to the dense wood on the opposite side, a thousand responses echoed from leaf and leaflet beyond. When Lombard Street on the eastern side of the Atlantic cries "Gold!" every city, town, banking-house, and bondholder on the western shore echoes "Gold!" The hasheesh-eater, in a delirium from thirst, in a deserted street with houses stretching as far as his vision could reach, shouted "Water!" and instantly from ten thousand windows the heads of as many lunatics, with glaring eyes and protruding tongues, were thrust, and from every tongue rang out the frantic echo, "Water!" Lombard Street, thirsting for gold, exclaims, "Dishonest silver dollar!" and through every street and avenue of commerce radiating from and connected with that gold center is reverberated by ten thousand bondholders and bankers, "Dishonest silver dollar!" Lombard Street to Wall Street says: "Do you see yonder cloud that's almost in shape like a camel?" Wall Street, as obsequious and fawning as old Polonius, replies: "By the mass, and it is like a camel, indeed." Lombard Street: "Methinks it is like a weasel." Wall Street: "It is backed like a weasel." Lombard Street: "Or like a whale." Wall Street: "Very like a whale!" Lombard Street declares that the American silver dollar is worth only 80 cents in British money, and Wall Street echoes: "Yes; our silver dollar is worth only 80 cents in British money." Lombard Street proclaims that "the American silver dollar is a fraud and a lie." Wall Street, like a starling, the insult repeats: "The American silver dollar is a fraud and a lie." Lombard Street says: "Your silver dollar is worth no more than so much silver bullion." And Wall Street takes the insult and jabbers: "Our silver dollar is worth no more than so much silver bullion!"

About a hundred years ago some rebels asserted in an almost forgotten manuscript that Congress alone has the power "to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin." They denied the power of king or queen to regulate the value of American coin. Some of their children still revere that manuscript, and in their simplicity believe it to be their right and duty to coin money for our own people and to regulate the value thereof for home use. If our fathers, those Innocents Abroad, erred, why should not we of great faith be forgiven? "If Adam in the days of innocency fell, what shall be said of poor Jack Falstaff in these days of villainy?" Why shall the silver advocates, who try to maintain the honesty of our country's coin and to regulate its value, be condemned for entering our feeble protest against that regulation being committed by Wall street and banks and bondholders to the tender mercies of Lombard street, the Bank of England, and the Queen of Great Britain?

One hundred and ten years ago our rebel fathers proclaimed their independence of the British Crown. The king then, as the queen now, coined, stamped, and issued the coin of the realm by Divine right. And while we save the queen the trouble and expense of coining American money, she still regulates the value thereof. "Paul may plant and Apollos may water," but the Queen of Great Britain alone giveth us the decrease. We escaped the tyranny of the British Crown to fall under the despotism of British gold. It is time for a second Declaration of Independence, but it must be made by the yeomanry of the land. The moneyed power of the country is impotent, and interested in our enslavement. A class who repudiate their country's coin because a foreign government calls it bullion can not be trusted to rescue their country from the slavery of British gold.

After a few words on my own position on the silver question I will present my views on what I believe to be the cause of our troubles. I believe we should stand still—neither adopt free coinage nor suspend the present coinage. I have shown that we have done well in the past eight years of silver coinage. We have acquired about $400,000,000 of Europe's gold. Property has appreciated and business is improving. Let us stand still. Should our condition grow worse, we can then determine what to do. We have invited Europe twice to negotiate and have been refused. We are getting her gold, and she is growing uneasy. The leading business body of London has appealed to Parliament to remonetize silver as a legal tender. The business men of Germany are moving at large for relief from gold monometallism. A financial seismic movement more powerful and alarming than one of her earthquakes is shaking Spain. Let us stand still. We are in the dark, and need light before it is prudent to move. The dawn is breaking in the east, and soon we can move with assurance of safety.

I have said that our evils are not due to too little or too much silver; and with a hasty and imperfect notice of what I believe to be the real cause I shall close.

In this country we have three classes: First, the producers, who are farmers, manufacturers, miners, and inventors; second, middle-men, who are merchants, commission men, brokers, and others; and, third, the wreckers! Economists and financiers, many of them sincere but boy-blind, believe our ills arise from silver. Others know better; but, disingenuous and crafty, they throw silver out as a decoy to the people, as a tub to the whale. The number of grains of silver in our dollar, the limited number of silver dollars (less than three hundred millions), and their bulk and inconvenient form have little more effect in producing the business depression and suffering in this land of plenty than the influence of the Pleiades. There is an effect, but it is factitious; it is the white-cap beaten up by the whales and sharks prowling for shoals of smaller fish. The effect is an ominous ground-swell on the bosom of this human sea, to allay which the whales would be wise to throw upon it some of their oil garnered from millions of victims.

Sir, the wreckers! the wreckers! are the source of our Iliad. To their doors I trace the tracks that lead from thousands of homes despoiled and desolate. In their coffers are locked countless ingots of the people's sweat and blood. And who are these wreckers? They are the minks, who under cover of night rob the farmer. They are the hawks, that perch and watch and bide their time to drop upon their prey. They are the eagles, that circle above, and seize the lambs, and with bloody beak and talons rend and devour them. They are the spiders, who spin their webs by night and entangle their victims by day. They are the bulls, who toss and gore to death those whom the bears do not squeeze to death. "They sow not, neither do they spin, but Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them." They are those who in the East wreck banks and railroads, and in the West wreck mines and miners.

The calamities that attended the late war between the States no prophecy could have foretold, no inspiration can ever record. Genius and learning, character stamped with nobility, virtue, and honor, statesmanship, and our common country's pride, went down on both sides in every furious onset. The sun that rose with blessings on happy wives and children looked back sadly upon them at evening's parting as mourning widows and orphans. Wealth gathered in youth's vigor and manhood's prime took the wings of flame and flew away, and age was left helpless in pitiable despair, broken and bent to the earth never to hope again. Behind it was nothing but desolation, before it no relief but the welcome of the grave, to reach which it must tread with tottering steps the lone sands of time where not a flower appeared. And all over the South black chimneys stand like monuments raised to tell future generations the line of the bloody march of war, and at whose base in grassy shelter the lizzards play by day and from whose spectral form at night the hooting owl intensifies the aching desolation around.

But there are sorrows and misfortunes which time can heal or mitigate. Property is being replaced. The grave is giving oblivion and rest to the broken heart of age. The orphans are now busy in the battle of life. The widow's grief is mellowed by time into twilight sadness and is softened by sweet memories. But another and a greater evil than these sprang from that conflict, like the destroying genius which leaped from the flame kindled by the magician. While the South lost over two billions of wealth, the North acquired more than that amount. It came from profits in contracts, the par value given to her bonds and paper money; and appreciation of all property by the triumphant result of the war. It was as if billions of the wealth of the South before the war had been doubled and suddenly transferred to the credit of the North. Then came extravagance, wild speculation, vast enterprises, and the wreckers. On the shore of the great Pacific—in the land of golden sunsets and golden sands—where Nature in lavish profusion seems to have attained her limit in the magnificence of vegetation, the glory of the sky and climate and the accumulation of mineral wealth, the wreckers appeared, and, by the power of union for destruction, they swept by stealth and cunning from the laboring masses hundreds of millions in less then ten years. In the East, since 1865, billions of dollars, by systematic wrecking of railroads and other vast enterprises and of individuals, have been, as if by Aladdin's ring, gathered from the toiling millions into the vaults of a few wreckers. We have seen fortunes varying from ten to two hundred million dollars accumulated by one man in less than twenty years; and to-day the majority of the wealth of this vast country is held by less than 1 per cent. of our population.

To determine where we stand, whether on a rock foundation or a crumbling brink, let us take a hasty retrospect of our country. At the laying of the corner-stone of our Government and for a human generation after, virtue and honor were the people's guide and shibboleth. They demanded these virtues of every public servant. That was our golden—our Augustan age. Then sectional interests began to clash and slavery became a national issue, and the North and South, through sectional pride and interests, disregarded personal virtue and substituted intellect. Then followed the gladiatorial age. The question was not What is he? but What can he do? What are his skill and strength, and can he meet the Philistine? Political parties cared little for personal honor and that high character that should shine afar across the land as a guide and example to youth. That period covers the second epoch in our history, and expired only at the close of the war—the genius and ability chosen by North and South, for the four years of that struggle, being selected from the military, instead of civil life. In the first epoch virtue was power; in the second, intellect was master; in the third and present, money is king. It dominates all sections, all classes, all stations, all creeds, and both sexes. The wealth of the wreckers has poisoned every social avenue as the leprous distillment coursed through every vein of Denmark's king. The inquiry now is not for virtue or intellect, but "What is he worth?" The ambition of the young is not to be a Washington or a Jefferson, or a Great Expounder of the Constitution. It is to be the modern Crœsus. This power of money—this plutocracy—has been enthroned and crowned by the wreckers in crowded cities, the hives of these pampered drones who feed on the honey gathered by the bees of industry in ten thousand fields. There they hybernate, and unable to spend their vast incomes, when spring arrives they depart to get rid of the accumulation.

Before the war Newport and Saratoga were resorts for men and women of culture, who congregated for bodily recreation, health, and communion of thought. Now they are the grounds for an annual fair, where living figures are assembled to advertise the largest diamonds and the richest silks of Tiffany and Worth. Between the fairs, to get rid of themselves, the wreckers fly to Europe, and render America the jest and jibe of chambermaids and hostlers and a butt for ridicule by the lazzaroni. They purchase daubs for Titians, Rembrandts, and Meissoniers at fabulous figures, sold by the square yard in French cafés and beer-saloons. Returning home, they affect rejoicing that their feet are once more on America's "terra-cotta." They convulse their educated servants by rapturous descriptions of the "Venus de Medicine" and the "Apollo-Belladonna," and display with pride their bric-a-brac made of the finest "terra-firma" or of the latest "larvæ" from Vesuvius.

While the fathers are rearing a brood of dudes and dunces, and educating them in the art of wrecking, as old Fagan instructed the Artful Dodger and Oliver Twist, the mothers and daughters, instead of trying to give to their country jewels, such as the mother of the Gracchi pointed to with pride—instead of nursing young Websters and Adamses and Marshalls, are spending thousands of dollars and incurring the risk of apoplexy from brain fatigue in nursing parrots, poodles, and pugs. While just around the corner are twenty, thirty, or forty families, crowded and packed away under one roof of a six-story house, living in squalor, hungry and ragged, seeking work but finding none, living and dying in disease-breeding air, the pugs and poodles on Fifth avenue are the favored objects of the tenderest maternal care and lack nothing of earth's luxuries and pleasures except intellectual companionship. And should one of these quadruped members of the family grow weary of the repetition of platitudes at home and in a fit of ennui violate domestic discipline and seek society in some neighbor's yard, a reward is offered for the return of that worthless, dirty dog, sufficient in amount to feed those famishing families for at least a month.

But what cares the wrecker for those starving poor! His business is to wreck, not to aid. Like Captain Kidd, his gain comes by sinking and gathering in.

> He cares not for those who go down in the cutter,
> He's thinking of the biscuit casks and butter.

What cares he for the husband and father he ruined yesterday, for the wife and mother then living in affluence, who to-day is weeping in yon garret plying her needle, rusty from tears, to the "Song of the Shirt," to earn a loaf of bread; or for the tender daughter, raised in luxury and the child of prayer, now driven by want and hunger to dishonor and shame, as in her rounds and tramps on a winter night she pauses to look wistfully into the wrecker's palace on the gorgeous display of wealth gathered in part from her father, now a suicide, and catching the maddening notes of "Sweet home" floating out from the gilded-saloon in mockery of her, she rushes wildly to the waters of the Hudson to end the horrors of life?

Whenever these wreckers fix their basilisk eyes on a corporation its fate is sealed. A pliant board is elected or an existing board is bribed; all profits are put into betterments; no dividends are declared; the stock at once declines; the wreckers fabricate and circulate damaging rumors; the small holders—the poor, the widows and orphans, dependent on those dividends—are forced to sell, are "squeezed out." The stock is further depressed by every forced sale, then the bonds decline, and the wreckers, like the jackal hid in the bushes watching the lion die, steal out and buy the bonds, and when a majority is secured the only remaining step is a judicial process to sweep the stockholders away. And thus the producers are robbed and labor loses its just reward. If these wreckers had never appeared, billions of useless and idle wealth would be in the hands of those who produced it, and this people would be the happiest on the earth.

And these are the men who are in league with Lombard street in this war on silver. Why should they not be? If gold were our only currency, one dollar would buy what two can buy. This untold wealth would be almost doubled, for the value of a dollar is its purchasing and debt-paying power.

These are the men who are keeping America bound to the Crown of Great Britain by the domination of British gold. They see no good in any coin that England will not receive, and therefore silver is condemned.

These are the men who, like Aaron, have fashioned a golden calf for virtue and intellect to worship. By the vulgar display of wealth in "barbaric pearls and gold" emulation has been stimulated until dishonesty in bank officers is about the rule, and Canada has become the Elysian Botany Bay for American thieves, who, without trial or sentence, go into voluntary exile.

The wrecker is the man who gives as his reason for opposing silver that his heart's desire is for the wage-earner to get an honest dollar. He descends from his sanctuary in Wall street as the high priest came from the sacrifice of doves, and with garments dripping with the blood of a thousand "lambs" just sacrificed to Mammon beseeches the people to share with him an honest dollar. His philanthropy and beseeching face as he pleads with his victims to receive honest money beggars Webster's Unabridged. Burke exhausted his almost boundless resources in the "Sublime and Beautiful;" Shakspeare portrays his ideal of a friend in the noble character of Iago, as he strove by every manly appeal to allay the jealousy of Othello; he has given his best conception of a Christian creditor in the measured justice and mercy of Shylock; Dickens touched the limit of descriptive power in the pious sincerity of Mr. Pecksniff and the statuesque posing of Mr. Turveydrop; Bret Harte has aroused the sympathy of millions by his tearful pathos in illustrating the gentle, the childlike and bland, the Celestial heathen Chinee; but when and whence shall come another Burke, another Shakspeare, Dickens, or Harte, who can rise to the height of his great argument, and do justice to the beauty and sublimity, the disinterested, the self-sacrificing friendship, the Christian justice, the unmitigated sincerity, the exquisite pose, and the celestial innocence of the wrecker, as he implores the people to "come without money and without price" and accept from his hands an honest dollar?

They are the men who have conspired and combined their hundreds of millions to oppress the laborers, and they are responsible for the counter-combinations of laborers to resist that oppression and to maintain the dignity of labor. The "strikes" are a protest against the heartless oppression of combined capital. They are the only hopeful sign of deliverance from the wreckers, and I hail it with a feeling of relief. The issue is at last joined, and the contest is between the wreckers and the strikers. My sympathies are with the strikers when they keep within the law. Public sympathy will support them so long as they are prudent and peaceful and respect the law, and within the law I bid them Godspeed in their struggle with the wreckers.

They should not feel discouraged. They are gaining ground. Public sympathy for them is stronger than in 1876 during the strike at Pittsburgh. They should not appeal to Congress for assistance. This is not the place to seek relief, even if Congress had the power to give it. It is to be found in the big heart of this mighty people; in lawful combinations and the use of lawful measures to oppose the tyranny of this vast aggregation of money in a few hands; by educating the people to heap scorn and contempt on the men who, through gluttonous greed for millions more, are grinding the poor to death; by taking care to be represented in every Legislature by pure, just, and able men; by retiring to private life every representative and office-holder who, with no income but his salary, acquires wealth while in office; by cultivating a patriotism that embraces all sections in a common brotherhood and destroys forever all unkind feeling and sentiment engendered by the war, and by refusing at all times to make wealth the test of qualification for office, or to permit it to buy its way to office and to power.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended.

Mr. ROCKWELL was recognized.

Mr. NORWOOD. Can I not have some additional time?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I desire to yield the first half of the hour allotted to me to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] and the second half to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague's time be extended for fifteen minutes in view of the fact that we are to have a session to-night.

Mr. FELTON. If I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to make a proposition, by consent of the House, that the time for debate be extended for one hour longer than has been ordered. Otherwise I shall have to object to an extension of the time. There are some points in the argument of the gentleman from Georgia to which I would like to reply.

Mr. MCCOMAS. How much time does the gentleman from Georgia want?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California, if permitted, will take the floor and yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Georgia. [Cries of "Regular order!"] But the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts; and as it is it can only be done by unanimous consent. The demand for the regular order will prevent the Chair from recognizing the gentleman from California for that purpose.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland to yield to me for a suggestion or request to the House.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to ask, in behalf of a number of gentlemen who wish to speak upon this question, consent of the House, instead of the previous question being considered as pending at 3 o'clock to-morrow, that it shall be pending at 3 o'clock on Saturday next, and that all day to-morrow be devoted to the debate, the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to be called at 3 o'clock Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The bill could not be considered on Saturday at all except by unanimous consent or by displacing a prior order of the House.

Mr. BLAND. But I ask that Saturday be set apart expressly for this business.

The SPEAKER. It has already been set apart for another special order. Of course, by unanimous consent the request of the gentleman can be acceded to.

Mr. CRISP. There is a prior order for next Saturday for the consideration of business from the Committee on Commerce. I shall object to that order being interfered with.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by several gentlemen to assigning Saturday, which is already set apart for business reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAND. Then I suggest that the order be changed so that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on Friday at 5 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request now made by the gentleman from Missouri that the consideration of this measure shall be continued to-morrow and until 5 o'clock on Friday, at which time the previous question shall be considered as pending?

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NORWOOD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, the essential part of the dollar of the fathers was not in the gold weight of the one coin nor in the silver weight of the other coin, but in the equality of value fixed in both. The dollar of either metal was to be the one thing, the unit of value. The silver and gold coin were both conformed in their real values to the unit of value, and for such the law provided free coinage of both metals into coins of full legal tender as dollars. Such was the bimetallism of Hamilton, of Jefferson, of Benton, and of our laws of 1792, of 1834, and even of 1878. Such are honest dollars. Anything else is not bimetallism. Anything else is not an honest dollar. The avowed object, at least, of the silver legislation of the past ten years was to establish "a common ratio between gold and silver for the purpose of establishing internationally the use of bimetallic money and securing fixity of value between those metals."

THE OUTLAWRY OF SILVER.

The evil we seek to cure is the outlawry of silver, a policy adopted by the leading commercial nations of Europe. England led the movement, and in 1816 adopted the gold standard. After the fall of Paris, in 1871, the new German Empire discarded silver and adopted the single gold standard. Belgium, Holland, and France followed, and between 1874 and 1878 by successive measures limited or suspended the coinage of silver. A universal single gold standard was the ambition of European economists and statesmen. I believe that the single gold standard is injurious to the welfare of all the peoples of the Western world. I believe that a double standard of silver and gold is best for all nations, and in manifold ways essential for our own country. I hope for the speeding of the day when the coinage of silver will be as free in the United States as the coinage of gold by an international concert upon a common ratio of value between the two metals, with open mints for the coinage of both metals at that ratio.

Fifteen years have passed since Germany stopped silver coinage, twelve years since it ceased to be free in the Lation Union, ten years since it was stopped in France.

THE SILVER ACT OF 1878.

Now, what have we done to bring back to its old position the white metal?

We called the monetary conferences of 1878 and 1881. Though both failed, they were not without result.

What else? We passed the Bland act February 28, 1878, providing for the coinage at our mints of silver dollars of 412½ grains of standard silver as legal-tender dollars, and for the coinage of not less than two nor more than four million dollars' worth of silver bullion per month into such dollars.

Senator BECK (January 10, 1878) voted for this measure, "having no sort of doubt," as he said, "that in a very few years gold and silver will come together at about the standard they occupied before the law of 1873 was passed."

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], with the same confidence in the result, guided this measure through the House. "Everybody will be rich in a moment if we pass this bill;" "this bill will force the nations of Europe to restore silver;" "silver will at once rise to par"—such was the language of debate and such the sentiment of the hour, when Mr. BECK and Mr. BLAND predicted and Congress by an overwhelming vote enacted 412½ grains of silver was worth 92 cents. Ever since it has fallen steadily year by year. Even though Senator BECK had no sort of doubt that our silver dollar would rise long ere this from 92 cents to 100 cents, it has fallen to 79 cents in value.

The Bland act was to give life and vigor to business, quicken industry, give employment to labor, prove the "sovereignest thing on earth" for the debtor classes, raise the prices of products, lighten the burdens of poverty, bring food to the hungry.

The prophecies have all failed. The medicine of the Bland act has not even alleviated the disease.

Eight years have passed, and now United States Treasurer Jordan reports that "during the past year more of the standard silver dollars were returned to the Treasury than were issued; that the percentage of the outstanding dollars to the total coinage has fallen from 30.8 per cent. in 1881 to 18.8 per cent. at the close of 1885; that at this time the amount held by the Treasury is an increase of $25,701,551 over the amount held at the end of the preceding year, and that the execution of this law is generally converting the funds of the Treasury into standard silver dollars."

The limited coinage of unequal dollars has failed to restore the equality of gold and silver. The present coinage of debased dollars coincides with the steady decline of silver.

FREE COINAGE.

On all sides we see depression in business, falling prices, check of investments in enterprises giving employment, alarm of capital, and loud over all the complaint of labor in sore distress, its grievances more and more articulate. Amid this depression we are now asked to bring chaos, to once for all abandon bimetallism, to finally break the parity of our money with a premium on gold and a discount on silver.

Those who predicted evil from the Bland act may be disappointed, but those who hoped relief from it have been disappointed already. The same false prophets now offer a free-coinage bill as a specific for all the ills of society. Their bill provides that any holder of silver bullion of the value of fifty dollars or more, standard fineness, shall be entitled to have the same coined into standard silver dollars of 412½ grains, and that this dollar shall be the unit of account and standard of value in like manner as now provided for the gold dollar, and shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except where otherwise stipulated.

With such a law, say the minority of the committee, we can dictate the value of silver and gold to the world.

It is precisely the law which a few silver kings of Colorado and Nevada will gladly dictate to the toiling millions of America. It is a bill to give the owners of silver bullion and of silver mines the difference between the market value of bullion and the coined dollar; a profit which, during eight years of silver coinage, has yielded twenty-five million dollars to the Government. A profit vastly increased by free coinage of all the bullion the mines turn out is by this bill taken from the people and presented to the bonanza kings.

Pass this bill, and all the trade-dollars at home will be hurried to the Mint; all trade-dollars in China, the silver of the East, the silver thalers of Germany will be hurried by speculators in the swiftest ships to our mints; we will draw copious supplies from the mines of Mexico; and all of this silver, coming from the melting-pot as bullion, may alike demand and receive a legal-tender dollar for every 79 cents' worth of the metal.

Pass this bill, and the nations of Europe will melt and sell you from their thousand million silver dollars an abundant measure. Holland has already passed a law to melt and sell silver to maintain her gold reserve.

Now, this danger Messrs. BLAND, BYNUM, and LANHAM, in their minority report, coolly evade by a violent assumption. "It is not to be supposed," say they, "that France, for instance, would be willing to lose $18,000,000 in order to exchange a part of her silver for a portion of our gold or the whole of it."

But France owns her silver now, and if she sell it now for what it is worth in gold she loses nothing. The argument of the committee is the American silver is worth 79 cents and the French silver worth 76 cents; therefore France will not take our gold 100-cent dollars in exchange.

The banks of Europe will by individual enterprise cable sales of silver. No restriction to keep out foreign silver by law has been devised. No human foresight can exclude it, in fact. The bullion, the coin, and plate of the world will have a strong affinity for the only mint in the commercial nations open for the free coinage of silver.

Pass this bill, and the young Vanderbilts may melt their silver spoons at a profit to pay the wages of the poor man at their doors. Jay Gould may melt his silver plate and harness, coin it at our mints, and in derision pocket 20 cents on the dollar in paying his struggling railway employés. If after coining near thirty millions of these dollars annually for eight years we find they have fallen from 92 cents to 79 cents, by coining fifty millions annually we can not raise the value of the dollar to 100 cents.

We are to have thereby a "parallel standard" and not a double standard; a currency divided pretty equally for a while between 79-cent dollars and 100-cent dollars.

It is quite as dangerous to afford free coinage of 100-cent silver dollars alongside 79-cent gold dollars as to coin 79-cent silver dollars alongside 100-cent gold dollars. The first ends in debased gold monometallism, the second in debased silver monometallism.

The friends of free coinage hopelessly abandon bimetallism for the single silver standard. They want an exclusively American standard. With as much reason they may want an exclusively American postage-stamp to carry a letter around the world under five different flags, or an exclusively American law of gravitation.

The free-traders of this House, yearning for free exchanges, would by this bill isolate us from Europe, and instead of a sound currency, the best defense of the home market, the best avenue to the foreign market, they would compel our $1,500,000,000 of trade with the Western world to be carried on by buying at a gold valuation and selling at a silver valuation.

Surely when these clipped silver dollars equal in number the full-sized gold dollars, under free coinage, in a day we may cross the danger-line, with a premium of 20 per cent. or more on the hoarding and export of gold. This is inflation which does not inflate, and when the unequal dollars suddenly cease to circulate side by side, comes contraction, sudden, violent, and sharp. Then the rich alone are safe. The importer can still pay this dollar for customs duty. In settlement of balances he can pay it to the Government. The broker can invest betimes in foreign exchange. The banks will be astute to ship it back to the Treasury as fast as they get it, just as they do now. The words of exception in the bill, "legal tender for all debts, public and private, except where otherwise stipulated," will be the salvation of the "gold-bugs."

I admit these words need not be inserted, but I do not know which is more to be wondered at, the generous gift of the profits of coinage to the "silver kings" at the head of the bill, or the tender solicitude for the "gold-bugs" in the tail of it, in needlessly inviting them to make gold contracts. Long before the danger-line is reached they will require payment of their mortgages in gold at a premium, while they compel the poor man to take payment for his labor in legal-tender silver dollars at a discount. Then will be the peril to little homes half paid for and to labor, for in times of inflation real estate and labor are slowest to rise in prices. It is true you may then have cheap money to pay the indebtedness of the Government, but you at the same time have a debased currency for the payment of labor; for silver is exchanged daily for daily bread. Silver is the money of wages and retail, of the farmer, the mechanic, the miner.

THE NEED OF ABUNDANT SILVER MONEY—GOOD SILVER.

The people who are to use most of this coin are the poor and the men of small means, the wage-earner and the farmer, who have always suffered at last by these tricks with the currency, always performed with the pretense that it is for their relief. Think you they have forgotten so soon the trade-dollar which so suddenly the merchants would only take at a discount and the banks would not take at all? A good and stable currency is the best protection of the weak against the strong. With bad money the laboring man loses his reckoning in fixing wages or in spending his earnings.

With a fluctuating currency he is at the mercy of the retail dealer, whom he can no longer check by the customary price per pound, per yard, or per bushel. You want to exercise the sovereign power of this Government by continuing to coin gold dollars at the unit of value, worth 100 cents the world over, and to coin everybody's silver into dollars at a different standard of value, worth 79 cents the world over. I appeal to the workingman, the retail merchants, the farmers, who have labor, wares, and produce to sell to decide what sort of friendship to them it is, which says the money paid to them shall be worth 20 cents less than the money of the "gold-bugs;" which lets the employer, the great corporation, or capitalist shrewdly hoard gold, and at his option pay the workingmen in this pinched coin, which will not buy them by 20 per cent. as much bread and meat.

Every laboring man who goes home at evening thinking of the bread he has earned for his wife and children is a creditor for that day. He is a creditor of the bloated manufacturer for that day or week or fortnight or month.

When trouble comes between the two different dollars coined free at a "Parallel Standard," when the rich are taking care of their own, then will you be reproached, because you did not protect the large majority from two different length measures of cloth, two different sized half bushels for corn, two different weight pounds for meat; because you leave it open for the bulls and bears of Wall street and Lombard street to change the value of the coin the wage-earner is to get even while he is earning it; because you double the chances of the cards in the gamester's hands by stocking them in this way to cheat the laboring masses; because you insert in the bill that your 79-cent dollar shall be a legal tender for all debts, "except where otherwise stipulated"—a hint to the crafty and wise among the rich to make gold contracts with their borrowers.

EFFECT OF FREE COINAGE—THE FARMER—THE MINER.

With free coinage your depreciated silver dollar may be made to pass for a dollar in our local commerce. It will be the only dollar in use, as the minority of the committee admit virtually. With free coinage it will not be a dollar in Liverpool when the farmers of Maryland send their wheat across the water to that market of the world. The value at our seaports of the wheat of Maryland will be measured by the gold price in Liverpool, while it will be paid for in the inferior coin of our country. Sold for gold at Liverpool and paid for in silver at home, the difference mainly will be taken from the producer and will go into the pockets of the speculator, the middle-men between the markets of Liverpool and the granaries of Maryland and Minnesota.

Already the pending tariff bill before the Ways and Means Committee threatens to strike off the tariff of 75 cents per ton on coal, which is one-third of the price of Cumberland coal at the seaboard, and this, too, at a time when the miners are in sore distress contending for better wages, declaring by widespread suspension from labor their sincere belief. But already, because of a vicious exception in the tariff, by free coinage of clipped silver dollars, the deserving miners of Allegheny will find that the coal they dig at scant wages reaches the seaport there to compete in supplying fuel to foreign and coastwise vessels with coal from Cardiff in Wales or Nova Scotia, mined by men paid at the rate of 100 cents on the dollar in gold, while our miners will, when the danger-line is reached, receive only 79-cent dollars as wages. I warn the workingmen that when under free coinage the two dollars part company the silver dollar at 20 per cent. discount will pay customs duties and at once make a horizontal cut of 20 per cent. on our whole tariff list, and just as fully as could the Morrison bill of the last Congress.

THE SETTLED JUDGMENT OF MANKIND.

In international commerce there is no statute of legal tender. In the traffic with nations transactions are settled by the weight of the metal, not by the superscription. You may here declare by statute that 80 cents and 100 cents are equal, or that a bushel of potatoes shall be worth a bushel of wheat, but you can not enforce either declaration against the settled judgment of mankind. A pound in Maryland must weigh a pound in Liverpool. There is one weight of cotton in Georgia and the same weight of cotton in Manchester. The yard-stick is an English invention, which we can not shorten or lengthen in England by the fiat of Congress here. The Winchester bushel is our bushel, and three centuries old. If you change it by the act of Congress the wheat in the hold of the vessel will shrink to the English standard when the vessel touches Southampton.

So gold and silver are money by force of universal law. So, no matter what we do here with the coin in an attempt to add to its value or take away from its value by legislation, the commercial value mainly fixes the value of the coin in circulation. National legislation may recognize the value of coin. International agreement may equalize the value of coin.

OUR POLICY IS TO WAIT.

What, then, may we do now? Let us look abroad to see what progress the cause of bimetallism has made in Europe. My friend from New York [Mr. JAMES], in his able speech the other day, gave a comprehensive survey of the agitation in every land where the gold standard prevails for a return to bimetallism. It is encouraging. Hundreds of agricultural societies in Germany appeal for the establishment of the international double standard guaranteed by treaty. The Reichstag voted last month for an inquiry looking toward a return to bimetallism. France is now more willing than in the past to unite with us in negotiations for international bimetallism. Even in England we find members of the commission on depression in trade, the chambers of commerce, and the public press declaring that the value of silver must be made permanent.

India, her chief dependency, with silver monometallism, is clamoring for an adjustment of silver and gold, because her revenues and products in trade with England shrink in purchasing power, while her imports swell in price, and trade is absolutely dislocated.

Holland is thoroughly in favor of bimetallism; the other members of the Latin Union are beginning to grow more friendly. But until beyond the sea there is a public sentiment strong enough among the people of France and Germany to compel those governments to unite with us, our Government alone can not dictate the value of silver to the world.

What can we do then? We can wait until we can enlist international co-operation. We can refuse, with unlimited coinage of pinched dollars, to put out to sea without a sail or a rudder or a compass, trusting to the fiat of Congress? After all, this free-coinage agitation may be merely thunder in the index, for in the appendix to the report of Messrs. BLAND, BYNUM, and LANHAM is more prudent advice: "What Congress should do is to let well enough alone, and not disturb our industrial and economic laws that are producing so good results in keeping the balance of trade in our favor and enabling us to keep our gold." (Appendix, page 21.)

The few gold-standard men in this country, and they are very few, who in default of immediate suspension predict immediate woes, are wide of the mark. The silver monometallists who frantically oppose suspension here, who, with gold rings on their fingers and gold chains at their pockets, profess their hatred of the sight of gold and their adoration of silver, these too are wide of the mark. I do not share the fears of the one nor the hopes of the other. This House is now clearly opposed to suspending coinage of the Bland dollar, which has proved a disappointment thus far to both friend and foe. The business of the country must adjust itself to this situation. The administration, I doubt not, will continue to so execute the law as not to tarnish our national honor nor paralyze our businesss energies. To sustain the administration stands the splendid credit achieved for the nation under a quarter of a century of Republican rule. And the balance of trade is still in our favor.

MORE SILVER DOLLARS AND MORE SILVER IN THE DOLLAR.

Meanwhile I will vote for any proposition to increase the grains in a silver dollar to make it equal with the gold dollar. The friends of free coinage in their report admit that if free coinage proves a failure after trial, then there will be "reason for changing the ratio," "so as to coin silver at its bullion value."

I favor that expedient now as an amendment of the Bland bill. Every honest bimetallist can now support it. There in this country may rest safely until the inevitable time of international agreement arrives. It is mainly Senate bill 1276. It was advocated by Mr. Blaine, and today is espoused by Senator SHERMAN. It affords a 100-cent silver dollar.

Let the Treasury purchase monthly the accustomed quantity of silver bullion and issue in payment coin certificates corresponding with the denominations of United States notes, the certificates to equal the cost of the bullion retained for their security, these certificates to be receivable for all public dues, customs, and taxes, and be reissued as fast as taken in. Add then the provision that holders of standard silver and gold coins may exchange them for these certificates. With such a policy we can resist fluctuations of silver. At once all of the silver dollars we have will with renewed confidence be restored to circulation. Our gold will not fly from us. It will increase the use and value of silver. Above all, it will keep up the parity between our silver and gold coins and save our paper circulation. It will prevent apprehension of contraction. This done, we can await events, engage in new conferences, seek proselytes to silver in Europe, just as England has so successfully made converts to free trade here. This done, agitation will subside. Neither the gold nor silver monometallist can disturb our currency. With this done, Congress may approach the real questions we ought here to grapple.

While we debate about silver here the masses of our people are intensely anxious to know how to get some of the $1,800,000,000 of gold, silver, United States notes, silver and gold certificates, national-bank notes, and fractional currency we now have, and to feel assured that the dollar they labor for is honest, stable, good everywhere and all the time.

PUBLIC DEBT—NATIONAL CREDIT.

With this full-sized silver dollar, this honest silver certificate, we may cease this contention over the coin in which we may pay the small part of our national debt falling due before 1907.

While it must be conceded that the purchasers of our bonds knew that the debt was made payable "in gold and silver coin of the present standard value" by the refunding act of 1870, our creditors may then take gold and silver indifferently, for with this assured parity between gold and silver coin both will be "current money with the merchant."

Then will there be no repudiation partially or wholly. Then what we have agreed to pay we will pay according to the letter of the law and the spirit of the law. With honest gold and silver dollars, with paper convertible into either, we may have a continuing expansion of good money, we may keep safe the money of the Constitution, the business and credit, the public faith of the country. To these the Republican party was ever faithful.

Do not forget that the States in rebellion were reinstated after a constitutional pledge not to impair in any manner the validity of the public debt.

Gentlemen of the Democratic majority, power has now passed from our hands into yours, but not until we had written the brightest page of our country's history. The Union Republican party snatched this nation, when on the verge of bankruptcy and ruin, out of your feeble hands, from your nerveless grasp, and after ruling the country grandly for a quarter of a century resigned her to you with an overflowing Treasury, without a spot upon her honor, matchless in her splendor, incalculable in her resources, the pride of her people, the admiration of the world. Time will show—I fear time is showing—what you will do with her honor, but time can not impair our glory or lessen your responsibility. [Applause.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, from 1790 to 1878 the matter of silver coinage had not been one of great concern to the people of the United States. During that period the Government mints were at no time burdened with silver, and the necessity of providing great vaults in the Treasury building to store silver in was not dreamed of. The Government mints coined from time to time subsidiary silver money; but during that long period of eighty-eight years we coined but a little over eight million of silver dollars—the dollars of our fathers.

RESULTS ACHIEVED.

The census of 1880 shows our national wealth—the aggregate wealth of our people—to be nearly $50,000,000,000. We had not only accumulated this great wealth, but sustained the losses incident to two great wars. The debt of the first war has been paid, and we have been paying off the debt of the second war at the rate of $100,000,000 a year without feeling it. No other nation in the world has achieved such results. It must be obvious that the eight million silver dollars we coined had very little to do with these stupendous consummations. Having done so well with but few silver dollars in the past, it is quite reasonable to suppose that we can get along with two hundred and fifteen million of them in the future.

OUR BONDS HELD AT HOME.

But the last war has left the nation somewhat in debt still, and the speculative spirit engendered by the depreciated currency that war necessitated has fastened considerable debts on municipal and private corporations. Portions of the vast accumulation of wealth I have spoken of have been invested in the bonds representing these debts. It ought to be gratifying that our own people hold these bonds; that the principal and interest are paid to our own people, and circulate among our own people. We should feel glad, I submit, that we are not indebted to the Rothschilds or any foreign money-lenders. Since these debts were inevitable, it should please us to know that our own people were able to absorb them, and they have done it, too, in the face of the fact that we had coined but a little over eight million of standard silver dollars.

Our own people had not only absorbed these debts before 1879, but money had become plentiful, rates of interest had become so low that the Government and solvent municipalities and corporations could borrow at 3 and 3½ and 4 per cent., and no sound business stood idle for the want of capital. All these conditions came into existence notwithstanding the fact that we had coined but a little over eight millions of standard silver dollars.

CONTINUED PROSPERITY WITHOUT MORE THAN EIGHT MILLIONS STANDARD SILVER DOLLARS.

It being evident that in 1878 the people of the United States had become immensely wealthy, had paid off their debts more rapidly than any other nation under the sun, and had accumulated and were accumulating year after year vast stores of gold, with a coinage of but a little over eight millions of standard silver dollars, it is logical enough and fair enough to assume that their unbounded prosperity would continue without more than eight millions of standard silver dollars.

But this logical and fair assumption is now violently and recklessly assailed. The assailants charge—

1. That the option should exist of paying bonds in silver or gold.
2. That the suspension of the coinage of silver dollars will increase the burden of debts.
3. That money should be cheap and plentiful.
4. That the mints should be as free to silver as to gold, because after all, as stated in the minority report, "the most important function of money in trade and commerce is its legal-tender power."
5. That the suspension of the coinage of silver dollars would enhance the value of credits and depreciate the value of everything else.

OPTION OF PAYING BONDS IN SILVER OR GOLD.

A sufficient reply to the first charge is that the Government has sufficient silver coin now to pay off the bonds as it may call them in; and as the silver returns to the Treasury about as fast it goes out, the Government is likely to have a sufficiency on hand at all times. The 215,000,000 silver dollars already coined will be quite equal to the duty of paying off in this way the entire national debt; and if no more are coined, payment in this way will not be seriously embarrassing.

WILL SUSPENSION OF SILVER COINAGE INCREASE THE BURDEN OF DEBTS?

Hardly. It is estimated that there are $1,570,000,000 in the United States.

Greenbacks	$346,000,000
National-bank notes	310,000,000
Silver dollars	215,000,000
Subsidiary silver	75,000,000
Gold coin and bullion	625,000,000
Total	1,571,000,000

There is more this year than there was last; there was more last year than there was the year before; and so on back for years. Now, what reason is there for contending that the stopping of the coinage of silver dollars will increase the burden of debts?

CHEAP MONEY.

The seduction of the argument for a plentiful supply of cheap money lies in the belief that it can be easily got. Well, more of it may be got and it may be easier to get it, but it takes more of it to do, and the more of it there is the less it will do. Bull-beef and shoddy clothing are cheap and are more easily obtained than good beef and good clothing. But the man who uses bull-beef, shoddy clothing, and debased coin is swindled all the way through in the principal necessaries of life. The Cheap-John order of statesmanship that advocates cheap money is not adapted to the latitude and longitude of the United States. It would fit better in the parliaments of Asia or Africa, where, if sufficiently "halcyon and vociferous," it would doubtless excite applause from the galleries.

I shall have something more to say about cheap money when I come to talk about good money.

THE LEGAL-TENDER POWER OF MONEY.

The proposition of the minority for the free coinage of silver is supported mainly by the argument that the legal-tender power gives to money its most important function. That is a plea in confession and avoidance, and shows that the free-coinage advocates do not feel quite sure of the ground on which they stand. The plea admits that there is some fiat in the standard silver dollar, but avoids the difficulty by alleging the monetary potency of the legal-tender characteristic.

A brief statement of facts will expose the fallacy that lurks in the minority's main reason.

A gold dollar is worth 100 cents; a standard silver dollar is worth 80 cents; a greenback dollar is worth probably 1 cent, yet they all circulate upon an equality. Any one of them has the same purchasing power in the United States to-day as either of the other two. Each one has the same legal-tender power as either of the other two.

From this obvious present condition a good many statesmen and some others draw the inference that this parity of the three kinds of money will continue, and they say "let the coinage of silver dollars go on." Some more sanguine statesmen draw the inference that the parity will continue though the coinage of silver dollars be made free. These say, "Let us have free coinage of silver as well as of gold."

The logic of both these classes of statesmen leads to the preference of greenbacks over silver, for a greenback dollar costs less than it costs to mint a silver dollar, which would result in saving the 80 cents which the Government has to pay for the silver bullion; and in addition to this, the Government could get the people to take the greenback dollar, an end it can not accomplish as to the silver dollar.

Thus it is clear that if the argument be a sound one that the silver dollar is and will continue to be as good as the gold dollar because it has the legal-tender power and does the same duty in business affairs, it would be better for the Government to do away with the silver dollar and to substitute therefor the greenback dollar, which will do the same duty and do it in a more acceptable manner.

But these different kinds of dollars will not continue to circulate side by side at par if we go on coining silver, as I shall very clearly show, I think wehn, I come to speak of the real money we can and should have and will have if the silver-tinkerers shall be checked within a reasonable time.

WHY SHOULD THE SUSPENSION OF THE COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS ENHANCE THE VALUE OF CREDITS AND DEPRECIATE THE VALUE OF EVERYTHING ELSE.

In the first place, the suspension of the coinage of silver will not diminish the present volume of money to the extent of one farthing. The suspension at the most would only prevent increase in the future of the $28,000,000 we are coining each year. The amount of money we now have or would have at the date of suspension would continue to exist, plus the natural increase resulting from the importation of gold, and plus any addition that may result from the enlargement of the national-bank circulation. Therefore it must be evident to any sensible man that the dreaded depreciation of the value of property of all kinds and the enhancement of credits is but a bugaboo of the heat-oppressed brain or a figment of the soaring imagination.

I am speaking, of course, from the standpoint of a denizen of the United States, and as a legislator who looks to the welfare and best interests of his own country.

I apprehend that the free-coinage silver advocates are not bounded by any such narrow horizon as that of the United States. Their vast contemplation of the subject of money, and particularly silver, seems to be only limited by terrestrial time and space. No one of these advocates has made a speech on this subject, I believe, without showing by a formidable array of tables and statistics that the total production of gold in the world is about $6,630,000,000, and the total production of silver about $8,140,000,000. Then they follow this up by showing that about eight hundred millions of the people of the world use silver as their standard of value, about one hundred and ninety millions use silver and gold, and about ninety millions use gold.

From these and many kindred data the modern silver coinage advocate constructs what may be called an entire terrestrial monetary cosmogony. He will not deign to apply inductive methods, the methods universally acknowledged by modern scientists as the true ones, by considering the causes and effects of the monetary system of any one nation. Not he; that would be too small a subject for so great a man. He prefers to construct a magnificent pyramid of theory which will embrace all the people of the world and all the money of the world. Having done that, he deduces a profound conclusion for the whole world, and apportions it out among the nations in proper quantities. A vast international monetary conference, in which every nation of the world shall be represented, is simply indispensable to a proper opportunity for the display and outworking of such a genius. To contract the powers of such a statesman by national boundaries is downright cruelty.

DO THE PEOPLE WANT MORE SILVER DOLLARS?

We are told that they do, and it has been repeated so often that some really honest men have come to believe it. Well, let us see.

There are in the Treasury and subtreasuries, mints and depositories, in round numbers, one hundred and seventy-four million standard silver dollars. About eighty-seven million of these dollars are not represented by outstanding silver certificates.

The Secretary of the Treasury informs us that he has done everything in his power to put these dollars into circulation. He has withdrawn the one and two dollar notes and issued fives and tens in lieu of them, that the necessity for money of small denominations might draw these silver dollars out and keep them out. He has shipped them at the expense of the Government wherever they were wanted to help them out. Yet, in spite of all his efforts, they come rolling back into the Treasury vaults with a self-satisfied air, as if they had come to the house of their fathers and come to stay.

These facts do not propel a very strong conclusion that the people want them. The fact is the people do not want them, and the silver advocates know it.

But there is a way of testing this question not only now but in the future. My colleague [Mr. SCOTT] has introduced a bill, now in the hands of the Committee on Coinage, which provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall maintain a minimum of twenty million standard silver dollars—he shall keep twenty million on hand all the time. If anybody wants to make that minimum thirty million I shall make no objection.

Now this bill if enacted into a law will leave the amount of silver dollars to be coined entirely in the hands of the people. If the people want these dollars, actually want them, they will go to the Treasury or subtreasuries or national depositories and get them. If they like them they will keep them and use them for currency.

It is plain to be seen that a law of this kind would enable the people to procure all the silver dollars they wanted. If you raise the minimum to thirty million the people can take thirty million out each month, and if they keep them out—and they will do that if they want them—the Secretary of the Treasury will have to coin thirty million a month or three hundred and sixty million a year—nearly a million a day—instead of the twenty-eight million a year he is now required to coin. This would impart to our silver coinage the principle of elasticity up to a maximum of $360,000,000 a year.

The bonanza princes might combine to draw the coin from the Treasury so as to compel the Secretary to coin in excess of the normal demand of the people. But I am willing to run this risk. The specter of conspiracies shall not deter me.

Now, you say the people want the silver dollars. I point out to you a bill which every gold-bug, I imagine, in Congress will vote for, and which will enable the people to have coined nearly a million of silver dollars a day if they want them. Will you vote with me for that bill? Dare you vote for that bill? Here is a chance to show whether you really mean what you say or not when you say the people want these dollars. Here is an opportunity to put your theory to a practical test. Here is a method of relegating the entire subject of how many standard silver dollars we shall have to the people for their action and decision. Will you submit the matter to the people? I dare you to do it. If you will not do it, how dare you say that the people want these dollars?

THE GOVERNMENT THE CENTER OF OUR MONETARY SYSTEM.

Having stripped extraneous considerations from the discussion of this subject as well as I can in the hurry and pressure of my duties, I now propose to present some affirmative reasons for suspending the coinage of standard silver dollars.

The Government is the center of our monetary system. The quantity of gold in the Treasury and subtreasuries and depositories, the quantity of silver in them, the quantity of Treasury notes or greenbacks in them, and the specific and relative variations of these quantities, the organization of national banks, and the issue of national-bank notes, are all factors which affect the operation of our monetary system. They are centripetal and centrifugal forces which penetrate the entire monetary system of the country. The Government may be likened to the sun, and the national and private banks to satellites that surround this sun, and are thus enabled to maintain their orbital relations. Any disturbance of the center of the system will affect the satellites, and the destruction of the center will reduce the whole system to chaos.

It is not, therefore, surprising that the banks and bankers of the country are anxious that the Government shall conduct its banking operations according to well-defined commercial and business principles. Enlightened self-interest is a sufficient incentive to this desire. Self-preservation is a quite adequate motive.

BUT ONE STANDARD OF VALUE.

Now, our own experience and the experience of every other nation show that there can be but one standard of value. There may be nominally two, or a double standard, but practically there is but one. Our own experience and that of every other highly civilized nation show that the best standard of value is gold. Our Government has recognized this for many years past, having fixed the gold dollar as the unit of value, and having acted in accordance therewith since the resumption of specie payments in 1879. Nobody will deny—the most earnest silver advocate will not deny—that the maintenance of the gold standard is desirable.

CAN WE MAINTAIN THE GOLD STANDARD?

Without doubt, if we suspend the coinage of silver dollars and let our tariff laws alone. Our tariff laws give us a reasonable assurance of a favorable balance of trade, and the consequence is that we not only draw in more gold but retain what we have. We have, however, in this House to-day a remarkable spectacle.

The Committee on Ways and Means, in a room on the east side of the House, preparing a bill to reduce and take off the duties on imports in the face of a declining market abroad for our agricultural products; in the face of the fact that Europe, our only valuable foreign market, is now largely supplied, and year after year will be more largely supplied, by the British Indies and Russia with breadstuffs; and while the European market is being thus taken away from us, this committee is doing its best to destroy the home market of the millions of our people engaged in agriculture. And side by side with this operation, this committee is doing its best to cause the exportation of our gold by reducing duties. And in order apparently that misfortunes may not come singly, nor even in pairs, but in quartets, so-called protectionists are aiding in the work of demolition by favoring the continued coinage of a debased currency that will cause a horizontal reduction of tariff duties to the extent of the debasement the moment this debased currency becomes the measure or standard of value.

Tariff duties reduced by law, a further horizontal reduction by a debased currency, the balance of trade turned against us, and our gold drained away from us—this is the soup-house feast that is being prepared by American legislators for the American people.

Does anybody doubt that these consequences will follow the proposed action as to the tariff and non-action as to the silver dollars? If so, let him ask himself how the Government and the people would have fared during the late war if import duties had been payable in depreciated greenbacks. If anybody doubts that low-tariff duties result in draining our country of the precious metals, let him look at our past history.

We never had more than eight successive years of protection at any time since the adoption of the Constitution until 1861. And during all the period prior to 1861 we had not more than three or four years, as I recall the statistics, which showed a balance of trade in our favor, and the aggregate of these three or four years was but a few millions of dollars as against hundreds upon hundreds of millions on the other side of the account.

But since 1861 we have had now twenty-five years of continuous protection, and the consequences are (1) an aggregate balance of trade in our favor exceeding $1,400,000,000, and (2) an accumulation of $625,000,000 of gold, and (3) the recovery of nearly all our securities that had been taken abroad.

Thus do our monetary and tariff systems complement and sustain each other, and result in an admirable fiscal system. But notwithstanding the obvious advantages of this condition of things, the tariff agitators and the silver monoma—monometallists are doing their level best to demolish and break down our splendid fiscal system.

THE WAY TO MAINTAIN OUR GOLD STANDARD.

First, we must not reduce the tariff, for that will result in the exportation of our gold; second, we must avert conditions that will drive the gold out of circulation.

What are the conditions that will drive gold out of circulation? We have heard often in this debate about Gresham's law, that less valuable money will drive more valuable money out of circulation. If the bullion in a silver dollar is worth but 80 cents, it will drive out of circulation a gold dollar whose bullion is worth 100 cents.

Though everybody, I believe, admits the force of this law, it is contended that the silver dollars will not drive the gold out of circulation until the volume of the silver dollars shall equal the gold dollars. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] says the gold can only be displaced by an amount of silver equal to it.

I am confident that this is a mistaken notion. No man can say how soon the six hundred and twenty-five millions of gold will be driven out of circulation. It may occur very soon, and it may not occur for some time yet. But if we go on coining silver even at the rate of twenty-eight millions a year, it will occur as surely as night follows day.

But even on the hypothesis of the gentleman from Ohio is there not a sufficient amount of money now to displace the gold? There are three hundred and forty-six million greenbacks, three hundred and ten million national-bank notes, and two hundred and fifteen million silver dollars, making $871,000,000 of currency with which to displace $625,000,000 of gold.

Right here some one will say, "Why does not this $871,000,000 drive out the $625,000,000? Your own statement of facts refutes your conclusion."

Wait a moment and see if it does. I have said that our Government is the center of our monetary system. We all know that there is a large amount of gold in the Treasury. We all know, for the Secretary has so told us, that the Treasury pays checks and drafts with gold or gold certificates if desired by the presenters. Now, that mode of operating the Treasury makes silver and greenback dollars really convertible into gold. So long as this condition of things exists, so long will greenbacks and silver dollars maintain their parity with gold. The parity would continue for a hundred or a thousand years under these circumstances. Silver bullion might depreciate 50 per cent. below its present value, but if the dollars made of it were convertible into gold, either directly or through the operations of the Government, as is now the case, these silver dollars would continue at par with gold. It would be the same as to the greenbacks. The intrinsic value of greenbacks is almost nothing; but their convertibility into gold, either at the option of the holder or through the fiscal operations of the Government, will keep them at par with gold as long as they are convertible into gold.

These are the facts, and not the volume of money with which gold has to contend, that are keeping the silver dollar and the greenback dollar at par with the gold dollar.

But the Government receives customs dues in greenbacks, silver dollars, and silver certificates, as well as in gold dollars and gold certificates. Suppose the tariff duties are reduced, or even without a reduction of tariff duties suppose our imports exceed our exports to the extent of a hundred or two hundred million a year—a not unlikely contingency in view of the vast and increasing exports of breadstuffs to Europe from the British Indies and Russia—large portions of our gold would then be taken away from us, the gold in the Treasury would gradually diminish. The shrewd bankers and moneyed men of the country, forecasting the probabilities of the situation, would hoard gold. The Treasury would soon exhaust its store of gold, and under these circumstances nobody would pay customs dues with gold. The Government would become unable, unless it would buy gold, to redeem greenbacks in gold, and silver dollars could no longer be converted into gold through the operation of the Government.

Is there any man so stupid as to believe that silver dollars and greenbacks under these circumstances would retain their parity with gold?

It is as certain as that the sun shines that the greenbacks and the national-bank notes and the silver dollars would instantly settle down to the bullion value of the silver dollar. A whole world of fanciful theories will not overthrow this demonstration.

You may higgle and wriggle, and haggle and daggle, and squabble and wabble, and gabble and babble about the silver dollar maintaining its equality with gold, but it is a debased coin, a coin that has been clipped by the laws of trade, and no amount of legislation by the Congress of the United States can lift it up to the level of gold. It is now in the very nature of things that 412½ grains of silver can not be made equal to 25.8 grains of gold.

THE CONSEQUENCES.

A first and obvious consequence of this condition of thing would be the contraction of our currency to the extent of the $625,000,000 of our gold coin.

A second consequence would be the unsettling of values, the creation of alarm in business circles, and the arrest of projected business enterprises. There is, indeed, one class of the community who would thrive—the speculators—those who thrive on the misfortunes of their fellowmen.

A third consequence would be the reduction of the wages of labor. The man who is now getting $10 a week with ten dollars' purchasing power would get $10 with but eight dollars' purchasing power.

All over the country the workingmen are striking for 10 or 15 per cent. advance in wages. This debased currency would cut down all wages at one fell swoop 20 per cent., and everything would be marked up before wages. I need not tell the workingmen and workingwomen of the country that wages are the last thing to go up and the first thing to go down in financial crises.

In the county of Allegheny, which I have the honor in part to represent, there were paid in wages per year, according to the census of 1880, $22,000,000. I suppose there are paid in that county now not less than $25,000,000 per year. The overthrow of the present gold standard and the accession of the silver standard would cut the purchasing power of this sum down $5,000,000. I am one of those who want to pay the workingman and the workingwoman as good a dollar as the bondholder or anybody else gets. And since so much has been said by the silver-dollar advocates about their sympathy with the cause of labor, I want to call attention to a fact that can be fully ascertained by a reference to our consular reports, namely, that the gold-standard countries of the world pay the highest wages, and as the volume of gold diminishes in the different countries of the world the wages of labor decrease. The countries that have no gold at all and which are purely silver countries pay the least wages in the world. That is a nut for our silver advocates to crack.

A fourth consequence would be to raise the rate of interest on money. If a lender of money knows that he will get as good money back as he lends, he will be content with the prevailing rate of interest. If, however, he apprehends that the money he may be repaid with may be less valuable than that which he lends, he will naturally increase his rate of interest to cover his possible loss.

A fifth consequence would be to put upon our country the strain and dishonor of a debased currency, and thus to reduce the United States, in a monetary point of view, from a first-rate to a second or third rate nation.

Mr. Speaker, the question for us to decide is a simple one. It is this: Shall we have the best money in the world or an inferior kind of money? We want the best. We want the best of everything. We can have it. We can have the best money that is going without asking the leave of any other nation in the world. We are entirely independent. Our resources are so abundant and so ample that we can supply all our wants. We are therefore in a position to choose the money we want. Patriotic duty and self-interest alike dictate that, under such circumstances, we should choose the best money.

What is the best money? Confessedly gold with a paper currency redeemable in gold, and a subsidiary coinage of silver. Our own experience tells us this. The experience of every highly civilized nation in the world tells us this.

Great Britain, Germany, France, and Belgium, the nations from which we draw our immigration, whose literature we read side by side with our own, and whose peoples most nearly resemble our own people, tell us this. All the able and learned writers on the subject of money tell us this. By a common consensus of the mature and prosperous and highly civilized nations of the world gold is indorsed as the unit and measure of value and standard of exchange, which is the function of money.

If we are but true to ourselves and the best interests of our people we will defeat the bill under consideration, and pass a bill suspending the further coinage of the debased silver dollars with which we are now loading the Treasury, and with which the Government will sooner or later cheat and defraud the people. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, without making any pretense to special technical knowledge of finance, I propose to submit a few remarks on the much-vexed silver question. I am prompted to do this, sir, not so much with the hope of influencing the votes of others here as to give the reasons which lead me to cast my vote as I shall. I am opposed to any legislation that has for its object or that will result in the demonetization or the suspension of the coinage of silver. Perhaps I should be content to record my vote in opposition to any measure looking in that direction, but that a considerable number of my constituents, gentlemen for whom and for whose opinions I have the highest respect, have indicated by a petition which I had the honor some time ago to present here that they are in favor of the suspension of the coinage. Under these circumstances I feel that it is due to them, and due to myself also, that I should make some explanation of my vote, or rather of the reasons why I vote as I do.

We have had many fine-spun theories on the one side and on the other side of this question, and in listening to the extreme views of the extreme men of each one is not unlikely to feel that "which way he turns is financial death;" still, perhaps we should not mourn as those without hope. There should be some way out of our difficulties, and I fancy with the application of plain common sense we may find a path that will lead us from the "slough of despond" in which we now are back to more prosperous times and still not take us amid the perils incident to a depreciated currency. A medium of exchange is necessary in all commercial countries. That is, there must be something in common use accepted by the people as of certain value for which they can sell the surplus of that which they produce and with which they can purchase that which they need. This something we call money.

Now gold and silver have from time immemorial been recognized as precious metals and used as money, a certain ratio of value being established between them by the various governments of the world. Gold and silver are produced by nature. Man can make neither, and the stock on hand throughout the world depends, not upon the will or wish of man, but upon the amount that may be extracted from the earth. If either of these metals should be produced in such quantities as to be common, say like iron or copper, then something would have to be substituted for it, and we would be forced to discontinue its use as money. These principles are fundamental and disputed, I believe, by none.

Now let us examine the history of legislation upon this subject, inquire into the supply of gold and silver in this country and the world, see the amount of money we have and what we need, and thus discover if possible the reason for the present agitation on the subject of silver. By the common law both gold and silver were money at the date of the Revolution. The Constitution of the United States recognizes gold and silver as money; it provides that "Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin;" and further, "no State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." Gold and silver being used as money throughout the commercial world, it is necessary that each government should have some ratio of value between the two; that is to say, should determine by law how many pounds of silver shall equal in debt-paying value one pound of gold. It was and is desirable that the countries of the world should have the same ratio of value, but that has never been the case and probably never will be because of the diverse interests of different nations.

Now, we sometimes hear it said that Congress has no power to regulate the value of gold and silver; that with as much right and propriety it might say what should be the value of cotton or corn as to say what shall be the value of gold and silver; perhaps in one sense this is true, yet it is not true in the sense in which those who use this argument wish it to be understood. The right to determine what shall be money in any country must depend upon the will of the law-making power. It may be gold, it may be silver, it may be both, or it may be a paper promise to pay; whatever the law makes a legal tender for all debts, public and private, that is money. The law shall not say, and can not say, how much wheat, or corn, or cotton a dollar will buy. The owner of these articles may charge as many "dollars" for them as he can get, but the law determines what a "dollar" is. Now, as long as gold and silver are used as money, the Government must say what the ratio of value between them is; that is, must determine how many pounds of silver shall be equal to one pound of gold. In the language of the Constitution, "regulate the value thereof." So you see there is no similarity between the question of fixing the value of silver as money and fixing the value of cotton or corn or wheat.

In 1785 France fixed the ratio between gold and silver at 1 pound weight of pure gold to 15½ pounds of pure silver; the rest of Europe soon adopted this ratio, and the whole of Europe has substantially adhered to it since that time. The United States in 1792 established a mint for the coinage of money, and provided that the ratio between gold and silver should be 1 pound of pure gold to 15 pounds of pure silver, ½ pound less of silver than the ratio established by France. Finding that not satisfactory, in 1834 the United States changed the ratio to 1 pound of pure gold to 16 pounds of pure silver, ½ pound more of silver than France, and since 1834 the ratio in this country has remained unchanged.

Now, at the time of the act of 1792 the accepted theory was that gold and silver in any quantity produced from the mines might be coined into money by the Government—that is to say, the amount of gold and silver coined into money should not be regulated by the law, but that any person who had it might take it to the mint and have it coined into money, just as we would take corn to the mill and have it ground into meal. The law fixed the ratio of value between the two, and nature furnished the amount, the Government put upon it the stamp making it a legal-tender coin, and every one could have coined as much as he could get. This was called unlimited coinage, and this law continued of force from 1792 until 1873. In the latter year the coinage of silver was discontinued and silver practically demonetized; the unlimited coinage of gold continued and still continues. In 1878 the present law was enacted. But before referring to its operations let us see what our financial status was after more than eighty years of free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver.

On the 1st day of January, 1879, there was in this country $273,000,000 in gold coin and $65,000,000 in silver coin. This was the result of more than eighty years' free coinage. Up to 1873 no proposition was made to demonetize or suspend the free coinage of either gold or silver, although, judged by the same rule the advocates of gold apply now, they were not always of the same value. For many years gold was cheaper than silver, and at the very time of the demonetization of silver in 1873 the bullion in a dollar of that metal was worth about 3 cents more than the bullion in a dollar of gold. Cheap gold, though, did not drive out silver any more than cheap silver now drives out gold; in all commercial relations they stood then as they stand now, side by side. When gold was the cheapest there was not such clamor for its demonetization as there is now for the demonetization of silver; but that is not strange. We had then no great public debt; we had not so many bondholders who sought to influence legislation to increase the value of their bonds; the ordinary laws of trade were let alone and settled themselves without the aid of the bondholder, who is always careful to have things settled in such a way as to increase the value of his own securities without regard to the interests of that other and greater number of persons who have the bonds to pay.

In 1878 we passed the "Bland law" that was a compromise between those who wanted no silver coined and those who wanted unlimited coinage of silver. By its terms the Treasury is authorized to purchase and have coined not less than two nor more than four million dollars in silver each month. That is the law now. At the time of the passage of this statute the gold men predicted that it would drive gold out of the country, that prices would be inflated, and that all the evils that flow from a depreciated money would follow. Seven years after that prediction let us see how near the truth they came. I submit two statements from Burchard's report for 1884; the first shows the action of gold as to coinage, export, and import from 1873 to 1879, when silver was not coined at the Mint; the other shows the action of gold, &c., from 1879 to 1885 under the present law, which requires the coinage of at least $24,000,000 of silver each year.

Statement showing the net gold coinage from June 30, 1873, to January 1, 1879, and the gain by imports of gold coin, and the estimated amount of gold coin in the country at the latter date.

Year.	Gold coinage less coin deposited for re-coinage.	Net export or import of gold coin.	Gain or loss during the year.	Estimated amount of gold coin in the country at the close of the year.
June 30, 1873				$135,000,000
June 30, 1874	$34,853,441	$7,620,695	*$27,232,746	162,232,746
June 30, 1875	30,727,862	52,628,351	†21,900,489	140,362,257
June 30, 1876	35,649,931	22,488,810	*13,161,121	153,493,378
June 30, 1877	41,537,598	1,312,268	*40,225,330	193,718,708
June 30, 1878	51,181,497	‡2,367,267	*53,548,764	247,267,472
January 1, 1879	23,494,062	‡1,796,336	*25,290,398	273,000,000

* Gain. † Loss. ‡ Net import.

Statement of net coinage, import, and gain in United States gold coin from January 1, 1879, to January 1, 1885.

Years.	Net gold coinage.	Net imports of United States gold coin.	Total.	United States gold coin used in arts in excess of amount brought in by immigrants.	Net gain.	Total in the country.
January 1, 1879						$273,000,000 00
January 1, 1880	$38,874,788 14	$13,727,586 00	$52,602,374 14		$52,602,374 14	326,000,000 00
January 1, 1881	61,938,180 76	6,637,664 00	68,575,844 76		68,575,844 76	394,000,000 00
January 1, 1882	96,331,786 18	2,452,199 00	98,783,985 18	$3,000,000 00	95,783,985 18	489,000,000 00
January 1, 1883	65,478,536 09	*25,796,504 00	39,682,032 09	3,500,000 00	36,182,032 09	525,000,000 00
January 1, 1884	28,866,485 00	3,309,811 00	32,176,296 00	4,000,000 00	28,176,296 00	554,000,000 00
January 1, 1885	23,724,879 05	*8,417,059 00	15,307,820 05	4,500,000 00	10,807,820 05	563,000,000 00

* Net exports.

These tables are bad for the theory of the gold men. In 1879 we had $273,000,000 in gold. In 1885 we had $563,000,000 in gold. There must be something wrong about the theory. Cheap money, as they call silver, does not seem to drive out dear money, as they call gold—nearly $300,000,000 more gold after seven years' coinage of silver than we had before we began it. This is a practical fact and is worth more than all the theories in the world, and clearly establishes, I think, that theory to be wrong which says the coinage of silver will drive out gold and contract the currency. Let us examine these tables a little. From 1878 to 1885 we imported $301,025,100 in gold and exported $113,744,843 in gold, making our importation of gold during that period $187,280,259 more than we exported from the country. From 1878 to 1885 we exported $172,145,209 in silver and imported $103,914,843 in silver, making $31,769,745 exported in silver more than we imported. In other words, during those years we took and kept of foreign gold $187,280,259, and gave to foreign countries of our silver $31,769,745. Last year's operations, not shown in these tables, but presented in the report of the Director of the Mint for 1885, show that we imported of gold $26,691,696, exported $8,477,843, making $18,213,853 more gold coming in the country than going out; and of silver we imported $16,550,953 and exported $33,753,633, making an excess of silver going out of the country over that coming in of $17,202,680. Now, sir, silver certainly has not driven out gold; it really seems as if the reverse was true. And when you bear in mind that our silver dollar contains more silver than the dollar of any other country on earth, it is not strange that it is true.

But, say the gold men, the silver dollar is not an honest one, is not worth 100 cents, and therefore the Government ought to retire it. Let us see about this. If in saying it is not worth 100 cents in the dollar they mean that the bullion in it is not worth as much as the bullion in a gold dollar, they are probably correct; but why should that be the standard? Try it by corn or wheat or cotton. Will not a silver dollar buy as much of either of these articles as a gold dollar? Will not a silver dollar buy as much or more of the necessaries of life to-day than it ever would before? How do you determine when money is depreciated by comparing the bullion in it with gold bullion, or by comparing it with the value of those things required to sustain life? This country knows what depreciated money is. When greenbacks were worth only 40 cents in the dollar, that is, when any article you bought was worth two and a half to five or six times as much as it is now, that money was depreciated. Among the confederates when it required two or three hundred dollars to buy a pair of shoes, that money was depreciated. That was cheap money. How is it to-day with silver judged by such a rule? Was its purchasing power ever greater? Was there ever a time when gold or silver would buy more than it will buy now? From a table prepared by the Director of the Mint for his report of 1884, I give the prices of a few articles of necessity in New York in the years named to show that prices are steadily going down:

Articles.	Average price during—
	1870.	1883.	1884.
Wheat flour.....per barrel...	$6 11	$5 95	$5 58
Cotton.....per pound...	23	10¾	10¼
Nails.....do.....	5½	3½	3½
Boots and shoes.....per pair...	1 51	1 21	1 20
Bacon.....per pound...	15	10	10
Lard.....do.....	16	11	9
Sugar.....do.....	11	8	7
Wool.....do.....	.....	34	29

From this it appears that measured by its power to purchase flour, cotton, nails, boots and shoes, bacon, lard, sugar, and wool, silver not only has not depreciated but has appreciated, as it will buy more of either now than it would in 1870 or 1883. How, then, is it dishonest or depreciated? In determining the value of money you do not look alone to the value of the bullion in it. The value of bullion changes and varies constantly. The discovery of gold in California depreciated the value of the bullion, but a five-dollar gold-piece was still worth $5. Why? Because the Government determined that a piece of such weight and fineness should be accepted as $5 for all debts, public and private. This is what makes an article money; without this it is not money. The idea that an article is money because it has a value is absurd. Money is that which the law says may be used for the payments of debts, public and private. It is desirable that the bullion value of the metals should be nearly equal in coins of like value. But how is this to be maintained? To-day we might fix a ratio that would attain this result; how could we know that to-morrow it would not be changed?

We could not change our ratio with every change in the market price of bullion, and without so changing we can not maintain an equality in bullion value. The truth is that honesty and good faith require that the ratio that was established at the time of the creation of our great debts, public and private, should be maintained. What we call money is money only in this country. When taken to a foreign country it is bullion, and we can not fix its value. That is determined by the law of supply and demand. It is money here because the Government has a right to coin money, and our own people can use it in the payment of all debts, public and private. If you owed a debt of $5 you could not force your creditor to take in satisfaction of it gold bullion worth $10. Why? Because it is not money. You could force your creditor to take in satisfaction of his debt a five-dollar gold-piece, or five silver dollars, because it is money. The bullion value is one thing, the value as money is another and very different thing. Therefore the statement that our silver dollar is not an honest one, that it is only worth 80 cents, is without foundation. In London it may be worth only 80 cents, but we have no right to coin money for England. In this country it is worth one dollar, will buy one dollar's worth of anything, will buy a dollar in gold, will pay every debt that gold will pay, and therefore is worth as much as gold.

It is estimated by statisticians that the amount of the two metals now in the world is: Gold, $3,515,000,000; silver, $3,750,000,000. This gives a ratio for the world of about 48 per cent. gold and 52 per cent. silver. There is no great disparity between the amount of gold and the amount of silver mined each year. This is shown by the estimated amount of each in the world. After hundreds, perhaps thousands, of years use, there is comparatively little difference in the aggregate of each. The following table shows the production of gold and silver in the United States annually since 1845.

Production of gold and silver in the United States, annually, from 1845 to 1884, estimated by R. W. Raymond from 1845 to 1873, inclusive, and by the Director of the Mint since.

Years.	Estimated product.
	Gold.	Silver.	Total.
1845	$1,008,327	.....	$1,008,327
1846	1,139,357	.....	1,139,357
1847	889,085	.....	889,085
1848	10,000,000	.....	10,000,000
1849	40,000,000	$50,000	40,050,000
1850	50,000,000	50,000	50,050,000
1851	55,000,000	50,000	55,050,000
1852	60,000,000	50,000	60,050,000
1853	65,000,000	50,000	65,050,000
1854	60,000,000	50,000	60,050,000
1855	55,000,000	50,000	55,050,000
1856	55,000,000	50,000	55,050,000
1857	55,000,000	50,000	55,050,000
1858	50,000,000	500,000	50,500,000
1859	50,000,000	100,000	50,100,000
1860	46,000,000	150,000	46,150,000
1861	43,000,000	2,000,000	45,000,000
1862	39,200,000	4,500,000	43,700,000
1863	40,000,000	8,500,000	48,500,000
1864	46,100,000	11,000,000	57,100,000
1865	53,225,000	11,250,000	64,475,000
1866	53,500,000	10,000,000	63,500,000
1867	41,725,000	13,500,000	65,225,000
1868	48,000,000	12,000,000	60,000,000
1869	49,500,000	12,000,000	61,500,000
1870	50,000,000	16,000,000	66,000,000
1871	43,500,000	23,000,000	66,500,000
1872	36,000,000	28,750,000	64,750,000
1873	36,000,000	35,750,000	71,750,000
1874	33,500,000	37,300,000	70,800,000
1875	33,400,000	31,700,000	65,100,000
1876	39,990,000	38,800,000	78,700,000
1877	46,900,000	39,800,000	86,700,000
1878	51,200,000	45,200,000	96,400,000
1879	38,900,000	40,800,000	79,700,000
1880*	36,000,000	39,200,000	75,200,000
1881*	34,700,000	43,000,000	77,700,000
1882*	32,500,000	46,800,000	79,300,000
1883*	30,000,000	46,200,000	76,200,000
1884*	30,800,000	48,800,000	79,600,000
Total	1,651,586,769	647,050,000	2,298,636,769

*Calendar year.

From this table it appears that very much more gold than silver has been produced in this country. And it further appears that nearly one-half of the silver now produced in the world is produced here. (In 1884 the estimated production of silver in the world was $115,000,000.) This table shows that from 1845 to 1879 we produced largely more gold than silver, and that, while for the past six years we have produced more silver than gold, yet in the aggregate the balance in favor of gold is more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, many millions more people use silver alone as a standard of value than those who use gold, or gold and silver. The silver-standard countries contain a population of 768,944,456, gold and silver a population of 187,300,000, and gold a population of 92,000,000, so that very much more of silver than of gold is required as a medium of exchange. I think from the figures mentioned, it clearly appears that silver is not yet a burden. It is still precious, and nothing has yet developed to indicate its production in such quantity as to call for its degradation from the high plane of a money metal.

Now let us look a little into the question of what money we have in circulation, and see if we have got enough, with or without silver. France is prosperous. France fixed the ratio of value between gold and silver in Europe. Let us compare our money with hers. France with a population in 1881 of 37,672,048, had a total circulation of $1,990,961,912. Of this $548,061,912 was paper, $848,000,000 gold, and $596,900,000 silver. The United States with a population of, say, 60,000,000, has a total circulation of $1,845,005,156. Of this $542,174,636 is gold, $278,824,201 is silver, and the rest paper. France has more than twice as much money per capita as we have, and twice as much silver. Why does France need so much and we so little? Why can France sustain twice as much silver as we can, hers at par with gold and ours not, and our silver dollar containing more silver than hers? Can any gentleman explain this? Are the French people more industrious, more thrifty, more enterprising than we are? Is her territory so extensive as ours? Does she need as much money as we do?

It seems to me, sir, there is but one explanation that can be given, and that is that our financial management under Republican rule has been in favor of one class against another; in favor of the rich against the poor; in favor of the bondholder against the bond-payer. I believe we should have more money, Mr. Speaker; therefore I am in favor of increasing rather than diminishing the coinage of silver. I believe that coin, gold and silver coin, is the best money in the world, and I do not see why we should hesitate to coin either when the total amount now in the country is not sufficient for the wants of legitimate trade and commerce. We produce the silver, why not coin it? We are told that silver will not circulate, that the people do not want it, that we can not get it out of the Treasury, or if we get it out we can not keep it so, and that the vaults are bursting with this depreciated metal. This table shows the total circulation in the country and its character.

Form and location of total circulation July 1, 1885.

	In Treasury.	In national banks.	In other banks and general circulation.	Total.
Gold bullion	$66,847,095	.....	.....	$66,847,095
Silver bullion	4,654,586	.....	.....	4,654,586
Gold coin	179,952,890	$90,758,947	$271,462,799	542,174,636
Silver dollars	165,413,112	7,000,000	31,471,269	203,884,381
Fractional silver coin	31,236,899	1,897,554	41,805,367	74,939,820
Gold certificates	13,593,410	74,816,920	51,491,316	139,901,646
Silver certificates	38,370,700	3,139,070	98,813,370	140,323,140
United States notes	45,047,378	79,701,352	221,990,236	346,738,966
National-bank notes	9,945,710	23,465,388	285,165,613	318,576,711
Fractional currency	3,285	489,927	6,470,963	6,964,175
Total	555,065,065	281,269,158	1,008,670,933	1,845,005,156

This shows coin in the Treasury: Gold, $246,799,985; silver, $201,304,597; against the gold, certificates are out to the amount of $126,308,236; against the silver, certificates are out to the amount of $101,952,440. When the coin itself is out, gold is preferred. When the certificates, which represent the gold and silver respectively, are out the people are indifferent and take one as readily as the other. The truth is, that for the common, every-day uses of life the people do not want either coin, except silver for change. They prefer its paper representative. If you had $1,000 you would not care to have either the silver or gold if you could get a paper which represented the coin, and upon which you could get it should you for any reason want it. A ten-dollar gold certificate is more convenient to carry than a ten-dollar gold-piece. A ten-dollar silver certificate is more convenient to carry than ten silver dollars.

As between the coin itself the gold is less bulky and most convenient, but the representative of each is more convenient than either, and I have no reason to believe that as between the gold certificate and the silver certificate the people have any choice. One is as good as the other for all purposes for which money is used; the silver certificate will pay every debt the gold certificate will pay, the Government takes either for all dues and taxes, the faith of the Government is as much pledged to the one as the other, and that which makes an article money, the stamp of the Government, its legal-tender quality, is the same in both. Can you not see what has caused the decline in silver bullion? War, bitter war, has been made upon it.

The Treasury Department will not pay it on our bonded indebtedness; the Treasury will no longer exchange silver certificates in the South and West for gold coin, as once it did. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends the suspension of its coinage. The Secretary only coins the minimum required by the act of 1878—$2,000,000 a month—when he might coin $4,000,000 a month. These acts of the Government have tended to discredit it. As you diminish its uses you decrease its value; as you add to the trouble and expense of getting it in places remote from the mints you necessarily decrease its circulation. That the people want it is illustrated by the operations under an order of the Treasury allowing persons to exchange gold coin for silver certificates. Under that order, made in 1880, persons holding gold coin could deposit it at the treasury in New York and receive in exchange for it silver certificates.

From 1880 to 1885 the South and West deposited $80,730,500 in gold coin and took silver certificates therefor at par. Does this look like the people did not want silver? On the contrary, it shows they prefer the silver certificate to the gold coin, and would continue to exchange the one for the other, but that the order allowing the exchange has been revoked. It seems to me, sir, the Treasury Department has tried to keep silver from circulating instead of aiding it, as it should have done. Other influences are at work to discredit silver. Our bonded debt is now about $1,843,713,715. On this we pay an annual interest charge of $47,014,133.

The holders of these bonds have a pecuniary interest in demonetizing silver, and bondholders, Mr. Chairman, are generally alive to their own interests. I venture the assertion that they never fail to seek such legislation as will benefit them. For many years they have not sought in vain. Under Republican rule they have always had it. They want more of it. I trust, sir, they will not secure it from Democrats. Our party has pledged itself against such class legislation. Let us be vigilant to keep our pledge.

Look for one moment at the history of our bonds. They were largely bought with a currency that was worth about 40 cents on the dollar—that is, a one-hundred-dollar bond was bought for $100 in paper money when the money was only worth about $40 in gold or silver of the present standard; the principal and interest were payable in Treasury notes of the United States; the bondholder asked for gold and silver instead, and a funding act was passed under which the holders of these bonds could return them to the Treasury and get new bonds, by the terms of which the principal and interest should be payable in coin of the standard value of 1870; that is, they should be payable in the gold and silver we now have, either gold or silver, or both, as is most convenient to the Government. It is needless to say they returned the old and took the new bonds. On the face of the 5 per cent. bonds is this inscription:

This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of May, A. D. 1881, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of February, May, August, and November in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes and duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

On the face of the United States 4 per cent. bond is this inscription:

This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1907, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of October, January, April, and July in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

The 3 percents are also payable in coin of the present standard. Now, this change was made at the instance and for the benefit of the bondholder. By the change of contract, instead of being required to receive paper money, he became entitled to receive gold and silver of the standard value of the United States in July, 1870. The gold and silver dollar to-day are of the same standard as they were then; therefore the holder of our bonds can not deny our perfect right, legal, equitable, and moral, to pay in the gold and silver of to-day as we promised to do. If gold or silver, either or both, had appreciated in value and been harder to get, by the terms of our contract we should still have been bound to pay therein. If gold and silver, either or both, have depreciated and are now less valuable, why should not the bondholder be bound to receive it?

"But," say the holders of these bonds, "silver as bullion, silver in foreign markets, is less valuable now than it was when we took the bonds; gold as bullion is more valuable than when we took the bonds, therefore you should pay us in gold; we do not want silver; notwithstanding we agreed to take it, we do not want it; we want gold, we want legislation that will compel you to pay us in gold;" and to obtain such legislation, Mr. Speaker, the bondholder joins in the war upon silver and tries to depreciate its value that we may be led to demonetize it. The national banks are all holders of Government bonds—their circulation is predicated upon them. How do they treat silver, much abused silver; silver, the coin in which we have a right to pay but in which they do not wish to be paid? Recur to the table to which I have called attention, the table showing the form and location of our circulation.

The national banks of the country, holding within their vaults $281,269,158, have only $8,897,554 in silver coin and $3,139,070 in silver certificates. They seek to discredit silver, and will not accept it if they can avoid it. They do whatever they can to raise an outcry against it in the hope of creating a public sentiment that will demand its demonetization. The New York clearing-house, representing the banks of that great city, will not accept it in their exchanges. England, a nation of creditors, holding the promises-to-pay of the world, has demonetized it. Germany, another creditor nation, has ceased to coin it; and those generally who hold large amounts of bonds, notes, and other securities, whether national, State, or private, unite in the war upon silver—and for what?

I can see no reason either in the experience of the past or the promise of the future to justify this crusade. What motive, then, prompts it? There can be but one: a desire to increase the value of debts and bonds. Now, sir, I censure no individual for seeking to enhance the value of his own property; any and all of us would do so if we could, but the Government should not do so for us at the expense of others. No statute should be passed which is in favor of the few against the many. No statute should be passed which increases the burden of debt that already hangs over the people, and enables the fortunate holders of this debt to exact of the great mass of persons who have it to pay more than they can now justly demand. What has been the effect of our financial legislation since the war? What would be the effect of legislation which suspended the coinage of silver? Who would be benefited by such a course? Who would be injured?

There is an amount of circulating medium which is neither too much nor too little for the interest of legitimate trade and commerce; and that country is blessed most which comes nearest to finding what amount that is and maintaining it; to have more inflates the prices of all commodities, and consequently depreciates the value of money; to have less reduces unduly prices of all commodities, and thus appreciates the value of money; to have more money than we ought to have is unjust to the creditor, because it depreciates the value of his debt; to have less than enough is unjust to the debtor, because it increases the burden of his debt. Have we enough money in circulation now for the legitimate uses of trade? We have about $26 per capita of our population.

France has about $52 per capita; do we not need as much as France? We hear no complaint that she has too much. On the contrary, we are cited to France as an illustration of the prosperity that we may expect here upon the suspension of silver coinage. If we need no more than France—only an equal amount—then we have but half enough. The value of the credits of the country are unduly enhanced, and the burdens of the debtor unjustly increased. And yet, Mr. Speaker, we are asked to do what has a tendency to strike down a large part of the too little money that we have, and thus magnify the evil.

Let me illustrate this point. A holder of an interest-bearing bond or note has a fixed annual income to the amount of his interest. Suppose he holds a one-hundred-dollar 4 per cent. bond; it pays him $4 a year, whether money is scarce or plentiful. Now, if you unduly contract the currency, you increase the value of his $4, because it will buy more of the necessaries of life than it would if a proper amount of money was in circulation. If you unduly expand the currency of the country, you diminish the value of his $4, because it will not buy as much of the necessaries of life as it would if a proper amount of money was in circulation. The number of dollars of his income does not change, but its value does. From Mr. Spofford's Almanac and other sources the following table has been prepared, making an estimate of the debts of all kinds owed by the people of the United States:

United States, 1885	$1,438,512,995
Aggregate State, funded and unfunded, 1885	262,175,245
Territorial, 1880	179,178
County, 1880	123,877,668
Municipal	698,270,199
Railroad, funded, 1884	3,669,115,772
Individual mortgages (estimated)	6,000,000,000
Total	12,193,161,057

Now, this vast debt bears interest, and the holders of it have fixed incomes to that extent. This debt must be paid by the producers of the country; it is a tax upon them. Shall we legislate to increase its value? Already, sir, if we have not enough currency, it is more valuable than it should be. Shall we by diminishing the quantity of the medium in which we must pay increase the difficulty of payment? All these debts may now be paid, lawfully paid, in silver dollars. It is so "nominated in the bond." Why not coin silver to enable the people to pay? We are told that we should increase the bullion in the silver dollar and then we could coin it. Why should we increase it? The contracts were made on the present basis. Our dollar buys as much now as it ever did. Do we want to make it buy more? Do we want further legislation in favor of the class who are always crying more, more? I protest against it. That kind of legislation has been had long enough; we want a little now in the interest of justice and fairness.

To the Republican party we owe the class legislation which has so long afflicted the country. Under their rule the rich have grown richer, the poor poorer. The Democratic party has promised a change. Let us begin now, and as far as in us lies redress the wrongs that have been so long visited upon the many in order that the few might thrive. I would not, sir, knowingly vote for any law that would operate unjustly on our bondholders or the creditors of the country. I wish to deal fairly and honestly by them; but at the same time I propose to keep in view the interests of the producers, the laborers, the people who have the debt to pay. I do not believe, sir, we should demonetize silver. Such an act would have the effect of adding at least 20 per cent. to the value of the credits of the country and of course adding a corresponding burden to those who have to pay.

I do believe, sir, that we should coin the maximum amount of silver that we can coin under the present law, and apply it, as well as gold, to the payment of our bonds; pay the debt as fast as possible; if the silver returns to the Treasury, pay it out again and again until we have no debt to pay; if the payment of bonds reduces the circulation of national-bank notes the silver certificate will take its place. Issue a certificate for every dollar we have. Let the Government be friendly to it. Convince the bondholders and bankers we do not intend to demonetize it. They, too, will then have an interest in maintaining its value. They will then no longer be its enemies, and, with the friendly co-operation of the Government and the bondholder, silver bullion and gold bullion will soon be as silver coin and gold coin now are, of equal value in the market.

The advocates of a single gold standard tell us that the interest of the laboring man should prompt him to advocate the demonetization of silver, because, they say, silver being a cheap money will drive out gold, and he will be paid in the cheap money. In the first place, experience, that best of teachers, shows that our silver will not drive out gold, and aside from that the statement is without foundation. If money is plentiful the price of labor is good; if scarce the price of labor is low. If money is plentiful the farmer gets a good price for his cotton; if money is scarce, as it now is, he gets a poor price. The price of labor and the price of cotton, other things being equal, vary with the volume of the currency. The farmer and the laborer are interested in having just enough money in circulation for the legitimate uses of trade, no more, no less. Indeed, this is true of all classes except those with fixed incomes; they always fare best when money is scarce. While their income does not vary in amount, it is greater in its purchasing power when prices are low than when prices are high, and prices are always low when money is very scarce. The holder of a bond or note drawing interest is benefited by a contraction of the currency. The less money there is in circulation the more valuable is his interest, and the more valuable his interest the more of labor or produce of the farm it takes to pay it.

Suppose a laborer owes the bank $100. If money is easy he can get, say, $1 a day for his labor, and he can pay his debt with one hundred days' work. If money is very scarce, he can only get 50 cents a day for his work. Now, probably, owing to the general reduction in the prices of what he wants to buy in consequence of the scarcity of money, he can buy as much with his 50 cents as he could with the dollar he got in good times; but so far as his creditor is concerned, when he comes to pay him it takes two hundred days' work to pay him. His debt does not change. It takes the same number of dollars to pay him, and yet it takes twice as much labor to pay him in hard times as it does in good times; so you see that whatever makes money scarce increases the value of bonds and debts, and also increases the burdens of those who have the debts to pay.

Now, take the farmer who raises cotton and who is in debt (and I am sorry to say most of them are in that condition); he owes $400 to the bank; he expects to pay the debt by the sale of his cotton; if money is plentiful, that is, if the circulation of the country is sufficient for the wants of trade, his cotton brings him, say, 10 cents a pound, $50 a bale, and eight bales of cotton will pay his debt. Now, if we have 20 per cent. less money than we ought to have for the legitimate wants of trade, what we do have will be increased in purchasing power 20 per cent., and the cotton that is worth and ought to bring 10 cents a pound only brings 8 cents, or $40 a bale. Now, probably that $40 will buy as much provisions or supplies as the $50 would, because prices are lower, but still it will take ten bales of cotton to pay his four-hundred-dollar debt to the bank; the value of the debt has been increased two bales of cotton, and the burden of the debtor has been increased a like amount. That is what I mean when I say that if you strike down silver you increase the value of bonds, notes, and securities, and add to the burdens of the debtors of the country. Owing, perhaps, to the limited amount of money in circulation cotton is now worth only $40 a bale. Demonetize silver and you take away probably 20 per cent. of our actual circulation.

What is the result? Instead of bringing $40 a bale, as now, cotton will only bring $32 a bale. In that case, instead of taking ten bales of cotton, as it now does, to pay the debt of $400, it will take more than twelve bales to pay it, and substantially, whatever may be said about it, such a law takes from the debtor unjustly to give to the creditor; it is legislation for one class against another class, for the rich against the poor, for the few against the many, and I am unalterably opposed to it. If, sir, we have too little money, the supply should be increased; not unjustly so; not to such an extent as to unduly depreciate the value of securities; I am as much opposed to that extreme as to the other; but to such an extent as to undo the injustice that has resulted from the class legislation of the past and give us a sufficient amount for the legitimate uses of trade. If we have now 20 per cent. too little money, and a proper adjustment was brought about, what would be the result? Instead of the farmer getting $40 a bale for his cotton, as he now does, he would get $50 a bale for it, and eight bales of cotton would pay the debt that now requires ten.

I have said, sir, that I think we have in this country too little money for the general good. Representatives from the East, the money centers, question this statement; the bankers of the country think and say that there will always be sufficient currency under the banking laws, because the banks will issue circulation to meet the demands of trade. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest that the bankers should not be allowed to determine for the whole country what amount of money is needed. I can not see, and do not believe, that the interest of the creditor and the debtor, the money-lender and the money-borrower, are the same. Now, the East is the creditor and the South and West the debtor, the East is the money-lender and the South and West the money-borrower. Are their interests in respect to the amount of circulating medium the same?

If there is too little money the value of credits is enhanced, the burden of debts increased; if there is too much money the value of credits are reduced, the burden of debts lightened. What benefits the one injures the other; what helps one hurts the other. Their interests then are not the same, and as a representative from the South I look with some degree of suspicion upon suggestions as to financial legislation coming from the East. I do not mean to say or be understood as saying that the capitalists of the East are any more selfish than other people, but I take it for granted they are looking after their own interest. Acting on the same principle, looking after the interest of the people that I represent, I suspect their policy. They may do the same as to mine if they please. Let both views be presented and remitted to the people. They can pass upon the question; they will pass upon it; and whether we like their judgment or not we must abide it.

Now, there is going on in this country, there has been going on for some years, a steady contraction of the currency, about $50,000,000 in the past four years, and at the same time our population is steadily increasing at the rate of more than a million a year. We should have a regular increase in the currency to keep pace with the increase of population, and instead of that a decrease is annually taking place. We have now no laws that tend to an increase. The regulation of the amount of currency is left almost wholly to the national banks. They increase or decrease at will, and of course they "will" to do that which is to their advantage. We have in round numbers $346,000,000 of United States notes, besides the gold and silver in the country that the national banks can not control; the rest is regulated by them, more or less, as they please, and they have been pleased to make it less each year. Of the money in the country other than national-bank notes about $500,000,000 is kept in the Treasury of the United States or was there on the 1st of July last, and thus the circulating medium is practically diminished by that amount.

These facts convince me that we need more money in circulation than we have, and I think a calm survey of the business, laboring, and agricultural interests of the country will convince any fair-minded man of that fact. All business is depressed, prices are abnormally low, laboring men are unemployed, and everywhere the great agricultural interests languish. Now, sir, there may be other causes that contribute to this result. It is not always easy to assign causes for effects; yet, sir, I believe the general distress to be more largely attributable to scarcity of money than anything else. Our legislation and management has been for years in the direction of aiding the capitalist and against the debtor. Let us go no farther in that direction. The debts of the country are enormous. Our national debt held largely in foreign countries, our State debts, our municipal debts, our county debts, our town debts, all must be paid by the laborer and producer; and the laborer and producer are burdened already by private debts.

Why, sir, in the South it is hardly too much to say that nine-tenths of the people are in debt. They found themselves after the late war reduced to poverty, and ever since have been manfully struggling to better their condition. Our people are largely an agricultural people; they depend upon the farm for support; they have received no "protection" at the hands of the law; they were forced from necessity after the war to incur debts to start their farming operations; they have been unable to extricate themselves from debt; their burdens have grown heavier and heavier; the value of their productions have steadily diminished, and each year, after hard labor and unceasing industry they find themselves deeper and deeper in debt. In their name, sir; in the name of the struggling poor everywhere in this country I protest against a continuance of the legalized oppression of the past fifteen years.

Now, sir, I do not pretend to be a financier. I have no fine-spun theories to present. I know, however, the great distress that everywhere exists, and I feel that I would be unfit to represent the generous people who sent me here if I did not urge some change that might afford relief. I think, sir, the money in the Treasury should be paid on the national debt, and thus be put in circulation. I think that a certificate should be issued for every dollar we have or may have, gold and silver, and be put in circulation by the payment of our debt. I think we should issue one and two dollar silver certificates for the convenience of the people, and thus afford convenient change, and I think some legislation should be had that will deprive the banks of the power to contract the currency.

I submit as a matter of interest, the following table, showing the production by States and Territories of gold and silver since 1792:

Unrefined gold and silver of domestic production, with the States and Territories producing the same, and refined domestic bullion not distributed, deposited at the mints and assay offices from their organization to the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885.

Locality.	Gold.	Silver.	Total.
Alabama	$225,479 24	$44 63	$225,523 87
Alaska	161,231 87	1,270 01	162,501 88
Arizona	3,758,623 79	13,398,576 13	17,157,199 92
California	735,513,362 26	3,840,939 42	739,354,301 68
Colorado	47,699,520 23	23,201,863 18	70,901,383 41
Dakota	23,093,175 82	292,589 10	23,385,764 92
Georgia	8,278,444 92	2,860 99	8,281,305 91
Idaho	27,471,205 51	1,341,032 04	28,812,237 55
Indiana	40 13		40 13
Maine	5,638 20	22 00	5,660 20
Maryland	3,625 84	2 94	3,628 78
Massachusetts		917 56	917 56
Michigan	5,733 49	3,596,001 83	3,601,735 32
Montana	55,979,576 77	11,813,040 50	67,792,617 27
Nebraska	156 97	2 42	159 39
Nevada	22,679,390 61	92,041,213 13	114,720,603 74
New Hampshire	11,020 55		11,020 55
New Mexico	2,210,192 37	5,259,348 89	7,469,541 26
North Carolina	11,007,150 66	48,564 48	11,055,715 14
Oregon	18,307,527 29	55,817 61	18,363,344 90
Pennsylvania	1,138 34	2,588 47	3,726 81
South Carolina	1,561,390 28	1,005 68	1,562,395 96
Tennessee	87,409 38	8 45	87,417 83
Texas	97 86	2,502 85	3,600 71
Utah	729,217 07	18,934,453 12	19,662,670 19
Vermont	85,598 21	49 94	85,648 15
Virginia	1,713,089 33	186 67	1,713,276 00
Washington Territory	355,599 21	1,375 39	356,974 60
Wyoming	742,532 56	11,926 41	754,458 97
Other sources or not reported	36,877,140 71	41,582,487 89	78,459,628 60
Total unrefined	998,564,309 47	215,430,691 73	1,213,995,001 20
Refined bullion	270,615,320 33	137,896,215 10	408,511,535 43
Grand total	1,269,179,629 80	353,326,906 83	1,622,506,536 63

This country produces about $48,000,000 silver yearly. Of this amount perhaps $15,000,000 is used in the arts and manufactures, leaving only about $33,000,000 for coinage. It can be coined under the present law; it certainly should be coined and put in circulation. I can not understand how it can be said that silver can not be got out of the Treasury when we have only to pay it out on the public debt. Suppose we try that plan. I think we will find it will work well. There has been much clap-trap, Mr. Speaker, used in this discussion, perhaps on both sides, but the baldest effort to deceive is the suggestion that the coinage of silver under the present law is very expensive, and that it costs the people great sums to build vaults to store it. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that he is paying out every month two millions in gold for silver bullion, coining it and keeping it in the Treasury.

I have suggested that we might pay it out on our debt. It seems to me very strange that it did not and does not occur to the Secretary to pay for the silver bullion he buys every month in silver instead of gold. He has a perfect right to do so. Why not do it? Now, as to cost of vaults in which to store the silver when coined, the truth is that the Government of the United States since the passage of the present law has made a clear profit of $25,000,000 on silver—that is, the bullion bought has, when coined, turned out twenty-five million more dollars than we paid for it; and yet we are told it costs the people a vast sum out of the common treasure to continue this coinage. Why, sir, the profits we have made would largely more than pay for all necessary vaults for storage, and at the same time do what I think ought to be done, pay for transporting silver to the various depositories, so that the people and local banks throughout the South might get it without having to pay large express charges for its transportation. There is absolutely nothing, sir, in the idea that the Government is losing anything by the coinage; on the contrary, a large profit—near $5,000,000—is made each year.

Now, sir, some of my suggestions may be crude. Perhaps they are, but they point in the right direction—relief to the people; and if I can do anything to contribute in the slightest degree toward lightening the burdens under which the great mass of them now struggle, the sum of my happiness will be complete. This is a Democratic House. The Democratic party professes to favor equal privileges to all and unjust discriminations in favor of none. Let us act upon that idea; let us legislate alike for the rich and for the poor, for the creditor and for the debtor; giving neither, by law, any advantage over the other, but giving to each and to all men a fair opportunity in the race of life. Less than this no man or class of men should have; more than this, no man or class of men should ask. [Applause.]

[The chair was resumed by Mr. CRISP as Speaker pro tempore.]

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, it is always well to watch the milestones and to note what progress is being made. The silver question has been for months the center of thought both in and out of Congress. Has anything been gained by its discussions? I answer, yes; much has been gained. First, I may say, the history of the coinage legislation of the Government since its foundation has been widely published, and is now generally understood. No one now thinks or speaks of the silver dollar as a dishonest dollar, meaning thereby that it is anything different or other in the amount of silver it contains, from what it always has been since its coinage was first authorized in 1792. What it was then it is to-day, and has ever been, except for the five years from 1873 to 1878, during which time it was demonetized by an act of Congress, which, to say the least of it, was passed without the knowledge and consent of the people.

What is the next fact that has become prominent? That from 1792 until 1873 the silver dollar was a full legal tender for all indebtedness, and its coinage was free. During all these years there was no distinction made between the two metals. The doors of the mints stood wide open alike to both gold and silver. That when we return to free coinage we will not be feeling our way over an untried path, but will be walking on the well-beaten highway of a hundred years' travel and monetary experience. Again, the terms, conditions, and circumstances attending the refunding of the war debt and the issue of bonds from time to time have been drawn from the history of the last twenty years and repeated until the country understands them. This is an important addition to public knowledge. The minority report of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures tersely and forcibly puts this information in the following words:

Again, as is well known, the refunding acts of 1870 and 1871 provided for refunding the whole public debt into a coin debt, and that the principal and interest of the bonds authorized should be paid in coin of the standard value of 1870. At that time the silver dollar (412½ grains) was the standard of value, and the coin called for in the bond was that dollar or the gold dollar (25.8 grains), at the option of the Government. There is this inscription on face of bonds of the 5 per cent. funded loan of 1881:

"This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt,' approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of May, A. D. 1881, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of February, May, August, and November, in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes and duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority."

Also on the face of the United States 4 per cent. bond:

"This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, amended by an act approved January 20, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1907, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly on the 1st day of October, January, April, and July in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority."

All the interest-bearing coin obligations of the Government now outstanding were issued by virtue of this act, except the 3 per cent. bonds issued under the act of 1881, or since silver coinage was resumed, and are payable in either gold or silver coin. Therefore, to restore the silver dollar and compel its payment in the redemption of these obligations would be no violation of contract or of good faith on the part of the Government toward its creditors.

The general diffusion of this historical information is a result of the silver discussion.

Another fact has come to the front. On the 31st day of August, 1865, the total indebtedness of the Government was twenty-eight hundred and forty-six millions. On the 1st of February, 1866, the Secretary of the Treasury reports to Congress the total debt at eighteen hundred and thirty-seven millions—a reduction of one thousand millions; and yet, at the average present price of the common products of human labor, cotton, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, hogs, &c., it would take more of the products of human labor at present rates to pay the balance of eighteen hundred millions than it would have taken to pay the twenty-eight hundred and forty-six millions in 1865. In other words, as all wealth is the product of labor in some form, it would take more human labor to pay the balance at the present price of labor's products than it would have taken to pay the whole debt in 1865. This is a proposition that sets men to thinking. It requires as much labor to raise a bushel of wheat now as it did then. But it takes 2,000,000 bushels of wheat to pay now what 1,000,000 would have paid in 1865.

Another fact has been gleaned from the investigation. The interests that secured the passage of the refunding acts of 1870 and 1871, providing for refunding the whole public debt into a coin debt, that secured the demonetization of silver in 1873, that opposed its remonetization in 1878, that insisted upon a resumption of specie payments on January 1, 1879, that brought about a contraction of the currency to aid in the resumption of specie payments, that opposed and denounced the decisions of the Supreme Court which declared that greenbacks were a legal tender, that insisted upon the retirement of all United States Treasury notes and that national-bank notes should be the only paper money of the country and gold the only legal tender, are the identical interests that to-day lead the crusade against silver, denounce free coinage, and insist upon the suspension of the Bland act. Men are prompted by self-interest. The same motives that operate now operated sixteen years ago, and have exerted their force continuously in the same direction ever since.

You can trace their influence in every legislative act that has touched the currency during that period. It was first to secure beyond peradventure the payment of the public debt in coin. Next to declare that silver should no longer be money, and thus to secure the payment of the public debt in gold. Next to force specie resumption and thus secure the payment of all debts, both public and private, in gold. Human greed is the same in all generations. Is it strange that Christ scourged the money-changers from the temple? What a bonanza Wall street would have secured if it could have held the obligations of the country, both public and private, until they were redeemed in gold? But the people rebelled. They have always been in favor of silver. They are so to-day. The result was the legislation that again made silver a legal tender, and that ordered the coinage of from two to four millions each month. In principle, at least so far as it directed the purchase of bullion and its coinage by the Government, it can not be defended.

There is no more reason why the United States should buy silver from a mine than wheat from an elevator. But in practice it was better than to put the whole country at the mercy of the creditor classes. It was a compromise. The bimetallists wanted free coinage then. The monometallists wanted no silver, except as subsidiary coin. In one view, in my judgment, the compromise was unfortunate. If the gold advocates had succeeded then, there would have been such widespread financial ruin and universal depression in business that the people, through their representatives, would, at the next Congress, have settled the question for all time by making the coinage of both metals equally free.

Another fact, another mile-stone in financial progress has become apparent. Either the advocates of monometallism have been converted to bimetallism, or they have become so convinced of the overwhelming public sentiment in favor of a double standard that they do not think it prudent at the present time to insist upon a single one. Heretofore the discussion in and out of Congress has been mainly as to whether we should have a two-metal or a one-metal standard. Now the gold advocates avow themselves to be friends of silver, and aver that they want its coinage suspended so as to keep it at par with gold at its present ratio. But after all it is only the old idea in a new dress. It is making gold the standard and measuring silver by it.

I admit freely the difficulty of measuring values by two different yard-sticks, either of which may change its length. But I am unable to see, if we are to be confined to one, why the yard-stick that has been lengthened in comparison with all other commodities should be used instead of the other that relatively has preserved its old dimensions. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his reply to the interrogatories proposed by resolution of this House adopted on the 3d of February, says:

> I have labored to promote the circulation of silver with unremitting energy. I have pressed its circulation at a constant expense to the Treasury when other forms of money could have been circulated without such cost. * * * I have upheld its value by never compelling its receipt by any creditor of the Government, and never failing to provide by exchange or transfer whatever currency might be preferred.

This may be taken as a fair and explicit exposition of the policy of the Treasury administration. In other words, it means the circulation of silver upon a gold basis—bimetallism upon a monometallic standard. In the statement of the public debt made by the Secretary of the Treasury April 1, 1886, we are told that the total indebtedness at that date was $1,494,373,335, and that there was a net cash balance, after deducting the one hundred million reserve fund and deducting gold and silver reserved for outstanding gold and silver certificates, with other specified and proper deductions, of $76,381,099, of which $32,410,000 was in silver certificates. The tabulated statement is as follows:

Available for reduction of the public debt:
Gold held for gold certificates actually outstanding		$90,775,643 00
Silver held for silver certificates actually outstanding		90,122,421 00
United States notes held for certificates of deposit actually outstanding		11,925,000 00
Cash held for matured debt and interest unpaid		17,404,284 38
Fractional currency		2,780 13
Total available for reduction of the debt		210,230,128 51
Reserve fund:
Held for redemption of United States notes, acts January 14, 1875, and July 12, 1882		100,000,000 00
Unavailable for reduction of the debt:
Fractional silver coin	$28,822,637 63
Minor coin	515,343 94
		29,337,981 57
Certificates held as cash:
Legal-tender	840,000 00
Gold	46,797,927 00
Silver	32,410,575 00
		80,048,502 00
Net cash balance on hand		76,381,099 54
Total cash in the Treasury as shown by Treasurer's general account		495,997,711 62
Cash items available for reduction of the debt	$210,230,128 51
Reserve held for redemption of United States notes	100,000,000 00
		310,230,128 51
Total debt, less available cash items		1,494,373,335 14
Net cash in the Treasury		76,381,099 54
Debt, less cash in the Treasury, April 1, 1886		1,417,992,235 60

There was then in the Treasury on the 1st of April $32,410,000 in silver certificates, forming a part of the net cash balance. There was also in the Treasury on March 31, 1886, by the report of the Treasurer, Mr. Jordan, after deducting for outstanding silver certificates, $86,849,668 in actual silver.

If the statements hereinbefore made as to the refunding acts, using the word "coin" at a time when both silver and gold were embraced in that term and were legal tender, are correct, then the legal right of the Secretary of the Treasury to use this silver balance to pay outstanding bonds is clear. The first step to putting it in circulation would be to take it from the vaults of the Treasury and pay it to the creditors of the Government. That is as much a part of monetary circulation as the payment of money from one individual to another. It is the first step in the circulation of any money that the Government holds.

The Government means simply the people acting in a corporate form. It is their money and the Secretary is their custodian. The national debt is their debt and the assets in the Treasury are their contributions for its payment. The option is with them to pay silver dollars or not upon their debt. The option is not with the creditors to say whether silver dollars shall be received, but the Secretary of the Treasury, upon his own motion, without instructions and without authority, has reversed the option and declares the reversal in his own language as quoted above:

> I have upheld its value by never compelling its receipt by any creditors of the Government, and never failing to provide by exchange or transfers whatever currency might be preferred.

In other words, he has always given the creditors of the Government their choice of the money in which they should be paid. Now, if he is right in his theory, that gold and silver would have parted company if he had not done this, his declaration amounts to this: I have kept gold and silver in circulation at the cost of the interest on eighty-six millions of bonds which I might have paid with this silver, but which the bondholders did not want to take in payment for their bonds, and which I did not therefore use for any purpose but kept idle in the vaults of the Treasury in order to keep the coin currency of the country upon a gold basis. And the "I" who upheld its value by "never compelling its receipt by any creditors" is a servant of the people, saying to them that in order to use the gold yard-stick for the measurement of your property in the payment of your debts I have cost you the loss of all the interest on all the bonds that the accumulated silver, not held for the redemption of certificates, would have paid. A gentleman occupying a high position in the administration of the Government has declared that "public office is a public trust." The declaration might be amended to read, "except in the Treasury Department."

It is asserted as a reason why silver should not be paid from the Treasury that it would be unjust to the creditors of the Government and destructive to its credit to compel them to receive silver in payment of any part of their claims, because silver is intrinsically worth less now compared with gold than it was when the debts were contracted. It is not denied but that silver, even at a discount of 20 per cent., will purchase as much of the products of labor, as great a quantity of the necessary commodities of life and trade and business, as much of anything, in fact, except of gold, as when the debts were contracted. But because silver bullion can not be exchanged for the same relative quantity of gold bullion now as then, it is insisted that the debtor class must stand the loss by the shrinkage in the values of these commodities, and the creditor class must reap a corresponding gain whenever any debts are to be paid, and that the sacredness of contracts can only be maintained by adhering to this policy.

In other words, that in the payment of all debts, both public and private, when, by the terms of the contract, either of the two kinds of money can be used in payment—if natural causes or the legislation of foreign governments make one kind relatively more valuable than the other, and make all the products of human labor, measured by the dearer money, relatively as cheap as the cheaper money—that the dearer money, simply because it is the dearer money, is the only just and honest medium for payment. This is an enunciation of the principle asserted by the policy of the administration, that the creditor must have the option as to what money he shall receive in payment of debts due him, which means, in another form, that he must be paid in the dearer money or that the cheaper money must be so limited in volume, must be made so scarce, as to make its value equal to the dearer money. Now, the rights of debtor and creditor are equally sacred. Their equities are equally great.

It is manifestly as unjust to compel a debtor to give more than he agreed to pay as to compel a creditor to receive less than he agreed to take. If there have been changes in the condition of affairs, which, while not affecting the legal rights of either party, have been to the advantage of one and to the disadvantage of the other, it is certainly not a function of government to take the advantage from the one and give it to the other. If wheat and corn are at the same price per bushel, and A contracts at the end of five years to give B 5,000 bushels of either corn or wheat, no one would contend, if at the time of payment wheat had become worth twice as much as corn, that A must pay in wheat, or else pay 10,000 bushels of corn, instead of five; and especially if at the time of payment the 5,000 bushels of corn could be exchanged for the same quantity of all other commodities as when the contract was made except the single commodity of wheat. Nor would anybody contend that if under the law B was compelled to accept the 5,000 bushels of corn the entire community should be taxed to make up to him the difference between the price of wheat and corn; or that the farmers should be compelled to stop raising corn in order that the supply should be reduced and the price be thereby brought up for B's benefit. But this is in substance what the people of the entire country are asked to do when it is insisted that more silver shall be put in the silver dollar, or that its coinage shall cease until its scarcity shall advance its price in the market, and this, too, for the benefit of the few who hold the obligations of the many. I am as strongly in favor of maintaining the credit of the Government as any member of this House; I am as strongly opposed to bad faith with either public or private creditors as any member of this House; but it is not necessary to lean back of a perpendicular line in order to walk straight, or to do an injustice to a debtor in order to keep faith with his creditor.

Mr. Spofford makes the following estimate of indebtedness in the United States.

Statement of the national, State, county, municipal, and railroad debt in the United States, and an estimate of the individual real and personal mortgage debt.

United States, 1885	$1,438,542,995
Aggregate State, funded and unfunded, 1885	262,175,245
Territorial, 1880	179,178
County, 1880	$123,877,668
Municipal	698,270,199
Railroad, funded, 1884	3,669,115,772
Individual mortgages (estimated)	6,000,000,000
Total	12,193,161,057

Estimating the population at 60,000,000, we have an average indebtedness of $200 for every man, woman, and child. To adopt a gold standard, either by demonetizing silver or by stopping its coinage, so as to measure the values of all property, silver included, by the gold standard, is practically to increase this indebtedness by the difference between the bullion value and the coin value of silver. That difference is to-day over 20 per cent. Can there be any greater injustice than to increase the debts of the people of the entire country in this ratio? Suppose that it increases them but one-half of this per cent., or 10 per cent.; there would then be added to this gross indebtedness above stated the enormous sum of $1,219,000,000. From the time that United States bonds were worth 50 cents on the dollar Congressional legislation has been in favor of the creditor. Let us now at least call a halt and give the under dog in the fight a living chance.

But is it true that it is necessary to stop the coinage of silver in order to keep silver coin at par with gold? And will its stoppage tend to restore and preserve the 16 to 1 ratio of values? If it does so tend it must be for one of these two reasons, namely: That the value of silver bullion will be thereby increased, or that by limiting the supply of silver coin it will thereby be kept at a gold standard. I apprehend but few, if any, will claim that to stop the coinage of silver will raise the price of bullion. On the contrary, it is apparent that exactly the opposite result will follow. The average annual product of silver bullion from the mines of this country is in round numbers forty-nine millions. The minimum of two millions a month required to be coined by the Bland act leaves twenty-five million of bullion annually to go on the market. To stop coinage throws the entire product on the market. We are told that the stoppage of coinage by the Latin Union—Belgium, France, Switzerland, and Italy—and by Germany, Holland, and Spain is the cause of the decline in the price of silver bullion. If this is so the stoppage of its coinage by the United States will operate in the same direction, and must cause a still greater decline, while its free coinage will advance it to a coin value.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], while advocating the gold standard, as I understood him, in his remarks on Saturday, declares—

> The law of unlimited coinage would, by the creation of a new and highly profitable use for silver bullion, raise its gold price in this country and in Europe.

Do gentlemen who oppose its free coinage desire the opposite result? Is it to lower the gold price of silver bullion that they advocate the suspension of the Bland act? And, if lowered, will not the tendency of gold coin to go to a premium be correspondingly increased? It certainly can not be for these purposes that they press the suspension of the Bland act. It must be then for the other reason alleged—that is, to keep silver coin at par with gold coin by limiting its quantity. This is a quasi assertion of the fiat doctrine. It amounts to this. We admit that by stopping coinage silver bullion will decrease in value; that a silver dollar is intrinsically worth less than a gold dollar; that it is not redeemable in any other money; that its legal-tender character gives it a debt-paying circulation. But by arresting its coinage, and keeping what is coined in the Treasury, although the price of bullion will fall, a limited amount of coin can be floated in circulation, and the business of the country and the silver coin that does circulate can be kept at a gold basis. I insist that all arguments in favor of stopping the coinage of silver, when analyzed, are arguments in favor of a single gold standard, instead of a bimetallic standard.

If gentlemen who make these arguments desire this result, they should be candid enough to say so, and not masquerade as the friends of a bimetallic basis when the policy they advocate must inevitably lead to dearer gold and cheaper silver. This would mean still lower prices for all commodities and the payment of all debts in money relatively more valuable than it even now is. It would make richer all whose investments are in money or its paper representatives. It would increase the value of bonds, mortgages, and every species of debt obligations. It would lengthen the yardstick that measures the value of every agricultural and of every manufactured product, of every farm, factory, and species of material property. With money increasing relatively in value, and everything else decreasing, the capitalist will have no motive to invest his capital in business enterprises, but will prefer to keep it in interest-paying obligations or locked up in the vaults of the banks.

But what results may reasonably be expected to follow the free coinage of American silver (for I would at present confine coinage to the product of our own mines) and the payment of the surplus silver in the Treasury in redemption of national bonds? If the stoppage of coinage has decreased the value of silver bullion, as the opponents of silver tell us, it is fair to conclude, as I have before stated, that the coinage of all the bullion offered will increase its value. Within the limits of the United States, certainly, it will take silver out of the market as bullion and put it in circulation as coin. The same principles that control the price of all other commodities will control the price of silver bullion. It will not seek foreign markets, because it will be worth more at home as coin. India and China, the great silver-consuming nations of the world, will draw their silver from England, France, and Germany.

The United States, the greatest silver-producing nation in the world, will stop her perennial supply of silver bullion to the London market. It is to the interest of England to cheapen silver. The products of India, that vast and populous dependency of the British Empire, mainly seek a market in London. They are principally wheat and cotton. In 1874 the first shipment of wheat was made, and it was only 95,000 bushels. In 1875 1,500,000 bushels were shipped. Since 1879 the shipments have been as follows:

	Bushels.
1879	1,949,733
1880	4,098,416
1881	13,896,166
1882	37,078,571
1883	26,402,571
1884	39,118,790
1885	29,594,678

Great Britain is the largest cotton consumer in the world. Her annual consumption is about four million bales. She is the largest purchaser of our cotton. In 1885, the United States sent to English markets two millions five hundred and twenty-seven thousand bales. But India is challenging this supply. Her produce of cotton is annually increasing. England receives from India now one million of bales annually. American exports of wheat and cotton to England are falling off as Indian exports are increasing. In the report of Mr. Goschen's Parliament committee, 1876, there is the following testimony:

> There is a very large trade between Calcutta and New York, at present amounting to not very far short of ten millions in the year. The Americans take a large quantity of oil seeds from Calcutta, and also indigo and hides, the three together making up last year not less than $9,000,000. America sends Calcutta nothing at all, so that all has to be adjusted through the trade of this country.

As illustrating the capacity of India to absorb silver, I take the following from Mr. Robert W. Hughes's pamphlet entitled "The American dollar:"

India embraces much the greater part of South-eastern Asia, having an area of a million and a half square miles. Enlarged now by the annexation of Burmah, its area is half as great as the whole of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean and from Mexico to British America. The dominion of Great Britain extends over three-fourths of all India. The population of the entire country is 241,000,000; that of the British portion nearly 200,000,000. The inhabitants of India's vast area average 160 to the square mile; whereas, if the whole area of the United States be considered, the average of fifty-six millions of souls to three and a half millions (3,602,990) square miles is less than 16 to the mile.

The staple food of the population is millet. They sell all the rice and wheat for which transportation and purchasers are found. The cost of living is probably less than anywhere else in the world, and, out of their small wages of a few cents a day, is so cheap that even ryots hoard silver, and many of them gold, in the form of personal ornaments. Mr. Goschen's Parliamentary committee, mentioned above, have this to say on the subject: "Your committee believe that as India has been a great consumer of silver in the past, so it will be in the future, the question being rather, looking to the amount it has to pay this country [meaning England] for government purposes, it will be able to pay for that silver, than whether a desire to obtain and use the metal will exist. On this point the passion for accumulating ornaments seems to be of much importance. The question of the expectation which may be formed of the continued absorption of silver by India is not confined to the consideration of the currency. An immense amount of the metal is converted into ornaments and absorbed from circulation. In every large village there is a silversmith, and as soon as a man gets a few rupees he employs this smith to come to his house and make the ornaments there.

"Although the peasantry in India have poor houses, yet the amount of ornaments they have would exceed in value the furniture and utensils of the same class of peasantry in England. There is thus, independently of the demand for silver as money, a constant demand for it, in a proportion quite unknown in European countries, for manufacturing purposes among the population of India. The demand for silver as money has not itself yet attained its maximum. In many parts of India, especially in the distant and more isolated parts, transactions are carried on by barter for the want of money. Wherever large works have been in progress, such as railways, roads, and irrigation schemes, silver has been generally distributed, and its use has superseded barter arrangements, and wherever the natives have once begun the use of money there the silver remains. Throughout all historical periods India has always gone on absorbing silver, and there seems at present no cessation to this absorption."

Mr. R. H. Patterson, of Edinburgh, said to be a statistical writer of high repute, in an article in the Contemporary Review of April, 1879, states that for the period from 1855 to 1875 the trade balance against England and in favor of India was $1,948,000,000, or $92,500,000 per annum. And that of this balance India received $1,266,250,000 in specie. He further states that between 1854 and 1865 India absorbed the entire annual product of all the silver mines in the world, and $200,000,000 besides.

Since these dates the balance of trade in favor of India has decreased, it is true; and the expenses of its government, including the maintenance of troops kept there for its control, and the immense sums expended by Great Britain in the construction of railroads through its territory have accumulated a debt of $1,250,000,000 against the Indian Government, payable in gold, and largely held in London. Against the interest of this debt and the annual expenses of the Government of India, charged against it by England, drafts are drawn, known as council drafts, which are purchased at a discount in London and used at par to offset the balance of trade in favor of India as far as they will go.

The excess of this balance of trade is paid in silver, which is a legal tender and at par with gold in India. The discount at which the council drafts are purchased and the difference between the price of silver bullion in London and silver coin in India constitute the bonus which the importer of Indian wheat and cotton enjoys. In referring to these and kindred facts, an Englishman who had been for twenty years a resident of India engaged in the extension of her railway system, Mr. G. P. Paul, in a letter to the San Francisco Examiner, November 7, 1885, lays down certain conclusions which he says are axiomatic. Among these are:

The greater portion of the American silver dispatched to London is used to pay for Indian wheat, cotton, and other produce, and enters necessarily into competition with the council drafts that are used for the same purpose. * * *

And again:

American silver should be withheld as much as possible from London, and diverted directly to its ultimate markets in Eastern Asia, if American wheat and cotton are to escape competition with the Indian articles. The railways in India belong to the government, so that any diminution in the exports of wheat, cotton, and other produce from India causes a direct loss to the government which it is anxious to avoid. Therefore, the government does not desire any appreciation of the price of silver, because its rise to its old value would seriously affect the exports of wheat and cotton to Europe.

It is with cheap labor of India in producing wheat and cotton and cheap silver in London for buying them that the American producer competes. As silver has cheapened, the importations of these staples into England from India have steadily increased. Other causes have doubtless contributed to this result, but cheap silver has been a leading cause. It is clearly, then, to the interest of England to keep silver at the lowest possible rates. Do gentlemen think it will be to our advantage to further this selfish policy of our transatlantic cousins?

My colleague form Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] says one of the results of free coinage will be "to raise the price of silver bullion in Europe." I believe that he is correct in that statement. Just to the extent that its price is raised will the bonus of India exportations of wheat and cotton, paid for with silver, be lessened, and their competition with American shipments be decreased. London is the market of the world. Is it well for us to stop the coinage of silver and thereby lessen its bullion value for the benefit of the London traders with India and at the expense of every export that we send abroad with which India competes?

But it is said that if free coinage is adopted here the silver of Europe will flow to the United States, and our gold will go there in exchange. It will unquestionably follow the laws of trade. If gold is worth more in Europe than it is here, and silver is worth more here than in Europe, an exchange will take place until an equilibrium is restored, and no longer. But how long will it be before the laws of trade will restore that equilibrium? As affecting the ratio of values between the two metals under the operation of the universal law of supply and demand, every pound of silver that leaves Europe will make silver scarcer and therefore dearer there, and every pound of gold that flows in to take the place of the silver that has left will make gold relatively cheaper there. And if it does come it will be for the purchase of something that we have to sell. If it is exchanged for gold it will be because the holders make a profit by the exchange. If it is exchanged for wheat, corn, cotton, beef, or pork it will be because a market is offered to the American producer in which it is his interest to sell. Shut off the inflow of American bullion, and the Indian and Chinese trade will very soon absorb all the surplus silver of Europe. The influence of these "graves of silver" must not be overlooked in dealing with this question.

Confining coinage to American bullion would leave the doors of importation open for silver only for manufacturing purposes. With India and China receiving silver as coin at par, with the United States receiving it only for manufactures, and with the supply to Europe from the most productive mines in the world cut off, how long would there be profit in sending silver here to exchange for gold? And again, if the price of gold was temporarily raised by free coinage the imports of goods manufactured abroad upon a gold basis would be checked. Our exports would not be diminished to offset this because we are now practically upon a gold basis, maintained by the action of the Secretary of the Treasury. The balance of trade would turn in our favor, and with a constant drain from the silver reservoirs of Europe to India and China, without the inflow into their reservoirs of American bullion, gold would flow back again in settlement of the balance in our favor.

The gentleman from Illinois, in stating the results of free coinage, among others says:

First contraction, then expansion. * * * First paralysis of commercial credit, then the fever of speculation. * * * To silver bullion first a sudden rise, then a rapid, and it may be, a permanent decline.

And again he says:

One other probable effect would be that a diversion into the United States Mint of the silver bullion which now goes abroad would diminish the supply of silver bullion in Europe, and so raise its price that Germany or France would be induced to sell coin for export to India.

The contraction could only be to the extent to which gold was drawn from circulation, and this would be at once replaced with silver according to the law controlling the volume of circulation which the gentleman cites. But if the first result to silver bullion will be, as he says, "a sudden rise," that will check the withdrawal of gold. It is difficult to see how these contradictory results named by the gentleman could follow. If there was first a "sudden rise" of silver bullion, the ratio of value between gold and silver would be decreased, and gold, that now circulates but little because it is the dearer money, would circulate more freely, because the difference in values would be reduced. If the diversion of silver into the Mint so checked its shipments abroad that "Germany and France would sell silver coin for export to India," from whence would come the expansion that would produce a "fever of speculation?" Not from foreign silver, certainly, if the price warrants its sale to India as the gentleman suggests. If the currency of the Government was established upon the free coinage basis, permanent and measured not by legislation but by nature's supply of the precious metals, where would be the uncertain element that would paralyze commercial credit?

If every year's increase in population and business requires more money—if the development of India and her swelling exports yearly draw in more specie to that metallic mausoleum "whence none returns"—if the consumption of silver in the manufacture of plate, jewelry, and the various uses of civilization is not diminished, how can an increased demand for a new use, the use of free coinage for all that comes instead of half-cause a "rapid and permanent decline?" And is not the increase of prices which follows a healthy expansion, the universal activity and prosperity of business that accompanies it, the desire to invest in new enterprises and to enlarge these already established that is always then seen—are not all these what my friend miscalls a "fever of speculation," and is not this "fever of speculation" what we call good times when money is plenty, when everybody is employed, when wages are good, and when all are happy and contented?

We are told that not one dollar more silver should be coined until there is an agreement with European nations fixing an international ratio of values and providing for free coinage on that basis everywhere. This is the piece de resistance the last ditch of the argentophobists. Now, if stopping coinage will lower the price of bullion, how will it force foreign governments to an international ratio? Will it be on account of the loss their subjects will sustain by the depreciation of the silver they may happen to hold? Will it be on account of the paralysis of business that they will hereby suffer? We will suffer much more than they can, because we are a silver-producing country and they are not, and we have a hundred millions of silver reserve in the Treasury, and their reserves are mainly in gold. If the cessation of the use of silver in all countries except India and China, and the fall in its value consequent upon such cessation, will produce such widespread and universal financial ruin and depression in business, and if in connection therewith our people, a silver-producing people, will suffer less by this ruin and depression than other civilized nations will suffer, it might be that by this kind of "silver freeze-out," this financial "boycott," or money "strike," a consent to a national monetary union could be compelled. But it seems to me that we would be the greatest sufferers by the process, and that the desired result would by no means be the logical, and therefore probable, consequence of this reducing process. I fail to see how following their hostile policy to silver will compel them to adopt our friendly policy toward it.

I am in favor, then, of the free coinage of American silver, because I believe it will tend to the following results:

It will increase the price of silver bullion and lessen the ratio between gold and silver.

It will remove the uncertainty of the future supply of money by regulating that supply by the natural product of the mines.

It will prevent the debtor from being compelled to pay his debts in a dearer money than that with which he promised to pay.

It will put it beyond the power of any combination to corner gold by taking from gold its exclusive use as a redeeming medium and sharing that use with silver.

It will give to the currency of the country an annual accretion not disproportioned to the annual increase in population and business.

It will relieve the Secretary of the Treasury from the expense and difficulty of putting silver in circulation, of which he now complains, and leave it in the hands of the owner of the bullion who has it coined to put in circulation through the ordinary channels of trade.

It will make every holder of a bond, a mortgage, a certificate of deposit of silver bullion or of silver coin a friend of silver and an advocate of its use as money, because it will be to his interest to maintain its price.

It will hasten the withdrawal of national-bank notes, and leave United States notes, coin certificates, and coin as the only currency of the country.

It will put an end to the present illogical policy of purchasing one-half of the products of the mines at 78 cents on the dollar and coining it at 100 cents, leaving the unbought product a dead weight and menace to the silver circulation.

It will be a return to the free-coinage practice of the first one hundred years of the country and an adoption of a policy that will give confidence to capital by the reasonable certainty of its permanency.

It will assure that gradual and healthy expansion of values which always attends prosperous times, invites investment of capital, supplies labor to the unemployed, pays fair wages, and brings a fair return to both employer and employé.

The legal-tender currency of the future will some time be a paper currency, for whose redemption, when presented, in gold and silver at its market value, the credit of the Government will be sacredly pledged. These metals have stood the test of experience in all nations of which history gives any account, as the best final medium of settling exchanges. Their value is fixed by their scarcity, the cost of mining, and the uses to which they are put. Experience has shown that while their values are to some extent variable, they are yet more constant than the values of any other articles that possess beauty, indestructibility, and adaptation to minute subdivisions. All these are essential elements of a metallic currency.

But because they are of intrinsic value and are not absolutely constant in that value through succeeding years are sufficient reasons why they should not be the sole legal tender, or the only basis in fixed quantities for a legal-tender currency. The stamping and minting into the denominations fixed by law of gold and silver is the Government's certificate of their fineness and weight. Their intrinsic value is fixed by their uses and their cost of production. Why not leave their value as a medium of exchange to be fixed by the world's verdict as shown in its central markets? As between all nations, this test now fixes values. We take the coin of Europe as bullion, and they take our coin in the same way.

The stamp of the mint of England is accepted here as telling the correct weight and fineness of a pound sterling, because we have found by experience that it is true. The stamp of the United States upon an eagle is accepted there for the same reason. Experience has shown that this is likely to be the extent of the agreement of nations in the respective interchange of their coin. Is it not after all the fairest and only monetary use of gold and silver that does not sometimes work an injustice to either debtor or creditor? And is not this the legitimate extent of its internal use in a great country like the United States? The law recognizes credits, and by its process provides for the collection of debts. If the debtor refuses to pay, it takes his property, converts it into some medium of exchange, and gives to his creditor an amount of that medium definitely proportioned to the amount of the debt, and declares that the debt is fully satisfied. That medium should represent so far as possible the average values of all the common products of human labor.

It is patent to every one that if gold were now the only legal tender its rise in value would work an injustice to every debtor who was compelled to purchase it with either labor or property to use in paying debts contracted before its rise. If both gold and silver were the sole legal tender and both correspondingly rose in value, the same injustice would be done to the debtor. If both declined in value the injustice would be done to the creditor. But if, instead of either, legal-tender paper currency was issued by the Government, for whose redemption, when presented, in gold or silver at its market value the credit of the Government was pledged, neither debtor nor creditor would be wronged; for the one would pay and the other receive an equivalent that would purchase of the staple commodities of the field and the factory the same average that it would have purchased when the debt was contracted. In this way the medium least liable to change would be secured, and to both debtor and creditor there would be guaranteed a minimum probability of injustice in the settlement of their accounts.

I believe that some time in the future, when theory and knowledge and experience unite to produce the best currency possible, because the fairest and most permanent, that currency will be gold and silver, duly stamped and minted, so that the holder may know exactly how much he has and how fine it is, but that this gold and silver will not be legal tender, at fixed weights or prices; that it will be used for purposes of barter and exchange, for which it will be just as useful as if it was legal tender, in the same manner that it is now employed, and always has been employed between different nations; that the sole paper currency in the country, and the only legal tender, will be that issued by the Government, for whose immediate redemption at convenient points, in gold or silver, at their bullion value, as fixed by the markets of the world, and authoritatively declared from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury, the credit of the Government will be sacredly pledged. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. I now ask unanimous consent that the whole of to-morrow be assigned to the further consideration of this bill, and that the previous question be ordered at half past 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the entire day to-morrow after the reading of the Journal be set apart for the consideration of this bill, and that the previous question be considered as ordered at half past 5 o'clock instead of 3 o'clock.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he intends by that to give time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWNE]?

Mr. BLAND. I do; and to other gentlemen who desire to speak.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWNE] have part of the time?

Mr. BLAND. I pledge you I will do what I can to secure time for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I believe he will have an opportunity to address the House.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. What was the order heretofore made this morning by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. There was none, except that a recess be taken this evening until 7 o'clock. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCREARY was recognized and said: I yield thirty minutes of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and the remaining thirty minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. I have already addressed the House on the subject and do not desire to occupy more time myself.

Mr. SYMES. I move that the House take a recess until 7 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. As only five minutes remain before the time fixed for the recess, if there be no objection the House will now take a recess until 7 o'clock. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will preside during the evening session.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7 p. m.

FREE COINAGE OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The House is in session this evening for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5690) for the free coinage of silver, and other purposes. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is entled to the floor.

Mr. DANIEL addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

[Mr. DIBBLE took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.]

Mr. WHEELER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SKINNER. The bill under consideration invites discussion of three propositions:

1. Shall the United States coin silver as we do gold, free and without limit, allowing every fortunate possessor of a piece of silver weighing 412½ grains, 900 fine, to take it to the Mint and have it converted by the Government stamp into a standard silver dollar; or

2. Shall we stop the coinage of silver altogether and place the United States in the ranks of the gold monometallic nations; or

3. Shall we continue to coin silver under the existing law?

Our choice lies between bimetallism, gold monometallism, and what Cernuschi calls humpbacked monometallism. Few, if any, really prefer the humpbacked currency. The gold monometallist dislikes it because it is a monthly exemplification of the correctness of the greenback theory, expressed by the late William Allen, of Ohio, when he said that "gold was a damned barren ideality." Each month as the Secretary of the Treasury goes into the market and buys 79 cents' worth of silver bullion, puts the Government stamp upon it, calls it a standard dollar, and it is delivered to and received by the people and paid out by them, current money with the merchant, at 100 cents on the dollar, buying as much of everything as the gold dollar, the people see that fiat money is no longer an untried theory, but an accomplished fact.

At the present price of silver bullion there is contained in every standard dollar 79 cents of intrinsic value (so called) and 21 cents of value derived from the act of stamping, which I propose to call fiat value.

It requires but little stretch of the imagination to bring before your mind a state of affairs that would so cause silver to depreciate that the bullion in the standard silver dollar would represent 21 cents and the Government stamp 79 cents.

The Greenbacker dislikes it because he sees that fiat money is an accomplished fact, and, that being so, thinks that silver is too costly a material to use for the purpose of money. If the Government by putting its stamp upon 80 cents' worth of silver bullion can add 20 cents to its value, and make it fiat money to that extent, then the Government has the same right to stamp a cheaper material and make it fiat money to a larger extent. Why not, they say, use paper—the intrinsic value of which is next to nothing—and let the stamp of the Government constitute the whole value of the standard dollar? Why not make fiat money pure and simple? And no man who defends the coinage of silver under existing laws can answer to his own satisfaction or that of any one else.

But yet the law continues in force, and under its provisions this composite dollar, part intrinsic and part fiat, continues to be coined—the Greenbacker preferring it to gold monometallism and the gold-bug preferring it to absolute fiat money, or even the unlimited coinage of silver. And as long as that law remains in force just so long agitation of the currency question—the fruitful source of all our woes—will continue, and business of all kinds must suffer.

I think the law unconstitutional. Article I, section 8, of the Constitution confers upon Congress power "to borrow money on the credit of the United States; to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin." Does that section confer upon Congress the power to authorize the purchase of any material and direct that it shall be coined into money? I do not think, upon a fair construction of the Constitution, any such power is conferred.

I do not profess to be a constitutional lawyer, and shall not pursue that idea further, but leave it to be digested by those who are more deeply versed in constitutional law. Constitutional or unconstitutional, it is, to say the least of it, impolitic. It leads inevitably to fiat money, and its present output is a currency which has been, I think properly, characterized by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] as limited, limping currency, as "neither fish, flesh, nor red herring," sea nor good dry land. Where is the defect in the law and what is the remedy? These questions naturally propound themselves to every member in this body whose desire is to do his whole duty under the Constitution, and provide for the people a stable currency of sufficient volume to enable them to transact a healthy business.

In my opinion, the defect in the existing law is that it authorizes the purchase of bullion to be coined into money. Any law directing the purchase of a fixed quantity of gold or silver or copper or any other material to be coined into money, leaving all the remainder of that material to take chance on the market, to show the people the difference between the intrinsic value of their currency and its stamped or fiat value would be defective.

This defect can be remedied in two ways. One way is to repeal the law—to demonetize silver. This is gold monometallism. The other way is to place in our statutes a constitutional recognition of silver as money, in the shape of the bill proposed by the minority of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Make gold and silver both standards of value. This is bimetallism.

Now, it is our duty to determine which of these remedies we will adopt, and we ought to consider this question without regard to the effect our conclusion may have upon the accumulated wealth of that class who have been styled on this floor the gold-bugs of the East, or upon the anticipated riches of the silver kings of the West. The fact that our decision the one way or the other may double the riches of one set of rich men or another ought not to enter into our deliberations. What matters it if, by demonetizing silver or continuing its demonetization, we make valueless all the silver mines and make a Lazarus of every Crœsus who owns mining stock? If it is to the interest of the people it ought to be done fearlessly.

What matters it, if by remonetizing silver we end the dream of the Eastern capitalist that he had found a new way to heap up wealth without work—to make a gold dollar increase in value by lying idle—and break asunder the golden chain with which he imagines he has already bound all the industries of this great Republic. If the interests of the people demand it, we ought to yield to the demand.

To reach a proper determination of this question, our only inquiry, or at least our main inquiry, should be, how much currency do our people need to enable them to transact their legitimate business? Will the present accumulation of gold and the annual output of that metal furnish an adequate amount of currency for our use? Would the present accumulation of gold and silver, coined and uncoined, and the annual output of both metals furnish us more than we need? When you have answered these questions to your own satisfaction, you have solved the currency question. If the gold is sufficient, then it is our duty to demonetize silver. If both gold and silver will not be too much, then it is our duty to remonetize silver.

I dare say that there is no member of this body who would say that gold alone would furnish a sufficient volume of currency for the use of people. There are very few who would say that double the quantity of gold on hand and its annual output would be sufficient, or that four times that value would inflate the currency too much for healthy business. I will not vex your patience by citing statistics, with which you are all familiar, to show how little currency per capita we now have, and how much other nations suffer or are prosperous with. It is not likely, even if we remonetize silver, that we will have a redundancy—more than the people need. And even if the worst predictions of the gold men should be realized, and America become under the operations of the proposed law the dumping-ground for all the silver of the Old World, and our old women should melt all their teapots and silver spoons into standard silver dollars, I believe we could stand it and live and still be happy.

But this prediction will not come to pass. Silver has in all ages been used in the arts and manufactures, and will continue to be so used. Other nations use silver as their only currency, and all nations, even those who have ceased to coin it, still continue its use as currency, and will be compelled so to use it in the future. In my opinion, if we get enough coined to furnish us a sufficient volume of currency we will be lucky. Nearly everybody admits that we must at some time come to bimetallism, but they differ as to the terms, conditions, and time of that coming back. Some want a larger dollar, some a smaller; others say we must wait until we can induce England and Germany to unite with us in what they think is a herculean task, or until such a time as silver bullion shall appreciate in value to such extent as to assure us that we are really making a dollar worth intrinsically 100 cents.

Why, if you were to increase the weight of the standard dollar to-morrow and issue it under the present law, how many days would it be before you would be compelled to increase its weight again? You would have to increase its weight so often that you would find yourself in the condition of that State Legislature of one of the Confederate States, which is said to have been in session during the late unpleasantness and did nothing during the whole session but pass bills to increase their pay, in the vain attempt to keep pace with their declining currency; we would have time to do nothing but pass bills to increase the weight of the standard silver dollar. And, besides, what would become of the two hundred and twenty-two million already coined? No, we can not, must not, change the weight of our dollar. It has the same weight of silver—pure silver—in it to-day as did the first bright silver dollar that rolled from a United States Mint, announcing as it rolled that the American Republic was a nation, and as such had assumed to provide its people with a stable currency.

And must we now acknowledge that the young Republic acted hastily, too hastily, and thus dishonor the memories of the great men who made us a nation by going on bended knees to England and Germany and asking them to help us to keep afloat the dollar of our fathers.

In the face of their refusal to unite with us in this matter, inviting them first was a new departure. Have we ever been accustomed to invite their counsel and co-operation in establishing any public policy? Have we ever run in the ruts made by the nations of the Old World? On the contrary, has not this Yankee nation gotten the reputation of thinking for herself and acting on her own advice—weeding her own row and taking the lead? May we not be the fulfillment of the prophecy of the prophet Daniel, referred to by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY]—the stone cut out without hands out of the mountain side; the new nation, rising up in the wilderness of the New World, prospering under new theories of government, under the guidance of God; the architect of its own fortune (cut out without hands), that shall break in pieces the image of iron and brass and clay and silver and gold—the crumbling monarchies of the Old World, with old theories of government and moss-covered ideas of political economy. [Applause.]

Is there an American citizen here who has not an abiding faith in the God-guided destiny of this Western Republic, and who does not feel that inspiration impelled the pen that wrote:

> Westward the course of empire takes its way;
> The four first acts already past,
> A fifth shall close the drama with the day—
> Time's noblest offspring is the last!

Would it not be more in keeping with our nature to act in this matter and then invite the old nations of the Old World to follow? Do not wait to get the co-operation of those old fogies to build a bridge over the stream that flows between us and fertile fields, but ford it, and show by actual experiment that it is not as deep or dangerous as their antiquated theories have led them to believe; and that what we see on that side is no mirage, but abundant wheat fields, ripe for the sickle.

Roll back the tide of time ninety years and come with me into the presence of that great man in whose memory last year you erected a monument of everlasting marble, deeper, broader, higher than was ever erected to man before, but who has a more enduring monument in the hearts of the common people of his country. Go back to September, 1796. There he stands. He is about to give up the helm of State into other hands. He is giving advice, words of wisdom, that he wants the people who come after him in charge of this nation to follow. Listen to his words. Put your shoes from off your feet: the place whereon ye stand is holy ground. Listen to the words of Washington's Farewell Address:

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

This Farewell Address of Washington and the Constitution which our fathers made in his time ought to be the only political text-books that an American statesman ought to follow.

Even the Secretary of the Treasury admits that bimetallism is inevitable. Listen to what he says:

It is now become plain to all who take a comprehensive and practical view of public policy that the United States can do no better than return at the earliest possible date to a bimetallic unit of value.

I mean—

He says among other things—

open mints for free coinage of gold and silver at a fixed ratio to every citizen of the United States bringing either metal, and the right to have his coin received in every sale and payment as full legal tender.

Nothing less than this is bimetallism. Our five hundred and fifty millions of gold, our two hundred and twenty millions of coined silver make any policy save ultimate bimetallism for the United States practically and politically a utopian policy.

The strongest advocate for free silver can not express his ideas in more emphatic language. And yet it is said that it will not do now, when 412½ grains of silver, 900 fine, is only worth 79 cents, to remonetize silver upon the present basis, 16 for 1, and that it must not be remonetized upon that basis until 412½ grains of silver appreciates so as to be worth a dollar in gold. They say your silver must stand the fire test. If we melt a gold dollar, it is still worth a dollar. Melt one of your standard silver dollars and see how much you can sell it for. We admit that when you took away from silver its full use as money that it depreciated. Its intrinsic value is but little more than that of copper; but the same can be said of gold. Treat gold as you have treated silver and it will depreciate in the same way; it has little or no intrinsic value, maybe not so much as silver. Its chief value is, as is that of silver, its value as money, dependent upon its use as currency.

In thirteen years, says the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], silver has depreciated from 3 per cent. above gold to 21 below, and he argues from this that it is too unstable to be used as currency. There is an honest difference of opinion as to whether in these years silver has depreciated or gold appreciated. I reckon the real fact is that both have been traveling in opposite directions—silver going down and gold going up. In what proportion, what distance each has traveled upward or downward there is no way to tell. We have no fixed unvarying standard.

Naturally, if you take away from any article its chief use and go to using another, the one you stop using will depreciate and the one you double the use of will appreciate. Pass a law to-morrow that no more Indian corn shall be used to feed stock with, and the next day corn will fall in value and oats will rise. Just so when silver was demonetized, its chief use was taken away from it and it depreciated. All the burden of furnishing a currency devolved upon gold and it appreciated.

In 1873 before silver was demonetized it was worth 103. As soon as it was demonetized its chief use was gone and it began to decline in value. In 1878 it had depreciated to 90, and Congress attempted to stay its downward march by passing the Bland act. I have no doubt but that many of the advocates of that law thought at the time that the effect of the law would be to rally silver, and possibly it might have had that effect if the execution of the law had been in the hands of the friends of silver.

But the United States has been a bear in the silver market when we hoped for a bull.

Mr. BROWNE, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SKINNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Pennsylvania. If the law had been in the hands of the friends of silver, could we not have had four millions coined a month instead of two millions?

Mr. SKINNER. I think so. Instead of purchasing the maximum quantity of silver bullion allowed by the law the Secretary of the Treasury has invariably purchased the minimum, and instead of using an honest effort to put the silver coin into circulation he has failed to make any effort to that end, and decides that it will not circulate, and so heralds it to the world. Oh, no; it will not circulate. [Laughter.] Why will it not circulate? A Western paper which I saw some months ago explains why: "As soon as a standard dollar drops from the Mint—made circular that it may circulate easily—it is seized by a Treasury official and carried, under guard, to the Treasury and placed in a vault, which is then locked with a time-lock, and then the Secretary of the Treasury and all the gold-bugs gather about it in solemn conclave and declare that it will not circulate. 'Look at the damned thing; it won't circulate.'" It does not circulate because it can not get a chance. If they would turn it out of the Treasury in payment of some of the debt we owe it would soon find its way into the pockets of the people and do valiant service in relieving our suffering labor and in paying debts and taxes.

But, say these suspensionists, if you will stop the coinage of silver it will begin to look up and in time regain its lost value. That proposition is too foolish to argue. It is not an axiom—that is, as elf-evident truth—but it is an absurdity, a self-illuminating lie.

The only way to bring silver back to its original value is to recognize it as money in the only way that Congress can constitutionally recognize it; not by purchasing a part or even all of the silver bullion and coining it into standard silver dollars, but by allowing—not compelling—any person who owns 412½ grains of standard silver to take it to the Mint, have it coined free, and carry it home in his pocket.

Then the Government will not be troubled with putting it into circulation, but as it comes from the Mint it will be in circulation, and will never stop unless some foresighted man should garner it up in an old stocking and lay it away for a rainy day.

And the minute the law goes into operation silver bullion will go up to par, for a man who owns 412½ grains of standard silver would be a fool to sell it for less than 100 cents when he could take it to the United States Mint, have the Government dollar-mark put upon it, and buy with it 100 cents' worth of anything that his neighbor has to sell, pay his taxes and his debts, without losing a discount. You who doubt this, and who are fond of quoting Cernuschi, listen to the words of Cernuschi:

It is certain that if the Congress of the United States authorized the free coinage of silver all the dollars already coined by the Treasury would instantaneously become good money. Good money also would be the dollars which the public would then get coined. They could stand the ordeal of fire.

This being so, gold would be relieved of the extra burden of furnishing all the good currency, real money, and would at once join hands with its old-time friend and fellow-traveler, silver, and from that time on they would travel together and help one another over the rough places on the road. But, say these pessimists, what are you going to do with the Gresham law, the law of gravitation applied to finance? This law will halt you in your wild career. Do not begin to halloo until you get out of the woods. The bad money always drives out the good. Your millennium has not yet arrived. Some fine morning you will awake and find that all the gold has fled the country or has retired into the fastnesses of the bondholder's safe.

Now I do not admit that the remonetized silver dollar will be a bad dollar. But for the sake of argument we will say that the people will be unable to forget that yesterday 412½ grains of silver was only worth 79 cents, and that the new dollar starts out with a doubtful character. I think that the fact that the admittedly bad Bland dollar has failed to drive out the gold, and that now there is more gold in the United States Treasury and in private banks than there was when the Bland act went into operation, is a sufficient argument to show that we are in no danger from the law of Gresham. It does not work in the United States, and it never will work as long as we have the balance of trade.

But to my mind a better reason, in fact an overwhelming and conclusive reason that it does not work here, is that it never began to work as long as there is an insufficiency of currency. Put water and oil in the same vessel and the water will expel the oil, but it will not do so until the vessel is full enough to run over.

This qualification of the law of Gresham is laid down by Ricardo and by Walker. I quote from Political Economy, by Francis A. Walker, page 142, paragraph 163, Title Gresham's Law:

The observation of this process of picking or selecting coin has led to a statement of the economical theorem known as Gresham's law, namely, that bad money always drives out good money. Thus, boldly stated, as is most treatises it is, the theorem is false. That effect will not be produced unless the body of money thus composed of heavy and of light coins is itself in excess of the needs of the community.

And in a note at the foot of the same page I find the following:

Mr. Ricardo clearly expressed this necessary qualification of Gresham's theorem, but in doing so has been followed by few writers on money.

It is, he says, a mistaken theory to suppose that guineas of 5 pennyweight 8 grains can not circulate with guineas of 5 pennyweights, or less, as they might be in such limited quantities that both the one and the other might actually pass in currency for a value equal to 5 pennyweights 10 grains, and there would be no temptation to withdraw either from circulation.

So, until we get a redundancy of coin, we need not fear the operation of the law of Gresham, which, in view of our unprecedented yearly increase of population and the ever-increasing demand for currency to successfully carry on our varied industries, must be many, many days in the future. And, in the mean time, with the return to the honest money of our fathers will come renewed prosperity all over the Union. Our farmers will get better prices for their produce, our merchants and other laborers will get better wages and steadier work, and the labor strikes which have so long agitated business, and which but yesterday, as it were, clogged the wheels of the railroads in the West and South with such determination and show of force as to produce consternation in the heart of every conservative man in the country and create a panic in this House, will cease, and the Knights of Labor will only keep up their organizations for the purpose of talking over the hard times that oppressed them when silver was demonetized and to warn the generations to come to avoid the rock upon which this generation came so near wrecking the business of our people and the hope of mankind in the ultimate establishment of a republican form of government in all the earth.

Oh, wondrous the wealth, prodigious the powers;
Unbound the dominion—matchless the love,
And this the inheritance. Thus then is ours
Reached down as yon stars are reached down from above.
Then rise in your places—rise up—let us take
A great oath together, as we gather us here.
* * * *
For the love of Freedom—for Liberty's sake,
To hand the Republic on down undefiled
As we have received it, from father to child.

[Applause.]

Mr. McRAE Mr. Speaker, the battle between the standards is at present attracting the attention of the world as never before. While this Congress and the people of the United States are deeply interested and greatly concerned about the result, they are not alone. The nations of the Old World are not disinterested and unconcerned. As ours is the strongest and most independent of the nations of the world, the result of the agitation here is watched with much anxiety. While I have given the question much thought, I do not pretend to be able to throw any new light upon it, nor do I think extended remarks important at this stage of the discussion. Lest my silence should be misconstrued I will, however, venture to offer my own views, and in doing so I trust I shall not fail to maintain "a decent respect to the opinions" of those who may differ from me.

On this floor as Representatives and elsewhere as individual citizens of this free Republic we have equal rights, and we ought to feel free to express our convictions without having our motives questioned. I have but little respect for the individual who claims to be honest and sincere and yet questions the honesty of every person who dares to take issue with him. In an important matter like this, upon which hangs in a great measure the prosperity of the whole country, we want facts and truths and not denunciations, details and not generalities. I believe with Disraeli, that "upon a perfect knowledge and right appreciation of details the settlement of great questions mainly depends."

THE NECESSITY FOR, USE, AND KIND OF MONEY.

Nearly all of the wants of man are supplied by exchanging the surplus products of his own labor for such of the products of others as he may require for his own wants. Except for barter and exchange man could not exist. It is certainly impracticable and undesirable, even if it were possible, for man to live altogether to himself. To perfect the exchanges necessary for the convenience of man it became necessary to adopt a medium which has been called "money." Before the use of money exchanges were extremely inconvenient, and in many cases could not be made with any degree of nicety.

To illustrate: One man would produce more of one article than he could consume, while another would have less of that article but more of some other. If the one did not have what the other wanted no exchange could be made. Each had a surplus of his own product, and in order to get the benefit of his labor must dispose of it. To do this they must find not only a person possessed of what they are in need of, but one who is willing to exchange it for what they have. Farmer Jones raises more corn than he can consume, and Smith, a mechanic, would be glad to have it, but he has nothing except his labor. Jones does not want his labor at present, but wants a horse owned by his neighbor Brown, who himself would be glad to acquire more land for his stock farm; and so on indefinitely. They all have something to sell, and also want to purchase other things. So we see how inconvenient it is to trade and carry on commerce by barter and exchange.

We are told that in the early ages of society cattle were the common instrument of commerce, and things were valued according to the number of cattle for which they had been or could be exchanged. So we learn from Homer that the armor of Diomede cost nine oxen, while that of Glaucus cost a hundred. In Abyssinia salt was used as the instrument of exchange. As the people became civilized and enlightened they became more active in producing and manufacturing the necessaries and comforts of life, and in building means of communication and transportation for the distribution of such products. This necessitated more trading, and to carry it on it became important to adopt a measure of value, so that all could meet on the same level in the distribution of the products of their labor—both of mind and body. It was important that this measure or medium should itself be valuable, or represent value, so that persons having a surplus of one commodity might sell it for the medium, and with that procure the things desired by him without loss.

By common consent in all civilized countries the precious metals, gold and silver, have been adopted for this measure mainly for the reasons that they are indestructible and capable of being divided into any number of parts without loss. "Different metals," says Adam Smith, "have been used by different nations for this purpose. Iron was the common instrument of commerce among the ancient Spartans, copper among the ancient Romans, and gold and silver among all rich and commercial nations." It was a long time after the metals went into use as money before a system of coinage was adopted, and the use was attended with the inconvenience of weighing the metals. Every time a penny's worth of an article was purchased it became necessary to weigh the penny. And thus it is that we read in the Bible that "Abraham weighed to Ephron the four hundred shekels of silver which he had agreed to pay for the field of Machpelah."

The instincts as well as the experience of mankind insist that all money shall itself possess real intrinsic value or represent it. The history of the commerce of the world has settled the problem of what money shall be. The changes of time have confirmed mankind in the belief that gold and silver are the best basis for money. They are the surest standards of value, and yet this value is not unchangeable. It has been truly said that "their value is necessarily a matter of agreement;" and being so, is changeable and is affected by the circumstances surrounding each transaction.

OUR MONEY—BOTH GOLD AND SILVER.

The Constitution of the United States authorizes Congress to coin money, to regulate the value thereof, and to regulate the value of foreign coins, and at the same time provides that—

No State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

Coining is the act of stamping the weight and fineness upon and putting the metal in shape for use, and does not carry any guarantee on the part of the Government as to the value of the coin. It does, however, fix the weight and fineness of each, and establishes the paying relations between the two metals. The Government can no more create value than it can a cow. By prescribing other and different uses it may increase value, and it may also decrease value by restricting the use of money or the metals from which it is coined. The power of the Government should and does generally cease with the coinage. I hold that it has no power under our Constitution to demonetize coined money or to say that it shall not be a legal tender. The owner of the coin must rely upon his judgment, and take the risk as to what its purchasing power will be when he may desire to use it. He has the right to rely upon the certificate of the Government as to weight and fineness and to insist that it shall be receivable for debts and taxes.

Thomas Jefferson favored the two metals and originated the silver dollar as the unit of value. Mr. Morris, our first and one of our greatest financiers, was for silver alone. Alexander Hamilton, although in favor of national banks, recommended a double standard, expressing a preference for gold if a single standard should be adopted. The first act of Congress, after the adoption of the Constitution, upon this subject was passed April 2, 1792, and made silver the unit of value. I will ask the Clerk to read the sections of that act which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

I.—An act establishing a mint, and regulating the coins of the United States.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That there shall be from time to time struck and coined at the said Mint coins of gold, silver, and copper of the following denominations, values, and descriptions, namely: Eagles—each to be of the value of ten dollars or units, and to contain two hundred and forty-seven grains and four-eighths of a grain of pure, or two hundred and seventy grains of standard gold.

[Half-eagles and quarter-eagles of corresponding weights and fineness.]

DOLLARS OR UNITS.—Each to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar as the same is now current, and to contain three hundred and seventy-one grains and four-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure or 416 grains of standard silver.

[Half-dollars, quarter-dollars, dimes, and half-dimes of corresponding weights and fineness.]

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the proportional value of gold to silver in all coins which shall by law be current as money within the United States shall be as 15 to 1, according to quantity in weight, of pure gold or pure silver; that is to say, every fifteen pounds weight of pure silver shall be of equal value in all payments with one pound weight of pure gold, and so in proportion as to any greater or less quantities of the respective metals.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person or persons to bring to the said mint gold and silver bullion, in order to their being coined; and that the bullion so brought shall be there assayed and coined as speedily as may be after the receipt thereof, and that free of expense to the person or persons by whom the same shall have been brought. And as soon as the said bullion shall have been coined, the person or persons by whom the same shall have been delivered, shall, upon demand, receive in lieu thereof coins of the same species of bullion which shall have been so delivered, weight for weight, of the pure gold or pure silver therein contained; Provided nevertheless, That it shall be at the mutual option of the party or parties bringing such bullion, and of the director of the said Mint, to make an immediate exchange of coins for standard bullion, with a deduction of ½ per cent. from the weight of pure gold, or pure silver contained in the said bullion, as an indemnification to the Mint for the time which will necessarily be required for coining the said bullion, and for the advance which shall have been so made in coins.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That all gold and silver coins which shall have been struck at and issued from the said mint shall be a lawful tender in all payments whatsoever, those of full weight according to the respective values hereinbefore declared, and those of less than full weight at values proportional to their respective weights.

Approved April 2, 1792. (1 Statutes at Large, 246.)

Mr. McRAE. The act approved June 28, 1834, reduces the weight of the gold coins, and the act approved January 18, 1837, reduced the weight of the silver dollar to 412½ grains, and the small coins in the same proportion. Under the act of March 3, 1849, the coinage of the double eagle was authorized, and for the first time in the history of our Government a gold dollar was provided for, to be of the value of $1—a silver dollar—or unit. The act approved February 21, 1853, reduced the weight of the silver half-dollar from 206 to 192 grains, and the smaller coins in the same proportion, and also limited their legar-tender qualities to sums not exceeding $5.

So we find that until 1853 the silver dollar was the sole unit of value, but both metals were in circulation and their relative value adjusted by law. The reasons for these several acts may be found by an examination of the reports and debates upon and in reference to them. The Director of the Mint in 1833 says "that from 1792 to 1821 gold and silver remained at par with each other, and that the first notice of a premium on gold measured in silver in this country appeared late in 1821." The advance was about 5 per cent. From 1821 to 1832 it fluctuated from 2 to nearly 6 per cent. premium. The relative value of the two metals in the coins in use at that time was 1 to 15 by law, and the average bullion relative value for the same period was a fraction over 15½. In December of the next year the same director used this strong language:

Both gold and silver have during the existence of the Government been a general legal tender, while silver alone has been the standard of value familiar in our conception of price. Any modification of the gold coinage will be safe which shall leave this standard of value undisturbed, and none could be contemplated without concern which would impair it. The design entertained, therefore, in the change of ratio now proposed is that silver shall remain the basis of our currency and the controlling standard of value; that gold shall be, as at present, a legal tender for all amounts, but estimated in such a proportion to silver that the former will be exported by a slight preference when occasional circumstances shall induce the export of a portion of the national coins.

Acting upon this recommendation, the weight of the gold coins was reduced so as to adjust it to a silver basis, and not silver to gold, as is proposed by some of our friends now. In 1837, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Mint, the standard of fineness was adjusted to round numbers, and the number of grains changed so as to make it equal to 900 parts in 1,000 in each. Then it was that the silver dollar of 416 grains was reduced to 412½ grains, but there was no change in the value, for the reason that the addition to the fineness made good the loss of weight. Silver still remained the unit of value, and by the two acts of 1834 and 1837 the gold coins were reduced in weight and fineness, so that the relative value of 15 to 1, as fixed by the act of 1792, was changed to 16 to 1. Between the passage of the act of 1834 and that of 1837 silver was at a premium. France and Germany had a relative value of 15½ to 1, and ours being worth 3 per cent. more than this, it was profitable to ship it abroad. To remedy this, and not to adopt a gold standard, as has been recently charged, was the act of 1853 passed. The Director of the Mint pointed out the importance of such an act to Congress. Mr. Hunter, so far from recommending a gold standard, in a report as chairman of the Finance Committee pointed out the great necessity for both gold and silver.

I will ask the Clerk to read from his report.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the mischief would be great indeed if all the world were to adopt but one of the precious metals as the standard of value. To adopt gold alone would diminish the specie currency more than one-half; and the reduction the other way, should silver be taken as the only standard, would be large enough to prove highly disastrous to the human race. Indeed a reference to the history of the precious metals and the general course of human production can scarcely fail to convince us that there has been a constant tendency to appreciate their value as compared with the residue of the property of the world, and that every extraordinary increase of the supply of the precious metals, of which we have any account, has exercised a highly beneficial effect upon human affairs. When contracts are made by a standard which is gradually contracting, the advantages are on the side of capital as against labor and productive energy is cramped by receiving less than a fair share of the profit of its enterprise. Before the invention of substitutes for payments in coin and before the increased supply of specie from the discovery of America human history is full of the strifes between debtor and creditor and human legislation is rife with experiments to limit the encroaching and engrossing power of capital.

So much is the value of currency affected by the facility with which it may be counted and its convenience of transportation that there will always be difficulty in supplying the place of small notes with anything but silver, or that of large notes with anything but gold. We require, then, for this reason, the double standard of gold and silver; but above all do we require both to counteract the tendency of the specie standard to contract under the vast increase of the value of the property of the world. And what harm can arise from any probable increase of the precious metals, if both are allowed to swell the volume of currency? On the contrary, a more beneficial event for the trade, the industry, the moral and political condition of the world could scarcely be imagined. Of all the great effects produced upon human society by the discovery of America, there were probably none so marked as those brought about by the great influx of the precious metals from the New World to the Old. European industry had been declining under the decreasing stock of precious metals and an appreciating standard of value; human ingenuity grew dull under the paralyzing influences of declining profits, and capital absorbed nearlyall that should have been divided between it and labor. But an increase of the precious metals, in such quantities as to check this tendency, operated as a new motive power to the machinery of commerce. Production was stimulated by finding the advantages of a change in the standard upon its side.

Instead of being repressed by having to pay more than it had stipulated for the use of capital, it was stimulated by paying less. Capital, too, was benefited, for new demands were created for it by the new uses which a general movement in industrial pursuits had developed; so that if it lost a little by a change in the standard, it gained much more in the greater demand for its use, which added to its capacities for reproduction and to its real value. Property which had been acquired by the strong arm, and accumulated in violation of the great laws of equity and trade, by an almost insensible transition was distributed more equally in society. Nature, under the operation of this its great bankrupt law, as if by an invisible hand loosened the bonds of the debtor, which heretofore time had continually tightened, and distributed to labor for purposes of reproduction and upon equitable terms capital which distrust and apathy had either locked up or administered with a too sparing hand. New influences arose in society, and a new impulse was given to its movements. In the present stage of the world we may, perhaps, no more expect any event to produce such rapid transformations in society. But we might reasonably look for something like the same consequences from a similar event. Any system, either of violence or law, which distributes property improperly and unjustly and which gives a false direction to the great stream of productive industry, will in the end produce throes and convulsions in the bosom of society. Unless human skill, such as is rarely if ever known, intervenes to give a true direction to affairs, or unless nature interferes through the silent operation of her laws to remove inequalities and repair injustice, violence is almost sure to be used to make a change, if it can not apply a remedy.

Mr. McRAE. There was no other legislation upon the subject of coinage until the passage of the much discussed act of 1873. Those of us who are for silver are proud of the record made by the white metal; for all this time the silver dollar, selected and shaped for the people by Mr. Jefferson, the Father of Democracy, kept its place as the unit of value. For eighty years nothing could be said against it; it was loved and appreciated by the people as it is now. Its friends little dreamed that it would be secretly stricken down—as it was. With the exception of only three years during this whole period the silver dollar was worth more than gold.

In 1861, in the midst of all the excitement of that memorable year, our people proposing to go to war with each other, this same dollar commanded a premium over gold of nearly 4 per cent.

THE ACT OF FEBRUARY 12, 1873, CHANGED OUR POLICY.

So much has been said and written about the act of February 12, 1873, that I will ask that the fourteenth, fifteenth, and seventeenth sections be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States.

SEC. 14. That the gold coins of the United States shall be a one-dollar piece, which, at the standard weight of 25.8 grains, shall be the unit of value; a quarter-eagle, or two-and-a-half-dollar piece; a three-dollar piece; a half-eagle, or five-dollar piece; an eagle, or ten-dollar piece; and a double-eagle, or twenty-dollar piece. And the standard weight of the gold dollar shall be 25.8 grains; of the quarter-eagle, or two-and-a-half-dollar piece, 64½ grains; of the three-dollar piece, 77.4 grains; of the half-eagle, or five-dollar piece, 129 grains; of the eagle, or ten-dollar piece, 258 grains; of the double-eagle, or twenty-dollar piece, 516 grains; which coins shall be a legal tender in all payments at their nominal value when not below the standard weight and limit of tolerance provided in this act for the single piece, and, when reduced in weight below said standard and tolerance, shall be a legal tender at valuation in proportion to their actual weight; and any gold coin of the United States, if reduced in weight by natural abrasion not more than one-half of 1 per cent. below the standard weight prescribed by law, after a circulation of twenty years, as shown by its date of coinage, and at a ratable proportion for any period less than twenty years, shall be received at their nominal value by the United States Treasury and its offices.

SEC. 15. That the silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar, a half-dollar, or 50-cent piece, a quarter-dollar, or 25-cent piece, a dime, or 10-cent piece; and the weight of the trade-dollar shall be 420 grains troy; the weight of the half-dollar shall be 12 grams (grammes) and one half of a gram (gramme); the quarter-dollar and the dime shall be respectively one-half and one-fifth of the weight of said half-dollar; and said coins shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

SEC. 17. That no coins, either of gold, silver, or minor coinage, shall hereafter be issued from the Mint other than those of the denominations, standards, and weights herein set forth.

Mr. McRAE. This act changed the unit of value from silver to gold. Until the passage of this law debtors could pay their debts in either gold or silver. By it contracts were changed so as to allow the creditor the right to demand gold so far as Congress had the power to so change. The change affected all contracts that were in existence at that time. Without stopping to argue whether the act was passed by fraud or not, I do not hesitate to say that it was unjust to the debtor class of our country and to the Government as well. It was not dictated by any wise, judicious financial policy. It was confessedly the same policy that had been originated by England and followed by Germany, both creditor nations, whose financial policies are formulated by a class having fixed incomes, and who are interested in depreciating money.

It was indeed a fine stroke of financial policy and learned statesmanship for the United States, overwhelmingly in debt, its demand notes away below par, attempting to resume specie payment by deliberately striking down silver, which was the unit of value when the debts were contracted! The people wanted and needed the silver. Our country possessed the mines and the miners were anxious to work them.

As soon as the effect of this act was made known to the people they were quick to denounce it, and were persistent and earnest in their efforts to have silver restored by opening the mints to its coinage again. The creditor class of this country had by this act with its deceitful title, which had passed so quietly and with so little discussion, secured a great advantage of the business classes and laborers of our country. It looked like a herculean task to recover from the depression occasioned by this law or to secure any modification of it. The great political party then in power was committed to the policy foreshadowed by it and turned a deaf ear to the petitions of the people. The eyes of the public turned to the Democratic party—the party of the people—always willing to execute the will of the majority. The restoration of silver was made an issue before the country. There was no mistaking the stern, majestic voice of the people when they gave their verdict.

The Forty-fifth Congress found a majority of the members committed to a modification of this act. The result was the passage of the Bland act. The President declined to approve the act and returned it to the House with his objections, but on reconsideration both the House and Senate agreed to pass the bill over his veto. It received the necessary two-thirds majority and became a law on the 28th day of February, 1878.

The Clerk will please read the first and third sections of this act.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character.

Be it enacted, That there shall be coined, at the several mints of the United States, silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy of standard silver, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837, on which shall be the devices and superscriptions provided by said act, which coins, together with all silver dollars heretofore coined by the United States of like weight and fineness, shall be a legal tender, at their nominal value, for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract. And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase, from time to time, silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than two million dollars' worth per month, nor more than four million dollars' worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly as fast as so purchased into such dollars; and a sum sufficient to carry out the foregoing provision is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury, as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage: Provided, That the amount of money at any one time invested in such silver bullion, exclusive of such resulting coin, shall not exceed $5,000,000: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the payment in silver of certificates of deposit issued under the provisions of section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 3. That any holder of the coin authorized by this act may deposit the same with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in sums not less than $10, and receive therefor certificates of not less than $10 each, corresponding with the denominations of the United States notes. The coin deposited for or representing the certificates shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of the same on demand. Said certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and, when so received, may be reissued.

Mr. McRAE. With a fair construction of this act in view of the contemporaneous discussion it appears to me that there can be no doubt or question but that Congress intended by providing for the coinage of the silver dollar and declaring that it "shall be a legal tender" to restore the "unit of value" to silver and to place it upon equal footing with gold, except the limitation upon the coinage. In order that the point made by the present distinguished and able Secretary of the Treasury, and the extent to which the enemies of silver will go in order to sustain their policy, may be clearly seen and understood, I will ask the Clerk to read this extract from his response to the resolutions of this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

(2) The Revised Statutes and Statutes at Large direct the issue and prescribe the more or less limited uses of several kinds of currency. To but one do they assign the office of a standard. They named the unit of all these currencies and of our money of account with the name—dollar. To but one dollar do they assign the function of a unit of value.

The law of February 12, 1873, section 14 (Revised Statutes, 3511), reads as follows: "The gold coins of the United States shall be a one-dollar piece, which at the standard weight of 25.8 grains shall be the unit of value." * * *

Thus the gold dollar, circulating amid all other dollars, then existing or thereafter to be issued, whatever their substance, description, or kind "shall be the unit of value." The law is unrepealed and unmodified. No other statute of the United States now in force refers to that office, uses the phrase, or names the thing. The function of the gold dollar as the unit of value is therefore unqualified and unquestionable. Its office as a unit of value was once shared with fifteen times, afterward with sixteen times its weight of silver. Its employment in that behalf is now unshared and sole. Its value is the unit of value, its measure is made the only measure. To that measure every other dollar must conform, while other dollars exist and this law of Congress stands. The simplicity of the language makes definition itself difficult, but dispute impossible. It has made my duty clear.

In reply therefore to the summons of the House, mindful of that duty and my oath, I respectfully answer that while the law remains what it is I shall endeavor in the future as I have endeavored in the past to conform my official acts to the letter and spirit of its plain requirements, and to so exercise every discretionary power with which it is the pleasure of Congress that my office be vested over the contents, the outgoes, and the surplus of the Treasury, as to maintain every other dollar of their creation in such use and circulation as consists with the preservation of their practical commercial parity with the gold dollar, testing that equality exclusively by the sole "unit of value."

Mr. McRAE. There is a well-known rule of construction that in construing two statutes such force and effect should be given as will permit both to stand if possible. It is only by the aid of this rule of construction that the act of 1873 should be permitted to stand at all, and certainly no fair-minded judge would hold that the act of 1878 did not restore the silver dollar as a standard. If they are inconsistent, then the latter must prevail, and we have silver and not gold. I believe both statutes are in force, and that we have two coin dollars, gold and silver, equal under the law. The construction insisted upon by the Secretary is unfair and unworthy of his eminent ability and exalted position. The silver dollar can be used for any purpose that the gold dollar can. The latter would be a standard dollar if the words "the unit of value" were not in the act of 1873, and they are not necessary in order to impart this quality to the silver dollar.

SILVER BOYCOTTED.

The employés and servants of the people who have controlled the Treasury Department since the passage of the Bland act have been opposed to the policy of the law, and they, aided and abetted by the national banks (corporations supposed to be created by Congress for the convenience of the people), at once ordered, and from then until now have continuously sustained what, to use a modern and common expression, may be called a "boycott" upon silver.

Notwithstanding the power and influence of these officials and banks, with their advantages, they have utterly failed to affect the money value of silver. It will still buy as much and pay as many debts and as much tax as the gold dollar. All that has been accomplished is to increase the bullion value of gold above that of silver, and for this they ask a suspension of silver coinage. Assuming to be much exercised about the honor and credit of the United States, they tell us that no Government like ours can afford to pay its debts in anything except the dearest money and that we should give our creditors the money they want. They tell us that payment in silver is 25 per cent. of repudiation. Having made the boycott effectual, as they supposed, they point to the "unit of value" in the act of 1873, and cry out against silver by denouncing it as cheap money.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to such action, and here and now protest against its continuance. It is the duty of this Congress to put a stop to such discrimination against one of the coins of the Government. Let us without unnecessary delay compel a withdrawal of the "boycott," and restore silver to its proper place as a part of the basis of our monetary system, and thus restore the relation between the two metals by free coinage if possible, and if not then to the full extent allowed under the present law.

It is the monometallists—

Says the great French financier—

who are the authors of the depreciation, which, nevertheless, they point to as a proof of the unworthiness of the metal which they cry down. They resemble the people who, having tied up the legs of a horse, called out for him to be killed because he could not gallop. A sage who was passing by untied the ligatures and the steed flew off.

The attack upon silver is without the least provocation; but at the same time the great cry about the clipped and dishonest dollar and the general denunciation of silver have done much to depress trade and oppress the people, for the effect of it has been, in my opinion, to force gold, which when held in large quantities is always timid, to the centers of trade, leaving the great body of the people without any. It may be true, as the friends of gold tell us, that money is cheap and plentiful, but we know that the circulation does not reach the extremities of our country. We want a policy that will at the same time restore both confidence and a free circulation. In the language of the illustrious Calhoun, we say, "Restore them to their proper functions and they will return from their banishment; the mines will again be opened, and the gorgeous splendor of wealth will again reassume the more humble but useful form of coins."

I do not mean to charge that the action of the Treasury Department was the sole cause of the depression; but I do say that the treatment of silver has had much to do with our troubles. It restricted the coinage and circulation at a time when the interest of our people demanded the full coinage and free circulation of every dollar that our mines could produce. Let the merchants, farmers, mechanics, and laborers, who have had debts to pay and most severely felt the effects of the depression, answer whether I am correct or not.

I am amused at the inconsistency of our suspension friends. In one breath they tell us that the silver dollar is "dishonest," "short weight," "buzzard," cart-wheel, and wholly unfit for money, and in the next that they are the only real bimetallists and that suspension is the only way to secure it; that they would not discontinue its use and would not, if they could, demonetize it. I respectfully submit that if the charge be true that common honesty demands that we should not use it at all, and should get rid of it as soon as possible. I do not believe that it is either cheap or dishonest money.

It is unjust to say that those of us who favor silver desire to pay the national debt with cheap money. As far as I am concerned I believe that any money that is good enough for the people is good enough for the bondholder, but my main purpose is to restore the measure of value, which I believe to be both gold and silver, and thus enable us the sooner to make payment according to the terms of the contract. I would apply every dollar of the surplus revenue in paying the debt now due and pay that which is not due as soon as possible.

I protest against a national debt except in so far as we are compelled to carry it. Debts ought never to be made if possible to avoid them, and when made should be paid as soon as possible. Nations as individuals should live within their means. Credit is a good thing to have, but debt is dangerous.

SOUND CURRENCY.

The friends of silver have been charged with favoring "inflation" and "fiat-money." As for myself, and I think I can speak for the members of the Democratic party who favor this bill, I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I will go as far as any one for a sound and stable currency. As to what is or is not sound, I beg leave to say that, in my opinion, the two metals furnish a sounder and more stable basis than one of them can. It has been truthfully said that "stability is the desideratum in the standard." My reason, in short, for this opinion is that with the free coinage and circulation of the two metals the one would serve as a check and balance to the other; in other words, a "corner" upon one would avail nothing, and it will be extremely difficult to "corner" both.

Upon the question of a sound currency, Mr. Webster said: "The legal standard of value is gold and silver;" which, he said, "was the law of the land at home and the law of the world abroad; there could, in the present state of the world, be no other currency."

On another occasion he spoke as follows:

I am for a solid specie basis for our circulation, and for specie as a part of the circulation so far as it may be practicable and convenient. I am for giving no value to paper merely as paper. I abhor paper; that is to say, irredeemable paper, paper that may not be converted into gold or silver at the will of the holder.

Mr. Calhoun expressed himself in these words:

It is the duty of the Government to receive nothing in its dues that it has not the right to render uniform and stable in its value. We are, by the Constitution, made the guardian of the money of the country. For this the right of coining and regulating the value of coins was given; and we have no right whatever to receive or treat anything as money, or the equivalent of money, the value of which we have no right to regulate. * * * Nothing can be more delicate than the currency. Nothing can require to be more delicately handled. It ought never to be tampered with nor touched until it becomes absolutely necessary.

I will let the history of France and the statement of her greatest financier, Mr. Cernuschi, answer the charge that the double standard is less stable than a single standard:

It is admitted without contradiction that the greater the bulk of the monetary mass the less strong the variations in the buying power of specie, when the monetary matter has suddenly contracted or expended.

Suppose there were 10,000 tons of gold circulating in the whole world, and silver being everywhere demonetized; and suppose that an additional supply of 1,000 tons was rapidly produced; what would happen? Gold would lose a tenth of its purchasing power. The same quantity of bullion would buy nine-tenths only of what it would have bought before the appearance of the thousand fresh tons. But if the monetary mass be not only composed of the 10,000 tons of gold, but as well of the 150,000 tons of silver in actual circulation, it is doubled. Thanks to the universality of the bimetallic 15½ we are in exactly the same situation as if 20,000 tons of gold or 300,000 tons of silver were circulating. What takes place on the apparition of the fresh 1,000 tons or of a corresponding quantity of silver? The monetary mass is simply increased by a twentieth, and consequently the diminution in the purchasing power of money is a half less. When monetary production slackens this circulation in an inverse sense holds good.

Should it be objected that the bimetallic mass is exposed to the variations in the productions of both metals instead of to those of one, we would reply that greater regularity is probable in production of gold and silver, taken together, than in the production of a single metal.

Since England adopted the single gold standard in 1816 commercial and financial panics have been common The strongest evidence of this may be found in the fact that for the twenty-five years preceding 1873, when Germany and the United States suspended the coinage of silver, the rate of interest changed more than two hundred times, the lowest being 2½ per cent. and the highest 10 per cent. For more than one hundred years next before 1816, with bimetallism, there were less than twenty changes in the rate of interest, and it was never higher than 6 per cent. nor lower than 4. Mr. Alexander Baring, in his evidence before a committee in England, said that in London during the financial crisis of 1847 it was impossible to borrow a guinea of gold on 60,000 pounds of silver. Again we learn that in India, where silver is the standard, in Calcutta during the crisis of 1864 the owner of 20,000 pounds of gold was declared to be a bankrupt for the reason that he could not raise a single rupee on his gold.

In discussing this view of this question an able American writer said:

It must be said of silver that as the values of its coins are less than those of gold, and as these coins are possessed by the poorer classes and are far more widely dispersed among the people than of gold, and are less favorite coins with bankers as subjects of deposit in their vaults, therefore there is less danger of their being monopolized at any time under special ownership and control; and a corner of silver is almost impossible.

On the other hand, gold is beyond the reach of the poor and is handled to a very small extent by the middle classes. There is never a general dispersion of it among the community at large. It accumulates in banks and in the centers of capital and speculation. It is peculiarly susceptible of manipulation by operators on a large scale who control masses of capital. Experience has taught that it can be made the ready and facile instrument of financial powers and pressures. Possessing the highest excellence as money when conjoined with its staid and conservative consort, silver, it becomes erratic, disorderly, and profligate when single and celibate. Indispensable when but a part of the money of society, serving the interests both of poor and rich; yet, when divorced from silver and indorsed alone with the prerogative of money, gold often is made the instrument of fraud and oppression to three-fourths of the population of the countries in which it is the sole money.

If the mad fatuity which is seeking to constitute gold the only standard and measure of value for Europe and the United States succeed in this scheme, the most revolutionary results would ensue, the character of which must be left to each one's reflections to outline. The major portion of every community would refuse to submit to the intolerable burdens that would be imposed upon them; labor and property would everywhere antagonize money capital; a broader hatred than that against the Jews in Slavic or Teutonic Europe would seize the masses of populations, and social disorders more serious and irrepressible than ever before known would not only disturb the peace of Europe, but have their counterparts in our own country.

Mr. Speaker, as long as the love of liberty and the spirit of independence is abroad in our land the American people will not tamely submit to the burdens that will necessarily result from the adoption of the single gold standard. They will insist upon a measure of silver as long as its value is not less than the average value of the property of the country. They will demand that our metal be coined into money for their own use, regardless of whether it is or is not favored by England and Germany.

THE GRESHAM LAW CAN NOT DRIVE OUR SILVER OUT.

Sir Thomas Gresham, a London merchant of the time of Henry VIII, first called attention to what he alleged to be a fact, that "bad money always drives out good money, and that good money can never drive out bad." The friends of gold rest their whole case upon this law, and straightway assume as a fact that silver is "bad money," and under the operations of this law of finance will be driven out of our country, and with this premise argue with some force that in our effort to secure bimetallism we will be reduced to monometallism in its worst shape. Now silver is not bad money. I do not, as many of our friends do, admit the applicability of such a law as to the two precious metals, except to a very limited extent. It may, and I believe does, accomplish complete results when applied to irredeemable or other local legal-tender money not convertible on demand.

The truth is that gold and silver are now and since the dawn of civilization have been the money of the world. There has never been an overproduction, and yet the supply has generally been sufficient to meet the demands of trade and business. With both metals as the basis unhealthy inflation would be impossible; with free coinage the world over it would be impossible to contract to a dangerous degree. This same law was held up to frighten Congress in 1878, but in utter disregard of it the Bland act was passed, and our experience under it for the last eight years clearly proves the position I assume. During this time we have increased our gold in circulation about two hundred million, and England, the country that we were told would dump her silver on us, is being drained. To prove this I will refer to the following official table furnished by the Director of the Mint.

Imports and exports of coin and bullion into United States.

Fiscal years.	Imports of gold coin and bullion.	Exports of gold coin and bullion.	Imports of silver coin and bullion.	Exports of silver coin and bullion.
1878	$12,976,281	$9,204,455	$16,490,599	$24,535,670
1879	5,624,948	4,587,614	14,671,052	20,409,827
1880	80,758,396	3,639,025	12,275,914	13,503,894
1881	100,031,259	2,565,132	10,544,238	16,841,715
1882	34,377,054	32,587,880	8,095,336	16,829,599
1883	17,734,149	11,600,888	10,692,242	20,219,445
1884	22,831,317	41,081,957	14,594,945	26,051,426
1885	26,691,696	8,477,892	16,550,627	33,753,633
	301,025,100	113,744,843	103,914,953	172,145,209

There is nothing in this scare, for we see that we are not only not losing our gold but are increasing it. We are not having the silver of the Old World dumped on us, but, as is shown by this table, we have exported more silver than we have imported. Will our friends not cease to deal in prophecy and deal with this great problem as a practical, living question? There is no escaping the fact that there is not enough gold to do the work of money for the world. The stock of both metals, according to the best accessible information, is not exceeding $7,000,000,000, which is divided about equally between the two metals, and is held principally as follows:

Countries.	Gold coin and bullion.	Silver coin and bullion.	Total.
United States	$626,422,646	$269,665,758	$896,088,404
Great Britain and Ireland	583,500,000	95,000,000	678,500,000
India		1,037,000,000	1,037,000,000
France	848,000,000	595,000,000	1,443,000,000
Belgium	64,000,000	60,000,000	124,000,000
Switzerland	17,000,000	15,000,000	32,000,000
Italy	140,000,000	72,000,000	212,000,000
Greece	2,700,000	2,700,000	5,400,000
Spain	130,000,000	70,000,000	200,000,000
Portugal	30,000,000	10,000,000	40,000,000
Germany	325,000,000	211,000,000	536,000,000
Austria	45,000,000	75,000,000	120,000,000
Sweden	15,000,000	5,000,000	20,000,000
Denmark	14,000,000	5,000,000	19,000,000
Netherlands	28,000,000	57,000,000	85,000,000
Russia	124,000,000		124,000,000
Turkey	40,000,000	35,000,000	75,000,000
Roumania	163,000	11,000,000	11,163,000
Total	3,032,785,646	2,625,365,758	5,658,151,404

Mr. Speaker, it is a striking and significant fact that wherever the one is found so is the other. In their work as money, unless divorced by statute law, they are by an immemorial law of finance inseparable. There appears also to be some law of nature that holds them together. Sleeping deep down in the "rock-ribbed" hills and mountains of our Western Territories, where the eye of man has never penetrated, they keep each other company. These metals, created by an all-wise Providence for man to be used as money, have been adopted by the civilized world, and with the proper relation between them can defy the law of Lord Gresham, and this is peculiarly the case with such a strong and growing republic as the United States, where the power and capacity of the Government itself is almost strong enough to destroy the law.

This is the great producing country of the world, not only for the metals but for all that is necessary to feed and clothe mankind. We grow products to sell to other nations; and one of the principal uses of money is to circulate between nations as well as individuals, settling the balances in trade. We sell to and buy from gold countries and silver countries, and hence need both metals for this. As we sell more than we buy, we get the balance in money. Here lies our great security. In order to maintain this balance we should by proper and just laws provide plenty of honest money for our people, and thus stimulate the energy of our country. A contraction to the extent of either metal would, in my opinion, bring ruin and disaster to our people, already overburdened with an immense public debt, besides untold millions of private debts.

WE WANT AN AMERICAN POLICY.

Mr. Speaker, our Government, wrested from the Old World by revolution, now more than a hundred years old, and composed of thirty-eight States and the Territories, with a population of over sixty millions of people, 125,000 miles of railroad, besides our great natural highways, washed by two oceans, has certainly passed its adolescence, and should adopt a policy of its own and not longer listen to the dictation of our mother country. Let the United States, by the passage of this bill, declare to the monometallists of the Old World that we intend to have both metals circulate in the United States.

Our Government has made two efforts to bring about an international agreement. Let it now say to these countries who have refused to make this agreement that if they will not act with us we will undertake it without them. With this declaration on our part it will not be long before we will have such powers as France and Germany following us, and in the end we will secure what we now desire, but in no other way. We are in condition to boldly take this step because as a circulating medium among our people the silver is as good as gold; and we have no debts not payable in silver, and God knows we have enough of them to pay to require all the silver we can get. Although we have paid, principal and interest, on our national debt since the war over $2,000,000,000, it will take more of the labor and products of the country to pay the remainder than it would have taken when it was largest. The debtors have rights as well as the creditors. Let the pledge of faith and protection be extended to both.

Something must be done. Things can not remain as they now exist. The whole business of the country is standing still, and it behooves us, the representatives, to take a forward step—we dare not go backward and we ought not to be content to stand still. Confidence is being withdrawn from the Government and we have evidences of discontent all over the land. I appeal to the American Congress, and particularly the Democratic members of it, to respect the wishes of the people by passing this act and avert the desolation that otherwise awaits the debtors of our country. Before to-morrow's sun shall go down I trust the wires will flash the news to the world that this House has declared for the free coinage of silver. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUMM addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to occupy any of the time of the House in discussion upon this bill. I had intended to express my opinion by my vote; but the "National Bimetallic Association," an organization having its headquarters in this city, and having for its president Senator JONES, of Colorado, and for its vice-president ex-Senator Tabor, of the same State, both among the heaviest mine-owners of the world, and for its membership a number of associates engaged in mining and hailing almost exclusively from the States of Colorado and Nevada, having sent letters into almost every part of the district which I have the honor to represent, stating that their Representative was "in doubt" upon this subject, and imploring my constituents to sign and forward to me petitions addressed to myself, prepared and printed by that association, and sent out with such letters, I have deemed it a duty to myself and to the very intelligent constituency I represent to explain in a brief manner the reasons which shall influence my vote upon the pending bill, and to cast some light incidentally upon the purposes and objects of that association.

But three of these petitions have been returned, and but one of them bears any considerable number of names. Had the real character of this association and the entirely private interests—to use no harsher term—it was organized to promote been fully understood, I am satisfied that the responses to its requests would have been still less in number.

I believe in silver. I believe in gold. I believe that the all-wise Father when He placed the silver in our Western hills, and spangled with gold the Western slopes did so for a wise and beneficent purpose. He gave us freely this dowry, and we ought not to esteem lightly His gifts. Because I so believe I am compelled to vote against the pending bill. It comes here as the pretended friend but real assassin of silver. It is proclaimed by its friends to be a panacea for our troubles, but it can not fail if enacted into law to breed "confusion worse confounded."

This discussion has been a protracted one. Beginning almost at the commencement of the session with isolated attacks by gentlemen upon the other side of the House upon the financial policy of an administration their votes helped to elect, it has sputtered along at intervals, in season and out of season, until now the fire has opened along the whole line, and the strange spectacle is witnessed of that administration finding scarce an advocate or defender in the house of its alleged friends. This discussion has been broad and long. As to its depth let the impartial historian say. The cave of Machpelah has been explored, and the potters' field has been plowed over.

Pliny has been brought back to life, and Aristotle has narrowly escaped resurrection. One authority has not been referred to. It would be improper to remark that possibly it has not been cited because of the comparative unfamiliarity of the members of this House with the book in which it is to be found. The other day, in rummaging among the "records" and "Statutes at Large" in the hall library, I found a copy of the book in question. It is in an excellent state of preservation. I am sorry to say it bears no evidence of injury from use. On turning over its pages I find these words written thereon:

And all the drinking vessels of King Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver. It was not anything accounted of in the days of Solomon.

For the king's ships went to Tharshish with the servants of Hiram: every three years once came the ships of Tharshish bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

And King Solomon passed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

And all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that God had put in his heart.

And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness, and spices, horses and mules, a rate year by year.

And Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; whom he bestowed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

And he reigned over all the kings from the river even unto the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt.

And the king made silver in Jerusalem as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the low plains in abundance.

And they brought unto Solomon horses out of Egypt, and out of all lands.

Here we have in these few graphic words a picture of a land of wealth and plenty; a land where gold became so plentiful that it was used for the fabrication of common utensils; a land of which it was written:

Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and three score and six talents of gold,

Besides that which chapmen and merchants brought, and all the kings of Arabia and governors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon.

That land had wealth of gold and wealth of silver. Other nations paid tribute to it, and the country prospered.

Sir, silver and gold are not the mere representatives of wealth. They are wealth itself. The world, by common consent, has long spoken of them as the "precious" metals. Their use as money is based upon two facts—first, convenience of handling, avoiding the difficulties of barter; and second, intrinsic value equaling the value of the goods or labor given. Because I believe that gold and silver coins used thus in the buying of goods or of labor should maintain their intrinsic value, I am compelled to vote against this bill.

The bill provides for the free coinage of silver. Its exact terms are as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act all holders of silver bullion of the value of $50 or more, standard fineness, shall be entitled to have the same coined into standard silver dollars of 412½ grains Troy of standard silver to the dollar, upon like terms and conditions as gold is now coined for private holders; that the standard silver dollar heretofore coined and herein provided for shall be the unit of account and standard of value in like manner as now provided for the gold dollar, and shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except where otherwise stipulated.

M. Cernuschi, one of the clearest writers on metallic money, defines free coinage as follows:

Coinage is said to be free, if every person has a right of bringing to the mint any quantity of metal for coinage, and of getting it back cut into coins.

Under this bill the owner of silver bars or bullion can take them to the mint, pay the mint charges, and receive that silver back coined into alleged dollars. This is said to be, it is true, "upon like terms and conditions as gold is now coined for private holders;" but under the law as it now stands, the holder of gold bullion receives back his gold coined into dollars, each coin having in it a weight and fineness of gold equaling, at least, a dollar in market value. Under the proposed bill each silver dollar received back by the owner of the bullion is to contain "412½ grains, troy, of standard silver." What is the market value to-day of these 412½ grains?

Fine silver bars, that is to say, silver bars .999 fine, are worth in the market from $1.03½ to $1.03¾ per troy ounce of 480 grains. The United States standard silver dollar contains 10 per cent. alloy, and is therefore only .900 fine. Taking fine silver bars at their market value to-day it will be seen that a dollar containing one ounce or 480 grains of silver, .900 fine, can be coined at a cost to the Government of about 95 cents. In other words, if we put 480 grains of silver into the dollar instead of 412½ grains we yet put in less than one dollar in market value of silver.

Following this calculation out, we find that a silver dollar with only 412½ grains in it contains only about 79 cents market value of silver; or, stated in other words, a dollar of the weight and fineness proposed in this bill will cost the holder of the bullion only about 79 cents plus the mint charges. And, by this bill, the holder of these dollars, which cost him less than 80 cents each, can compel the public to receive them at par, except for debts expressly by contract excepted, for the bill makes them "a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except where otherwise ordered."

In other words, a holder of a silver bar worth $790, and for which he can receive but $790 in any market in the world, can, under this bill, take that bar to the mint, pay the mint charges, which are trifling in amount, and receive back one thousand so-called dollars, which he is enabled to palm off on his neighbor in payment for the labor or the goods of that neighbor. This will, beyond all question, demoralize silver and drive out gold, leaving us with only a debased coinage on our hands.

Because I believe in the use of both metals, I am opposed to this debauching of our silver coin. Let us have the silver, but let the silver dollar which the poor man receives for his labor or the farmer for his wheat be an honest dollar. So far, gold has not been driven out by the base coins heretofore issued, but we must remember that the proposed law is very different from the existing law. The "Bland act" we now have is not in fact the "Bland act" at all. That act was so amended in its passage through Congress that the coinage under it is limited, and is on Government account. The coinage has hitherto been neither "free" nor "unlimited," as is proposed by this new bill.

I oppose this proposed coinage because it is not honest. These figures show it. Almost from time immemorial clipping or debasing the current coin has been a felony, and now we here, under our oaths of office, are asked to legalize that felony.

I oppose this proposed coinage because it is not in the interest of the people. It is the interest of the people to have honest money for honest toil or product.

I oppose this proposed coinage because it is solely in the interest of the owners of silver mines. They alone produce these bars. They alone will receive this benefit of twenty-odd cents to each dollar. They will not neglect to have each bar coined into dollars under this act. It may then be asked, will not that fact enhance the value of the bars? Two answers are apparent. First, the silver market is a world market. Silver bars will not rise much in price in America beyond the price in other portions of the world; and second, bars coined into dollars will have no intrinsic value added. This coinage is not to be on Government account but on private account. It may be forced into circulation by making it a legal tender, but it can not be forced into a higher intrinsic value, any more than by legislation water can be made to run freely up hill.

We have heard much about "monopolies" lately. Sir, the silver mine monopoly is one of the greatest monopolies in this country. A few men have become rich from the "Comstocks" and "Bonanzas" of Colorado and Nevada, and now seek to add 20 per cent. to their wealth at the expense of the American people.

The proposed legislation is neither wise, patriotic, nor statesmanlike, and as a friend of both metals I must vote against this bill. While I so vote I also announce that no vote of mine will be cast which will tend to take either metal from use as money, when properly coined, of the proper weight and fineness.

Are we then without remedy? Not at all. Strike out of this bill the words "four hundred and twelve and a half" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four hundred and eighty," that would not be quite accurate, but with the fluctuations in value would be approximately so. But would dollars heavier than those we now have circulate? The law could be so amended as to allow certificates to be issued instead. These certificates, if issued in denominations of one and two dollars each, and larger, would be convenient and useful.

The certificates already issued have been freely accepted by the people. If these certificates, of convenient denominations, were backed by an equal value of silver in the Government vaults, the people would not hesitate to take them. They would answer to our old-fashioned idea of paper money as a promise, backed and made good by the specie in the vault. They would be convenient to carry. They would represent value. They would, especially the smaller denominations, be very convenient in making change and in paying small debts. I am confident the people would prefer them. Why, even the fiercest advocates of silver upon this floor, they who cry night and day for debased dollars for the people, are extremely careful, I notice, when they step up to the counter of the Sergeant-at-Arms and draw their pay, to demand that pay in paper and to refuse the actual coin.

By thus providing an honest coinage and providing a certificate based upon that coinage would we not provide a currency based on actual value, and utilize the wealth the Creator planted in our hills for our use?

Mr. BALLENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the silver question has attracted the general attention of the country for a considerable period, and has been elaborately and ably discussed before chambers of commerce, boards of trade, labor unions, in the public journals, and in this and the other House of Congress. It would be a matter of difficulty to present any additional facts upon the question, nor, in my judgment, is further data necessary to enable this House and our constituencies to form a correct apprehension and a just appreciation of the subject. However, discussion may still subserve a useful purpose if we will give to facts a different grouping and will consider silver in its relations to our present monetary system, and thus clearly define and determine its functions and exhibit and recognize the beneficent offices that it is qualified and designed to perform in the commercial transactions of the country.

A historical statement of our financial legislation and a brief enumeration of the elements that compose the monetary system of the United States will supply the basis of the reflections that I desire to submit to this honorable body on the question now under consideration.

COIN LEGISLATION.

Under the articles of confederation, and when the Spanish milled dollar was the most familiar coin in the country, Jefferson, with the concurrence of Washington, suggested in a memorial presented to the Congress in 1784 that a number of said coins should be melted and assayed for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of pure silver therein, and with the view of establishing a unit of value for the Confederation.

The assay showed the Spanish milled dollar to contain 371¼ grains of pure silver, and in 1785 the Congress carried into effect the suggestions of Jefferson and caused to be coined for the first time a dollar containing 371¼ grains of pure silver and an amount of alloy of copper to make the weight of the standard dollar 416 grains. The articles of confederation were adopted in November, 1771, and ratified by all the States March 1, 1781, and the present Constitution was agreed upon September 1787, and adopted March 1789. In 1792, during the first term of Washington, when Jefferson was Secretary of State and Hamilton Secretary of the Treasury, the first mint and coinage act under the Constitution was drafted by Hamilton and passed by the Congress of the United States.

Under the constitutional provisions authorizing Congress to coin money and regulate the value thereof and to establish weights and measures, this act elaborately directs what shall be done to create for the United States money by coinage of the precious metals of gold and silver. It fixes the character of the standard gold and silver coins deemed necessary for the monetary purposes and needs of the nation, and establishes the reciprocal relations of said coin. It provides for the coinage of a silver dollar to contain 371¼ grains of pure silver and, for purposes of hardening, 44½ grains of alloy of copper, making the standard dollar weigh 416 grains.

It provides for the convenience of trade a fractional coinage, to consist of half-dollars, quarter-dollars, one-tenth of dollars, and one-twentieth of dollars of the same purity with the dollar, and differing only in weight of coin. It at the same time provides for the coinage of gold eagles, or "ten dollars or units," half-eagles of five dollars, and quarter eagles of two and a half dollars. The eagle was to contain 247½ grains of pure gold and 22½ grains of alloy, composed of equal parts of copper and silver, making the standard eagle, in weight, 270 grains.

The half and quarter eagles were to possess the same proportionate amount of pure gold and alloy found in the coin of which they were fractions; the relation between the silver and gold coins was indicated by the ratio established of 15 to 1, gold being esteemed to be worth fifteen times more than silver. The silver dollar and its fractions and the gold coin were, alike and without discrimination and limitation, declared to be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

In 1834 the act of 1792 was amended so as to reduce the eagle, previously containing 274½ grains pure gold, to 232 grains, retaining the same quantity of alloy, but deducting 15½ grains of pure gold from the coin and thus reducing the weight of the standard eagle from 270 grains to 254½ grains. The standard gold dollar, upon this basis of fineness, was 27 grains, consisting of 24¾ grains of pure gold and 2¼ grains of alloy. By the amendment the standard dollar contained 23.22 of pure gold and 2.58 grains of alloy, reducing the weight of the dollar from 27 grains to 25.8 grains.

The same act established by law the value of pure gold, by providing that it should be bought at the rate of 94.8 cents per pennyweight, making the ounce troy of pure gold worth $20.71, and finally the ratio of the coins was changed from 15 to 1 to 16 to 1, the present ratio between silver and gold.

In 1837 the act of 1792 was further amended. Previously we had used the English formula of eleven-twelfths to represent the fineness of the coins—that is, the coin was to be eleven times fine or 11 fine and 1 alloy. But under the act we adopted the more felicitous French system of 900 fine and 100 alloy; an approach to this modification was made in the act of 1834, but was perfected in transition to the French system in the act of 1837. This act changed also the standard weight of the silver dollar from 416 grains to 412½ grains, the reduction being made by subtracting 3¾ grains of alloy, and in this way preserving the integrity and value of the coins.

In the beginning of our coinage there was no charge therefor, if the party was willing to receive the coin value of his gold and silver bullion, after the mint had wrought it into money, but if he insisted on having his pay in coin before the metal had been converted, in that event he was charged one-half of 1 per cent. Under the act of 1837 this conditioned charge became a fixed one, and all bullion holders who desired to avail themselves of the benefit of the mint were required to pay it, as a part of the expense fund of the coinage.

In 1849 provision was made for the coinage of the gold dollar and the double eagle, though the gold dollar was not struck off until some time in 1853.

In 1853 the fractional money, the half and quarter dollars and ten and five cent pieces were debased about 6 per cent. by taking from the bullion from which they were coined 22¾ grains of pure silver, that is, the bullion out of which they were made as compared with that of the standard silver dollar was less fine by 22¾ grains of pure silver. The effect of this legislation was to debase the coins and make it subsidiary, and was followed by a provision limiting its legal-tender function to the amount of $5.

In 1873 the trade-dollar of 420 grains of standard silver, for the purpose of meeting the demands of China and other East India trade, was authorized to be coined to the extent of fifty millions, and said coinage actually extended to nearly thirty-six millions. It failed to meet the purposes of its creation, and instead of its remaining in the foreign trade the greater part of it returned to the United States. It was lawful money, with greater bullion value than the standard dollar; by fair implication, at least, it possessed the legal-tender quality. Nevertheless, by the act of 1876 it was demonetized, lost its paying capacity, dropped out of the coins of the land and no provision was made for its redemption.

In 1873 the silver dollar was omitted from the list of standard coins authorized by law and the gold dollar made the unit of value.

In 1874 the legal-tender quality was taken from the standard silver dollar, except to the amount of $10.

In 1875 the coinage of gold was relieved of cost by the repeal of the act imposing a cost of one-fifth of 1 per cent. for the expense of minting the bullion.

In 1878 silver was remonetized and the silver certificates authorized.

In 1879, with the view of convenience, the legal-tender capacity of the subsidiary coins was extended to $10.

PAPER ISSUES.

While money, coined from the precious metals, is the measure of payment, it is also the measure of values, does not represent property but is property, and all the transactions of business that are healthily conducted must recognize this distinction between money proper and the paper issues that represent it. The values of the world are measured by money, but the business of handling those values—their exchange—is chiefly done through the paper representatives of money.

Comptroller Knox reports the financial operation of the national banks on June 30, 1880, at nearly $274,000,000, and yet less than 1 per cent. of this business was done by gold, silver, and minor coins. United States notes, national bank-notes, drafts, and bills of exchange moved 99 per cent. of this day's large financial transaction. While the gold and silver legal-tender coins regulate the values, their paper representatives directly were thus used for the great bulk of this transaction.

Prior to the mint and coinage act of 1792, Continental paper money, payable in Spanish dollars, performed the function of representative money to our fathers. Antedating the same act, or currently with it, the United States Bank issued notes representative of coin and performed this function in conjunction with the State banks from the beginning of its charter to the expiration thereof in 1811, and in a renewal of its charter in 1816 until the expiration thereof in 1836, aided by State banks, it continued to perform the same function—in supplying the paper representatives of money. After 1836, and until 1861, United States Treasury notes and certificates to some extent, but the State banking institutions principally, furnished the paper tokens by which the business transactions of the country were principally carried on.

The exigences of a great war radically changed the financial organizations of the country, and the same forces have produced the financial legislation that have largely given complexion and character to our present monetary system.

UNITED STATES NOTES OR GREENBACKS.

In February, 1862, an act was passed providing for the issue of $150,000,000 of United States notes, or "greenbacks."

On March 2, 1862, an act was passed placing $50,000,000 of demand notes, authorized under act of July, 1861, in the category of United States legal-tender notes. The act of July, 1862, provided for the further issue of $150,000,000 of greenbacks. Act of March 3, 1863, provided for a further issue, of similar notes, to the extent of $900,000,000.

NATIONAL NOTES.

The issue of United States notes had become so large as greatly to depreciate the value thereof. The volume was not in excess of the demands of business, but some method was imperatively demanded, by which the integrity of the country and its volume might be currently maintained. Under the circumstances it was determined to retire the legal-tender or greenback issues, to the extent of $400,000,000, through the utterance of United States bonds to that extent—an interest-bearing evidence of debt—and then, upon the basis of these bonds, to organize a banking system which would be competent to replace and maintain, in the form of national-bank notes, the $400,000,000 of greenbacks that had been withdrawn from circulation. Accordingly, the act of February, 1863, was passed, establishing what is known as our national banks.

The act elaborately provides for the organization and chartering of national banks and the issuance to them by the Government of national notes based upon United States bonds to the extent of 90 per cent. of the face value of the bonds deposited with the Government. The notes possessed the legal-tender quality of the United States note or greenback, and a limitation as to the volume of circulation was imposed and a restriction as to location was added with the view of securing such a distribution of these institutions as would secure the interest of every section of the country. These are the main provisions of the act. Subsequent legislation has removed both the limitations referred to, and now circulation is limited only by the amount of bonds that the banks may choose to deposit, and the place of location is left to the discretion of the capitalist who may desire to invest in banking enterprises.

COIN CERTIFICATES.

The act of 1863 authorized the issuance of certificates on the deposit of gold bars or gold coin.

The act of 1874 authorized gold certificates to issue on gold bullion at the rate of its value in coin and not less than its market value. Later legislation repealed the bullion basis of gold certificates and restricts them to coin deposits. The act of 1878, third section, authorized the issuance of silver certificates on a deposit of silver dollars. These certificates, of each class, are redeemable in the coin deposited, pay all dues, customs and taxes, and, though not formally, are nevertheless practically legal tender—requiring a fixed amount of deposit in order to secure an issue of certificates, which in no case can be of less denomination than $10.

EPITOMIZED SUMMARY.

Gold coin, in double-eagles, eagles, half-eagles, quarter-eagles, and dollars, full legal tender for all debts, with free coinage.

Silver coin, in standard dollars of full legal tender for all debts, but limited in coinage to a minimum of $2,000,000 or a maximum of $4,000,000 monthly.

United States notes or greenbacks, full legal tender for all debts, except customs dues and interest on the public debt, and limited in issue, to $400,000,000.

National or bank notes, full legal tender for all debts except customs dues and interest on the public debt. These notes are issued by the Government to the banks, based on United States bonds deposited in the Treasury, and the volume is unrestricted, except by the amount of bonds deposited.

Silver and gold certificates, based on deposit of coin and in denomination of not less than $10, with no maximum limit, legal tender for all public dues, redeemable in coin, and practically legal tender for all debts.

Subsidiary coin, in half and quarter dollars, ten and five cent pieces, nickels, two and one cents, token or representative money, is legal tender for $10, and redeemable in lawful money.

Before closing this historical sketch of our financial legislation, I desire to call attention to what I conceive to be some misapprehension relative to our units of value. It is generally asserted and believed that we have had at the same time in our monetary system currently only one unit of value; that the standard silver dollar was our unit of value from 1792 until 1873; that the gold dollar, under the act of 1873, became our unit of value and is so to the present time, and that the simple remonetization of the silver dollar did not restore to it the unit quality which it possessed prior to its demonetization.

I except, sir, to the correctness of either of these views, and allege that we have always had two units of value, except in the interval covered by the time that elapsed between the demonetization and the remonetization of silver. Alexander Hamilton, the author of our mint and coinage act of 1792, preceded the draught of the bill with suggestions, embodied in an elaborate report, in which he said:

> It seems to me most advisable not to attach the unit exclusively to either one of the metals, because this can not be done effectually without destroying the office and character of one of them as money and reducing it to the situation of mere merchandise.

The ratio between the metals was established, the standard of bullion in each case, the pure metal and the alloy in each coin were also determined, and the denominations of the coins were designated.

Expressly, and prior to the provisions for coining silver, the gold eagle was defined as "ten dollars or units," and then the silver dollar, described as "one dollar or unit," and these designations were stamped on the edge of each coin. The merit of each coin depended upon itself, and after the relation between the metals had been established the money value of the coin depended upon its composition. The "ten units" represented the gold dollar just as certainly as the silver "unit" represented the hundred cents of which it was the multiple. The law was constructed to carry out Hamilton's report of 1791, and created the double units, for the reasons he had suggested in said report.

If this construction is correct, the law giving gold the quality of the "unit of value" was useless, because it already possessed that quality in common with silver; nor is the status of gold, under the recent act that seeks to make it the exclusive unit, improved, because the act of 1878 has restored the legal-tender quality to the silver dollar, subject to the provisions of the act of 1837, and gives the silver dollar all the qualities that it possessed under that act, among which was its capacity as one of the units of value. This quality of the silver dollar was never taken from it by direct provisions of law, but was lost as the incident to its demonetization. If it had first been deprived by legislation of its unit quality, and then demonetized, both qualities would have to be restored by statute.

The legislation by which silver was restored to its integrity as one of our moneys, while not formally repealing the act that made gold the "unit of value," so far annuls it as a subsequent act as to place the two dollars on the same basis of equality that they had held until 1873.

If these views are correct and accepted as the basis of legislation and administration, a great deal of confusion in administration would be avoided, and the artificial depreciation of one metal by giving to the other exclusive prerogatives, to which it is not legally entitled, will be overcome and corrected.

For the purpose of information and illustration, I submit the following statistical tables:

No. 1.—The coins of the world in their relation to population.

	Population.
Gold standard	93,000,000
Silver standard	700,000,000
Double standard	197,000,000

The estimated population of the world is 1,400,000,000. Of this number 500,000,000 use the base metals of iron, copper, tin, or brass for commercial purposes, or else resort to direct exchange of products. The remaining population, 900,000,000, including the highly civilized communities of the world, recognize the precious metals as the material of their coins.

No. 2.—Amount of gold and silver in circulation.

Estimate.	Aggregate.	Gold.	Silver.
First estimate	$6,049,000,000	$3,294,000,000	$2,755,000,000
Second estimate	7,000,000,000	3,780,000,000	3,220,000,000

The first estimate of volumes of coin now in circulation throughout the world is by Superintendent Burchard, and the latter by an eminent European statistician. Both authorities agree in the relative distributions, as 54 per cent. of gold and 46 per cent. of silver.

No. 3.—Currency of chief commercial nations.

Countries.	Gold.	Silver.	Notes.	Total.
United States	$626,420,000	$269,665,000	$943,000,000	$1,839,085,000
Great Britain and Ireland	580,500,000	95,000,000	199,160,000	874,660,000
France	848,000,000	595,000,000	574,675,000	2,018,675,000
Germany	325,000,000	211,000,000	286,251,000	822,251,000
Belgium	64,000,000	60,000,000	89,000,000	213,000,000
Holland	28,000,000	57,000,000	81,675,000	166,675,000
Denmark	14,000,000	5,000,000	23,370,000	42,320,000
Spain	130,000,000	70,000,000	4,737,000	204,737,000
Switzerland	17,000,000	15,000,000	24,960,000	56,960,000
Austria-Hungary	45,000,000	76,000,000	286,871,000	407,871,000

On the authority of our foreign ministers we are informed by the Director of the Mint that the currency above indicated, gold, silver, and notes, is taken at par in all business transactions except in the case of Austria-Hungary, where the notes are received at par with silver, but gold is used in trade "only on special agreement."

No. 4.—Gold and silver coin and bullion in United States in 1878 and 1885.

	1878.		1885.
	Gold.	Silver.	Gold.	Silver.
Coin	$218,000,000	$65,000,000	$563,000,000	$264,000,000
Bullion	10,671,164	3,374,982	63,422,646	5,561,841
Total	228,671,164	68,376,982	626,422,646	269,661,841

No. 5.—The price of a given quantity of sixteen principal agricultural products in the years 1870 and 1885.

	Price.
1878	$10 83.4
1885	7 71.3

These articles represent 80 per cent. of the agricultural products, and the data show that they have depreciated nearly one-third since 1870.

No. 6.—Gold and silver imports and exports from 1878 to 1885, inclusive.

Metals.	Imports.	Exports.
Gold coin and bullion	$301,025,100	$113,744,843
Silver coin and bullion	103,914,953	172,145,209
Excess of gold imports over exports		$187,280,357
Excess of silver exports over imports		68,230,256

No. 7.—Population and currency in four principal nations.

	United States.	France.	Belgium.	Holland.
Population	60,000,000	37,672,000	5,585,000	4,172,000
Currency	$1,839,085,000	$2,018,675,000	$213,000,000	$166,675,000
Amount per capita	36.5	53.6	38.1	37.9

This historical sketch of our financial legislation, the summary of the elements that enter into our monetary system, and the statistical tables submitted in connection therewith, though not exhaustive of the facts, are sufficient to make an intelligent discussion of the subject practicable.

My views, Mr. Chairman, on this question are radical. I believe it would be wise and beneficent to remove all restrictions from the coinage of silver, and to permit this metal to stand on its own merits, and to fight its way, unhandicapped, and on equally favorable conditions with gold.

The united production of silver and gold, the approximately uniform relation in volume that they sustain to each other, and the increasing demands that the wealth of the world is steadily making upon each, for artistic purposes, combine to evince the wisdom and the necessity of yoking them together fairly as money metals in the ratio that we have adopted of 16 to 1, and the premises considered, the same economic law that prevents excessive coinage of gold will prevent excess in silver coinage.

Further, I believe it would be wise to restore the purity and the legal-tender qualities to our subsidiary silver coins that they possessed prior to the debasing act of 1853, because this restoration would put the lighter silver coins into circulation, and to that extent would supply, if necessary, a restriction upon the excessive coinage of the silver dollar, and serve as a sort of balance-wheel in preserving the equilibrium between the silver dollar and its more precious brother, the gold coin.

If I may not expect to compass the purposes that I have expressed, relative to silver coinage, I shall most earnestly insist that the present silver legislation shall stand and that the law shall be administered in good faith and according to its letter and spirit, and that any additional legislation necessary to these ends shall be secured.

Why, sir, should silver coinage be suspended? Why the minimum, rather than the maximum, amount of silver dollars be coined? The opposition summarize all their arguments when they point to the present depreciation of silver bullion as compared with gold. When they affirm that silver dollars will not circulate, will drive gold out of the country, and thus produce a hurtful contraction of the currency, and at the same time deprive the business of the country of the money essential for settling foreign exchanges and handling international trade, will invite to us, as a dumping-ground, the surplus silver of Europe, and unsettle values in our own midst, to the great damage of labor and capital, the rich and the poor, they but elaborate the summarized argument that I have stated. The principal argument is specious but has little substantive value, and the particular considerations deduced from it, in the light of history and philosophy, can not be maintained.

Admitting the commercial depreciation of silver, as compared with gold, to the extent of 20 per cent., if it shall appear that the depreciation is referable to artificial causes and not the result of an economic law, or that it is temporary and will be short lived, or that depreciation is coupled with such compensative industrial and commercial conditions as to render it innocuous and harmless, the force and strength of the objections are gone. Let us, for a moment, discuss this principal propsition of the friends of suspension. For more than twenty centuries gold and silver have been the money metals of the advanced nations of the world.

Why were they selected for coinage? Why make them money rather than any other metals? A clear conception of the nature of money will go far toward the solution of this silver question. There are other metals more precious than gold and silver; there are other metals intrinsically more useful than gold and silver; but there are no metals of the right volume to make them precious and of the right qualities to make them coins except gold and silver. Money is property, and not the representative of property, and it has the capacity to pay debts incurred, and to purchase commodities desired, because it is property and has the qualities that enable it to measure obligations for the purpose of payment, and measure values for the purpose of purchase. Any coin that does not possess the qualities that will enable it to perform the functions indicated may be money, but it is bad money, and incapable of performing the offices for which money was created by intelligent and enlightened men.

I repeat the question, sir. Why were these metals selected for more than twenty-four centuries as the material for money? They have intrinsic utilities of a double sort to entitle them to the preference that they have received as money metals. First, they have the utilities that belong in common to baser metals; they can be converted into articles of convenience, like copper, iron, tin; into articles of artistic beauty superior in attraction to the products of any other metal. Second, they are susceptible of minute subdivisions, plastic, and easily coined, free from waste by the action of air, water, and chemical forces; they do not oxidize, and are like the treasures that sinners are exhorted to lay up in heaven, "where moth and rust do not corrupt." These latter qualities, which are intrinsic, are indispensable elements in any money metal. Third, they are produced in limited measures and in ratios as to volume of great uniformity. Sometimes gold is abnormally increased and becomes depreciated. Sometimes silver is more than ordinarily abundant in production and is temporarily depreciated, but these relative changes in volume of production are not of frequent recurrence and are of such a character as need rarely disturb the monetary system of a country.

As illustrative of this general idea, go back to the close of the fifteenth century. In 1492 America was discovered, and the Spanish-American silver and gold mines gave their product to the world, and depreciated the value of gold and silver one-fourth, but very slightly affected the relative value of the two metals. At that time the ratio was 10 and 11 of silver to 1 of gold. In 1650 it gradually went up to 15 and 16 to 1, and remained there for two centuries and a quarter, until disturbed by the silver legislation of 1873.

The qualities that I have indicated in the primary and secondary elements that constitute the intrinsic excellence of silver and gold, added to the relative excellence of its rarity, its uniformity in aggregate volume of metal and the stability of the ratio between the metals, combine to fix the property value of gold and silver, and have induced the selection of these metals for purposes of coinage. The official stamp that makes them coin also increases their value by giving them a new utility, which demands for them a new and additional market. Yet the metals and the coins are subject to the economic law of supply and demand, and both, as metals and coins, are, to some extent, a variable value.

When the supply exceeds the demand they depreciate, and when the demand exceeds the supply they appreciate. But these variations are rarely such as to demand any tinkering with the integrity of the coins, and for economic purposes, at least, they can always be corrected by changing the ratio between the metals in extreme cases, and will ordinarily, without governmental interference, find a corrective in the less or greater demands of the arts on silver and gold.

I have attempted to give the true philosophy of money and the considerations that determine the use of silver and gold as money. In addition to their intrinsic qualities that give them property value and at the same time adapt them for coinage, I have shown that the volume of their products is approximately fixed and the ratio of their production uniform for extended periods. If they should be produced in extraordinary volume at exceptional periods, as on the discovery of America, it might be necessary, to preserve their money integrity, to improve the standard bullion by an increase in fineness. If they should vary in ratio or relative production it might be necessary to change the ratio between the metals as now established at 16 to 1 to a higher ratio.

I have suggested that the variations in either of these cases are of rare occurrence, and that, as the rule, the economic law of supply and demand and the increased demand for each of the precious metals for purposes of art will regulate the variations so as not to disturb the relations of the coins to each other, and thus preserve the integrity of each. The fact that I desire to impress upon the House is that we should rely upon natural and not upon artificial causes for the regulation of this question. Is there such depreciation of the metal silver as to destroy its value as a coin—as to demand either demonetization, restriction, or suspension of coinage? I affirm that the present depreciation of the commercial value of silver is not of such measure as to require suspension or restriction in coinage, especially on the score that the present silver dollar is a debased coin.

The relative bullion value of the dollar and fractional coinage of 1792 was uniform with standard gold until 1821, when England demonetized her silver coin. From 1821 to 1834 gold commercially, as compared with silver, commanded a premium from 3 to 8 per cent. In the latter year we reduced the amount of pure gold in our gold coins, and from that date the silver dollar, as a metal, was worth from 3 to 6 per cent. more than the gold in the gold dollar. It was not found necessary during this time, embracing the gold discoveries of California and Australia, beginning in 1848 and culminating in 1853 and 1856, by which gold was commercially depreciated; and the subsequent silver discoveries in Russia, Nevada, and Colorado, by which the commercial value of silver was depreciated, to make any radical changes in either the ratio, the fineness, or the weight of our silver and gold coins.

The complaint among the people was, in all these years, not as to the quality, but the quantity of our coins; they were good enough, but not abundant enough to meet the popular demands for circulation. In view of these facts, there is nothing in the present commercial depreciation of silver to justify either restriction or suspension. This conclusion is sustained by other facts. By reference to statistics it will be perceived that, as compared with the ratio of Russia, which is 15.3 to 1; of France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Spain, and Switzerland, which is 15½ to 1; of Austria, which is 15$\frac{9}{10}$ to 1; of Great Britain and Ireland, Holland and Portugal, which is 15.6 to 1, our ratio of 16 to 1 makes our silver dollar more valuable than that of any of the countries to which we have adverted.

In all the countries referred to, even including Great Britain with her India possessions, the proportion of silver to gold is greater than with us, the commercial value of the metal the same as with us; and yet no monetary disturbances have occurred; no charges that the silver coins of these countries are debased and dishonest, and no suggestions are proposed that look to eliminating silver from their monetary systems.

But take another view of the subject, and admit that the commercial depreciation of silver is of magnitude enough to demand administrative if not legislative action to restrain the increasing volumes of silver coins, there is connected with the commercial depression of the metal an industrial and commercial condition that breaks the force of the argument of the anti-silver advocates. By reference to table No. 5, giving the relative prices of important and prime commodities in 1870 when silver was at a premium, and 1885 when it was at a discount, commercially, it will be observed that these commodities are to-day worth less by 30 and 40 per cent. than they were in 1870. They have depreciated more, commercially, than the metal whose coin purchases them.

Whether this condition of things be an evil or not, it proves, at least, the integrity of the silver coin; and it is always safe to use either of the metals as coin when they, under the economic law of supply and demand, do not commercially depreciate more than the great products which they are intended to purchase and exchange. I submit that if gold as a metal was handicapped as silver has been by unfriendly legislation and administration, its depreciation would have been as great, if not greater, than silver; that the present enhanced value of gold is not intrinsic, but circumstantial; and it smacks of impertinence to take this fortuitous, fictitious, and forced enhancement of gold as metal as a basis of comparison with silver with the view of placing further disabilities upon the silver dollar, the money of the masses.

Further, I allege the commercial disparity between the metal value of the coins is not natural but artificial, and that it can be removed by modifying or neutralizing the artificial forces that produced it. There is nothing, sir, in the intrinsic qualities of the precious metals, nor in the relative volume of production, that would make a pound of gold worth more than 16 pounds of silver. Let us note the artificial appliances by which metal gold has come to be worth more in the market than metal silver by 20 per cent.

The enhancement has not originated from any natural or economic law, but has been produced by legislation relative to gold coins, which reflexively enhances the gold bullion. Gold is the only commodity whose value is fixed by statute.

Under the act of 1834 the value of the gold pennyweight was fixed at 94.8 cents, making the troy ounce of pure gold worth 20.71. Since that time gold bullion has been purchased at this rate. The cost of coinage of gold, once one-half of 1 per cent., has been removed. On the other hand, the price of silver has been unfixed by statute and determined by purchase in the market, and unrelieved of the cost of coinage. The coin has competed for commercial supremacy with the gold metal thus favored and the silver metal thus handicapped. The effect has been the commercial depreciation of silver.

Again, in 1873 silver dollars were left out of the list of coins authorized to be produced, and in 1874 the legal-tender quality of silver dollars was destroyed, except to the extent of $10. This was calculated to depreciate silver commercially. A further depreciation resulted from the demonetization of silver by Germany in 1873. Silver, remonetized in 1878, is still restricted in its coinage monthly to a minimum of $2,000,000 and a maximum of $4,000,000. It can readily be perceived that the effect of this legislation is the commercial depreciation of silver. Though silver is one of the coins that constitute the consideration for the public debt, bonds and interest, and legal-tenders, or greenbacks, yet, for some reason not apparent to the ordinary mind, silver is neither used for payment of the bonded debt, the interest thereon, nor for the reserve in the Treasury for legal-tender notes.

Thus administrative as well as legislative action, by enhancing the gold coin as against the silver full legal-tender dollar, have contributed to the commercial depreciation of silver. Added to these depressing forces has been the action of the combined national banks, bondholders, and other speculative syndicates of capital to demonetize silver in favor of a single gold standard, and, failing in that, of restricted silver coinage and currently a suspension of even this minimum coinage of silver. It is easy to perceive how such a combination of banks, syndicates, and bondholders can regulate the public sentiment—the volume of circulation, legislation, and consequently the commercial value of silver. To the causes thus enumerated the depreciation of silver bullion is referable. They are artificial, and to enhance the value of silver there is no need for a modification of our monetary system, but it is only necessary that these artificial disturbing forces should be neutralized.

Let us consider in detail some of the causes of silver depreciation. Waiving the effect of unfriendly legislation, it is pertinent to note how the action of administration and the combination of speculative capital have combined to affect the commercial value of one of our money metals, and ultimately to disturb the equilibrium of our monetary system. The Chief Executive before entering upon his dignified office, in a letter proclaimed himself in favor of the suspension of silver coinage.

In a Cabinet meeting held on September 15, 1885, the administration programme was further discussed relative to silver coinage. In his annual message to Congress of December, 1885, the same views were announced, followed by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, Comptroller of the Currency, and of other financial officers to the same effect. It was suggested that the continued coinage of the silver dollar, even under the limitations as to volume of the act of 1878, would result in driving gold out of the country and a disastrous contraction of the currency; in inability to pay the public debt and the interest thereon in gold, and great industrial disasters were predicted as the consequences of this line of action.

I am prepared to concede integrity to administrative officers, but I can not perceive either the wisdom or the legality of the action that they recommend or the position that they have assumed.

Silver was a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, when the greenback and bonded obligations were incurred, and so much is conceded by the act of 1870. Coin of full legal tender, silver and gold, was the consideration of our debts and not a specific coin. The Congress in a joint resolution of January 25, 1878, clearly and impressively declared their construction of all financial legislation on this question up to date.

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress, approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States, issued, or authorized to be issued, under said acts of Congress, hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that, to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Yet the President and his subordinates in the Department of the Treasury undertake, in contravention of law, by executive action, to change the condition and terms of the contract between the United States and its creditors, and insist that a coin contract shall be paid in a specific coin alone. They proceed on this basis to pay gold only, instead of gold and silver, for the bonds that are retired and the interest on them. I, for one, will not consent, without protest, to an exercise of administrative discretion in the interpretation and execution of the laws that practically subverts them. The President and his Cabinet are simply American citizens, and are entitled to no special privileges. As officials, they are public servants, not masters of the people, and have no right either to make or to subvert legislation.

While speaking with due respect of the Chief Magistrate and his advisers, I am constrained to say that his premature precipitation of the silver issue upon the country is not only hurtful to the party that elected him, but dangerous in the extreme to the best interests of the people, without respect to party. In my judgment, sir, there is no wisdom in the programme that he and his advisers have enunciated upon the silver question. It is apparent that this forced and unnatural construction and partial, one-sided administration of the law affecting the status and functions of the silver dollar will depreciate the commercial value of silver.

The national banks, the creatures and agents of the Government, under the law, find their highest offices in the protection of the integrity of the currency and in furthering the convenience of the Government which created them and the communities which patronize them. The discretion conferred in their charters to increase or reduce their circulation is of vital importance to our monetary system, because it supplies the elastic qualities needed to prevent both a deficiency and a redundancy.

A redundant currency breeds extravagant speculation and unhealthy growth; a deficient circulation unsettles values, against property and labor, suspends activity, and produces commercial distress. To avoid these evils, it was found necessary to add to the fixed volumes of coin and legal tender that entered into our system an elastic element admirably supplied by the national banks, when administered in good faith and according to the letter and spirit of their charters.

The unwritten law underlying the national-bank legislation was that they were custodians of moneys and securities, and their first obligation was to preserve the integrity of each. In the nature of things, they were expected to be impartial as to all the money and securities of the country, taking each on its merits, as established by law, as fully as the judge should hear the case pending before him, and as free from speculation in the values of which they were the custodians as the husband would be in the virtue of his own wife.

Further, in the exercise of the discretion of increasing or decreasing their circulation they were expected to study the commercial wants of the community and to increase and reduce the volume of their issues, not whimsically, arbitrarily, nor speculatively, but frankly, as the needs of business demanded. They were placed by the unwritten law, not in the attitude of the sun that gives heat nor the frost that brings cold, but as a thermometer that measures the temperature. Their expansion or contraction of the volume of circulation was intended to correspond to and indicate the changes in trade and to meet the exigencies of these changes; but it was never designed, and especially in their own interest, to produce such changes.

Now, as a matter of historical fact, while conceding the importance of the national-bank element in our monetary system, I am reluctantly constrained to declare that they have ignored their honorable prerogatives and perverted their dignified functions. They have become speculators in moneys and securities instead of the honorable custodians and trustees thereof; they have selected United States bonds and the gold coin, and have built them up adventitiously, as against all other moneys and securities, and they are to-day at the head of the speculative combinations that propose to destroy the greenback, emasculate the coin certificate, and debauch the silver dollar in the interest of the bonds that they control and the gold that they have hoarded.

Not content, as a financial thermometer, to note the commercial temperature of the country with the view that they may supply or withdraw currency as it may be needed, they have assumed the prerogatives of sun and frost-king—making temperature and utilizing their own creation by an arbitrary expansion and contraction of the currency in their own speculative interest. These institutions have been the most powerful factors in the commercial depreciation of silver because of the systematic war they have waged against the silver dollar.

Mr. Speaker, artificial depreciation of one of the money metals may be so great as to impair the current values and uses of the coin, but the force of such artificial influences in its nature is ephemeral, temporary, and the remedy for the ills that flow therefrom is not the abandonment or even material modification of the monetary system attacked, but in the withdrawal or neutralization of the unfriendly forces that have produced the metal depreciation under discussion.

To show the effect of unfriendly administrative agitation on the silver question, and to satisfy questioners that I have not overrated this influence, I quote from English journals current comments on the announcement that the President and Cabinet had concluded to recommend the suspension of the silver coinage. The announcement was made on the 16th September, 1885, and the price of silver per ounce was 50 pence, and on the 17th the price fell to 47¼ pence. The London Economist commenting on the fall of silver, said:

In the main, it is only the old cause—apprehension as to the future of silver—which has been in operation for years, but which has recently been revived and intensified by the agitation in the United States against the continuous coinage of silver.

The London and China Telegraph of the 26th of September said:

At a Cabinet council, held in Washington on the 15th instant, it was resolved to recommend Congress to stop coining silver under the Bland bill, and the semi-panic on Thursday, September 17, was a not unnatural consequence.

The London Banker's Magazine for the beginning of October says:

The agitation of the repeal of the Bland act is a main cause of the depreciation. The amount of silver coinage in the States is 5,000,000 pounds sterling annually; and were Congress to sanction an abrogation of the law that enforces the absorption of that amount by the Treasury, a complete glut would doubtless be seen on the market.

The Manchester Guardian of October 16 said:

The recent heavy fall in the silver market and the Eastern exchanges has been caused mainly by an apprehension of the repeal of the American silver-coinage act of 1878.

By a general reference to the brief tabulated statements it will be found that 700,000,000 of population have adopted the silver standard of money; that 197,000,000 have adopted silver as one of its full legal-tender coins, and 93,000,000 have adopted gold as their standard. Silver is dignified and honored in that it is the accepted measure of the majority of the values of the world, and is used, as a standard, by more than three-fourths of the civilized populations of the earth. The amount of gold and silver by the statistics stands related as 54 to 46 per cent., and the ten great commercial nations accept these coins, as also their national paper representatives, at par with each other in all business transactions.

It further appears that the gold and silver in the United States in 1878, when remonetization of silver was accomplished, stood related to each other as 3 to 1—the gold being $228,000,000 and the silver $68,000,000, and that seven years after the law had been in operation gold had increased to about $626,000,000 and silver to about $269,000,000, sustaining the ratio to each other of 2½ to 1. The silver had not expelled the gold, nor unnaturally and unhealthily changed its relations to it.

Further, the gold and silver imports and exports from 1878 to 1885, inclusive, establish as a fact that the result of present legislation has been the introduction of more gold by imports than was expected, to the extent of $187,000,000, and the exports in excess of imports of silver to the extent of $68,000,000. These statistics are additional evidences that silver coin has neither demoralized the monetary system nor debased any of the currency of the United States. It appears currently that the average prices of sixteen principal agricultural products were in 1870 one-third higher than in 1885; exhibiting a depreciation in this class of commodities greater than in the commercial value of silver, and thus showing that silver coinage at the present rate might be safely permitted to continue.

Finally, the currency considered in its relations to population, in the prosperous states of France, Belgium, and Holland, teaches us a lesson of the highest economic importance. The statistics show that these nations have an abundant and ample volume of circulation, their distribution per capita of their currency being, in the order named, $53.6, $38.1, $39.9, while the United States possesses only $36.5.

Facts as well as philosophy indicate the wisdom and necessity not only of an adequate monetary system, but of an ample volume of currency for both the convenience of commerce and the protection of all the property rights of the citizens. When supply and demand are healthily and normally related the money of a country not only supplies the basis and measures of business obligations, but of the wealth of the people; and a reduction in the volume, when selfishly and improperly made, to the extent it proceeds, cuts down and reduces the value of property and labor together.

The administrators of law and the speculative combinations acting with them, who propose to eliminate practically the silver dollar, the coin certificate, and the United States note from the currency of the country, with the manifest purpose to enhance the purchasing power of gold coins and national-bank notes, invade the rights of property and labor and impair the obligations of the contracts of the debtor class as substantially as would said obligations be impaired against the creditor class by a change of the consideration of the national bond from coin to the greenback, and they destroy property of the debtor classes, by this method of legislation and administrative contraction, as surely though indirectly as if they applied the torch to their houses. The people will not submit to any further trifling or aggression in this direction.

ADDITIONAL LEGISLATION NEEDED.

I do not, Mr. Speaker, deem the improvement of our monetary system requires the elimination therefrom of a single important element. Retain gold and silver in their integrity, use the subsidiary coin for the purposes to which it is admirably adapted, and retain the certificates, the United States notes, and the national notes as representatives of money and with their legal-tender capacity. But I believe that supplemental legislation is desirable in order to compact the system and increase its efficiency. Destroy the distinction between the gold and silver certificates and issue coin certificates in lieu thereof; make them full legal tender for all debts, public and private; provide that they shall be paid in gold or silver, at the option of the Government; direct their issuance in denominations of one, two, five, and ten dollars, and fix the maximum denomination for the great bulk of the certificates at the limit of $500, and finally make the certificates a permanent constituent in our system.

Abolish the greenback or United States note of the denomination of one, two, and five dollars, and maintain its present volume by the issuance of notes of a larger denomination to replace the smaller notes mentioned, abridge the power of the national bank to issue notes of a smaller denomination than $10, and forbid the issue of certificates as at present practiced, on deposit of United States notes. I would make these changes so as to keep the coin certificate and the greenback as a shield for the people against arbitrary contraction by the national banks, and I would keep the coin certificate as a permanent part of the system, in view of the approachiug redemption of the bonded securities which now underlie the bank issues, and whose redemption will, ultimately, change the basis upon which banking will proceed.

Finally, I believe it is possible to organize, upon the basis of bullion and coin, a system of credits for international uses, and with or without international co-operation, that will render the shipment and transshipment, in settling the balances of trade of the precious metals, coin or bullion, unnecessary except on rare occasions. We may do this under an act of Congress and without a convention with any foreign power, or it may be desirable to follow legislation by conventional agreements with the nations with whom we chiefly trade.

I have discussed this subject, Mr. Speaker, on the supposition that this great nation was entitled to its own financial system and did not need international agreements to prescribe the integrity of its money or its currency. Yet, I believe in the near future, if we preserve our money system in its vigor against the insidious attacks of the national banks, bondholding and other moneyed syndicates, we shall witness a substantial agreement among all commercial nations relative to the coins and currency that shall handle the commercial values of the world.

Commerce, involving an intermingling and intercommunication of people and the exchange of their respective commodities, is the creator and minister of civilization. Steam and electricity supply the transit for the world's products, and bring producer and consumer face to face. Thereafter the three great agencies, the facilities that expedite trade, are universal language for purposes of communication, an uniform system of weights and measures as a basis for business agreements, and an accepted and common currency as a medium for payment and exchanges.

Recently a new commercial language of twelve hundred words, not one-fourth of the original and ingrafted words of the English language, has been devised and put successfully and very extensively into practice. It has its grammar, reader, and dictionary, which have been translated into every European tongue and is being taught to-day in more than a hundred European institutions.

The metric system of weights and measures has been legalized even by us; is extending throughout Europe, and bids fair to become international. Why may we not approach the money problem with the reasonable hope that the community interest of the world will be substantially unified in its money standards as it promises to be in its weights and measures, and a common method of communication? Those concurrent agreements would be helpful to commerce though not essential, but this happy issue of events can never be realized, even distantly, unless we preserve the integrity of our financial system.

Mr. McADOO, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of bimetallism and opposed to unlimited coinage of silver at this time as likely to produce monometallism. Demonetization of silver means gold alone. Unlimited silver, when all the world is grabbing for gold, means silver and nothing but silver for the United States. What a cloud of talk hovers over the silver question! Are you a "gold-bug" or a "silver king?" shout the extremists, as if of necessity one must be either.

The scheming gold-bugs can take care of themselves, and the powerful, autocratic, mine-owning silver kings, who have the country now under their feet, and are playing to swindle the poor and helpless, have advocates enough. Let somebody speak for the people. Sound reason, universal experience and consent, and the Constitution of the United States make gold and silver metals the medium of exchange or money of this country. These metals have the highest intrinsic value. Beyond this value the state gives them additional purchasing power by its patent. Commerce and international intercourse make it necessary that all or many nations shall unite to give value as money to these metals beyond their intrinsic value. If all the other nations of the earth unite to demonetize silver, the demand being less, it will depreciate. The world needs both metals. The grinding Shylocks prefer monometallism, but the people want a good volume for their wants, and will tax both metals for a supply.

To bring about bimetallism, free coinage of gold and silver, we must force international action on behalf of silver. The gold nations of Europe want us to become the great silver dumping-ground. To begin the unlimited coinage of silver now is to aid the almost universal conspiracy against that metal, and postpone, if not entirely wreck, the cause of bimetallism. Gentlemen who want free trade in everything and unlimited protection for the silver mines should consider this phase of the question. Free-trade England, aptly dubbed by a great Englishman as the Pecksniff of nations, is cheering on the silverites so that she may have sufficient of the scarcer metal, gold.

If all the world were for silver and she alone for gold her supply would be sufficient. So she thought in 1816 when she hunted silver out of the island and drew the gold of everybody else to her own market. In a question of the pocket who so cunning as Mr. Bull? The rest of Europe used the two metals. There was no unseemly grabbing for gold. In 1873 Germany, seeing England's advantage and the apparent helplessness of her continental neighbors, struck silver almost to the heart. She started the rush for gold. Bismarck reached over and began to take a share of gold from Mr. Bull. The game was up now. Gold was on the run, and the nations of the Latin Union joined the little dogs and the big dogs in the chase. France saw the silver stream flooding in and the yellow river running out, and reluctantly entered the pursuit. England, like an octopus, pushes her feelers and her suckers into every quarter of the world for gold. Europe is no longer good hunting-ground, and so she is looking across the Atlantic. India, which she has robbed of all available assets as well as her liberty, she compels to be her silver market. India has no choice. What sarcasm to quote her for silver in these piles of wonderful statistics! Says Mr. Tidman, an eminent English writer:

It may be taken, on the highest authority, that the scramble for gold has begun.

And further says this able English bimetallist:

Is there any way out of the wood?

The voices that cried "Peace, peace," are dying out of hearing, and almost any finance article taken at random from the daily press evidences the uneasiness felt at the prospect of the "scramble for gold."

Gold monometallism (summarizing in that term the views of the Paris conference in 1867) has been slowly vanishing from sight, and, like Alice's cat, "behind the looking-glass," has left nothing of itself but the grin. The advocates of the single gold standard, alarmed at the "scramble" in which they may be overturned, admit the gravity of the situation, and have their own way of meeting it. They assign the yellow metal to one group of countries and the white to another, arguing that by this means the needful outlet for silver will be found, the precious metals will be fairly divided, and a relative ratio between them maintained. This solution of the difficulty, they tell us, is simply and easily applied—gold for the rich nations, silver for the poor relations. Over the doors of the smaller countries of Europe, and, presumably, over America, a notice is to be affixed—"Silver may be shot here."

Let the value of this proposal be tested by suggesting to the private bankers of England, that they should store the silver in the country, and leave the gold to the joint-stock institutions. Is it credible that nations, any more than individual merchants or bankers, will arrange themselves in clusters marked rich and poor, to meet the wishes of the gold-standard advocates? Can it be conceived that any single country will step forward and say, "I will be the charity boy; dress me in your white small clothes?" Mr. Goschen had Italy in his eye, and so had Mr. Giffen, when they were arranging their distribution of silver, but Italy has demanded the uniform of the big boys. Holland was present in their minds, without doubt, as one of the rubbish heaps where silver might be thrown; but Holland is already bracing herself to face the loss which must follow the demonetization of silver that will be forced upon her. The United States have declared against the white metal, so long as it is tabooed by Europe, and, by way of emphasizing their determination, have been for some time past drawing from her an amount of gold equal to the entire annual production..

Where is the silver to be taken? How shall it be got rid of? Surely the British Empire should insist upon an answer, for she holds half the stock of silver in the world. The smaller nations of Europe having declined it, is it likely that France or Austria or Russia will be satisfied to hold it?

"Happy thought," send it to India; and there are to be found persons who imagine that by drenching one part of the empire with a metal discarded as money by the entire West, you will benefit the natives.

As to the effect of silver demonetization in Europe in its relative value to gold and as showing its sudden and striking depreciation, I offer the following table:

Table showing fifty years' prices of silver, measured by gold.

[From tables prepared at the Mint of the United States.]

	Price of pure silver per ounce in London.*			Average price of pure silver, per ounce, in gold.	Value of standard silver dollar, 412½ grains, in gold.	Relative value of gold to silver.
	Lowest.	Highest.	Average.
1834	59	60¼	59 11/32	131.3	101.62	1 : 15.73
1835	59¼	60	59 13/16	130.8	101.20	1 : 15.80
1836	59	60⅜	60	131.5	101.72	1 : 15.72
1837	59	60⅜	59 9/16	130.5	100.98	1 : 15.83
1838	59½	60⅛	59⅝	130.4	100.88	1 : 15.85
1839	60	60⅜	60⅜	132.3	102.36	1 : 15.62
1840	60⅜	60⅜	60⅜	132.3	102.36	1 : 15.62
1841	59⅜	60	60 1/16	131.6	101.83	1 : 15.70
1842	59	60	59 15/16	130.3	100.77	1 : 15.87
1843	59	59⅜	59 5/16	129.7	100.34	1 : 15.93
1844	59⅛	59⅜	59⅜	130.4	100.88	1 : 15.85
1845	58⅞	59⅛	59⅛	129.8	100.46	1 : 15.92
1846	59	60	59 13/16	130.0	100.56	1 : 15.90
1847	58⅞	60⅜	59 15/16	130.8	101.20	1 : 15.80
1848	58½	60	59⅜	130.4	100.88	1 : 15.85
1849	59	60	59⅜	130.9	101.30	1 : 15.78
1850	59½	61⅛	60 1/16	131.6	101.83	1 : 15.70
1851	60	61⅛	61	133.1	103.42	1 : 15.46
1852	59⅞	60⅞	60⅛	132.6	102.57	1 : 15.59
1853	60⅜	62	61⅛	134.1	104.26	1 : 15.33
1854	61⅛	61⅞	61⅛	134.8	104.26	1 : 15.33
1855	61	61⅜	61 3/16	134.4	103.95	1 : 15.38
1856	60½	62⅛	61 1/16	134.4	103.95	1 : 15.38
1857	61	62⅛	61⅛	135.3	104.69	1 : 15.27
1858	60⅜	61⅞	61 5/16	134.4	103.95	1 : 15.38
1859	61⅛	62⅛	62 1/16	136.0	105.22	1 : 15.19
1860	61⅛	62⅛	61 15/16	135.2	104.58	1 : 15.29
1861	60⅛	61⅛	60 15/16	133.3	103.10	1 : 15.26
1862	61	62⅛	61 1/16	134.6	104.16	1 : 15.35
1863	61	61⅛	61⅛	134.5	104.06	1 : 15.37
1864	60⅜	62⅛	61⅛	134.5	104.06	1 : 15.37
1865	60⅛	61⅛	61 1/16	133.8	103.52	1 : 15.44
1866	60⅜	62⅛	61⅛	133.9	103.63	1 : 15.43
1867	60⅜	61½	60 5/16	132.8	102.67	1 : 15.57
1868	60⅛	61½	60⅜	132.6	102.57	1 : 15.59
1869	60	61	60 1/16	132.5	102.47	1 : 15.60
1870	60⅛	61⅛	60 1/16	132.8	102.67	1 : 15.57
1871	60 5/16	61	60⅛	132.6	102.57	1 : 15.57
1872	59½	61⅛	60 1/16	132.2	102.25	1 : 15.65
1873	57 7/16	59 5/16	59½	129.8	100.46	1 : 15.92
1874	57½	59⅜	58 15/16	127.8	98.86	1 : 16.17
1875	55⅛	55⅞	56⅜	124.6	96.43	1 : 16.62
1876	46⅛	58⅛	52⅛	115.6	89.22	1 : 17.77
1877	53⅛	58⅛	54 3/16	120.1	92.88	1 : 17.22
1878	49⅛	55⅛	52 5/16	115.2	89.10	1 : 17.92
1879	48⅞	53⅜	51⅛	112.3	86.85	1 : 18.39
1880	51⅜	52⅞	52⅛	114.5	88.55	1 : 18.06
1881	50⅝	52⅞	51 11/16	113.8	88.01	1 : 18.24
1882	50	52⅜	51⅜	113.6	87.86	1 : 18.27
1883	50	51 3/16	50 9/16	111.8	86.47	1 : 18.64
1884	49⅛	51⅛	50⅛	111.3	86.08	1 : 18.58
1885	46⅞	50	48¼	108.0	83.53	1 : 18.91

*In pence.

Relative value of silver to gold, by periods, 1493–1885.*

Period.	Years.	No. of years.	Ratio.
108 years (1 : 11.5)	1493–1520	28	11.3 : 1
	1521–1544	24	11.2 : 1
	1545–1560	16	11.3 : 1
	1561–1580	20	11.7 : 1
	1581–1600	20	11.9 : 1
100 years (1 : 14.0)	1601–1620	20	13.0 : 1
	1621–1640	20	13.4 : 1
	1641–1660	20	13.8 : 1
	1661–1680	20	14.7 : 1
	1681–1700	20	15.0 : 1

Relative value of silver to gold, by periods, 1493–1885.*—Continued.

Periods.	Years.	No. of years.	Ratio.
100 years (1 : 15.0)	1701–1720	20	15.2 : 1
	1721–1740	20	15.1 : 1
	1741–1760	20	14.8 : 1
	1761–1780	20	14.8 : 1
	1781–1800	20	15.1 : 1
50 years (1 : 15.7)	1801–1810	10	15.6 : 1
	1811–1820	10	15.5 : 1
	1821–1830	10	15.8 : 1
	1831–1840	10	15.7 : 1
	1841–1850	10	15.8 : 1
29 years (1 : 15.85)	1851–1855	5	15.4 : 1
	1856–1860	5	15.3 : 1
	1861–1865	5	15.4 : 1
	1866–1870	5	15.6 : 1
	1871–1875	5	16.0 : 1
10 years (1 : 18.2)	1876–1880	5	17.9 : 1
	1881–1885	5	18.5 : 1

*Estimated by Dr. A. Soetbeers, in his Edelmetall-Produktur, Gotha, 1879.

As Mr. Tidman asks for Europe let us ask for America. "Is there any way out of the wood?" As far as I can see our policy is plain. Preserving a sufficient volume of currency for our own people, so as to avoid the schemes of Wall street, New York, or Beacon street, or Montgomery street, San Francisco, let us force Europe to resume silver by refusing to become the pauper recipient of their cast-off financial clothing. In every commercial transaction now between us and Europe the latter demands gold. To keep up the equilibrium between gold and silver we must by our attitude force the combined action of Europe and the United States. To all this you answer with interminable tables of alleged or real statistics.

THE BATTLE OF THE TABLES.

It is really amusing to look over the RECORD to see the tables trooping up and down its columns. "Official table," "specially prepared table," "table prepared for Mr. Smith by the Director of the Mint," "table prepared specially for Mr. Silver by the fourteenth assistant auditor to the second division of the Light-House Board," "table of the amount of gold hid in chimney corners, specially prepared for Mr. Gold by the twelfth comptroller of the Fish Commission." How these tables war! One can close his eyes and imagine the members of the House hurling these tables, special, official, or general, at one another like two mobs around a barricade. I found one or two nice little tables myself, and I put them away to use in these remarks for fear anybody might think I could not stand a civil-service examination as to the number of brass teapots in China, or the amount of silver in India or Japan, or that I was unable to give statistics to show the connection between free coinage and the annual production of grasshoppers in Colorado. Well, in strict confidence, these tables have been used by a dozen speakers, and on both sides and all sides of this question.

On this subject let me quote from Mr. Carlyle, the Scotch philosopher. Says he of statistics:

Statistics is a science which ought to be honorable, the basis of many most important sciences; but it is not to be carried on by steam, this science, any more than others are; a wise head is requisite for carrying it on. Conclusive facts are inseparable from inconclusive except by a head that already understands and knows. Vain to send the purblind and blind to the shore of a Pactolus never so golden; these find only gravel; the seer and finder alone picks up gold grains there. And now the purblind offering you, with asseveration and protrusive importunity, his basket of gravel as gold, what steps are to be taken with him? Statistics, one may hope, will improve gradually and become good for something. Meanwhile it is to be feared the crabbed satirist was partly right, as things go: "A judicious man," says he, "looks at statistics, not to get knowledge, but to save himself from having ignorance foisted on him." With what serene conclusiveness a member of some useful-knowledge society stops your mouth with a figure of arithmetic! To him it seems he has there extracted the elixir of the matter, on which now nothing more can be said. It is needful that you look into his said extracted elixir, and ascertain, alas, too probably, that it is wash and vapidity, good only for the gutters.

I have no desire to appear presumptive, and trust I am not when I say that the mass of Congressional literature on this question does not clarify but rather obscures it. Presuming a popular ignorance, which would be appalling if it were true, popular phrases, cries, mottoes, catchwords, declamatory anathemas, and appeals to passion take the place of reason and a simple, clear, impartial statement of the case. Mystifying and mystified tables, statistics speciously real and glaringly false, are arrayed for and against in contending columns. The poor man being in the majority, all orators—gold, silver, copper, or rag orators—declare themselves with violent physical effort and powerful rhetoric to be for said poor man. Surely the honest man who wants to do something more than declare for said poor man must be puzzled as to what side he shall espouse.

In the mean time all that is done for said poor man is done by said poor man himself. Congress, all Congresses, may chase this question and that issue up and down the hill, but the majority of men luckily know that the two great centennial questions are land and labor. Tariff questions, silver questions, Indian questions, pleuro-pneumonia questions, female suffrage questions, "offensive partisan" questions, bureau-of-bugs questions—well, they know that these are trivial, if any questions. The roots of our social and political difficulties are deeper than these.

THE PRESENT SILVER DOLLAR

has been much discussed, eloquently apostrophized, and scathingly denounced. For some reason it did not seem to circulate readily. It was chained up, say our silver friends, handicapped and conspired against. This buzzard dollar, says its enemies, can not be chased off the Treasury roost even with the club of friendly legislation. It hovers for a few moments over the marts of commerce, and then flies straight to its nest in the Treasury building. Afraid to meet honest people, it skulks into the subterranean recesses.

But it does circulate, retorts its friends. It will purchase a dollar's worth. It passes for a dollar. It is our father dollar. Yes, it passes for a dollar. Why? Because it is intrinsically worth a dollar? Because international consent makes it worth a dollar? Because, in a word, it is really, honestly, squarely, and fairly an honest, upright, truth-telling, legitimate, respected, acknowledged, real dollar? No; but because the United States Government makes it by law a token whereby they obligate themselves to give you a real, honest, gold dollar for this stamped piece of silver. They could do the same for 60 grains of pewter or a pound of clam-shells. So, it circulates some. Why does it halt and limp? Why are you legislative policemen all clubbing and "resolving" and "enacting" it to "move on?" Why does it not assume a bold manly stride and walk along with erect crest? What ails it? That it is worse than an orphan you admit. That it is very weak since it has been violently and, as I believe, unjustly exiled you must know. It now only walks at all because of leaning on its big brother, gold. This big brother has so many pressing and impressing invitations to go to Europe that the poor silver dollar is afraid of the crash if he be finally called away.

The rich man who is getting afraid that soon you will have no gold to give him for your silver token is putting away his supply of gold as he does his winter coal, in anticipation of cold days in the financial world. The poor man for whom you declare so vehemently, he is a ready victim. He can not help himself. He must take your token and forget his distrust. When its powerful twin brother, gold, has deserted it and the poor man goes to the bank where he now, as the result of his pain, labor, sobriety, and frugality, deposits your silver dollar, he will draw out 79 cents or less, and this with over $1,095,172,147 in savings-banks. Gold, says Mr. Tidman, for the rich nations, silver for the poor nations. Gold for the rich men, silver for the poor men, says the Congress of the United States.

Sir, down in the subterranean recesses of the silver mines, far from breeze and sunshine, in the darkness and the danger, brawny labor is striking at the heart of the hills; even as we speak, half-naked and begrimed in noisome chambers, it swings its ponderous sledge from morn to eve, from eve to morn, delving out the precious metals for the smallest pittance of its own production. These are not the men who from press and forum are sending out selfish and misleading cries for unlimited coinage and Government gifts to the millionaire owners of the mines, pleading in the sacred name of labor and poverty for the compulsory purchase by Government of depreciated goods at the valuation of the sellers.

As between this silver syndicate and the honest if mistaken Greenbacker, I infinitely prefer the latter. Our free-trade friends wax hot about the tariff barons, but vote protection and subsidy to the silver barons, who, having become enormously wealthy at the expense of the tax-payers, are now the ruling and controlling powers in several States. Let us in our zeal against contraction of the volume of money not become the dupes of metal owners, speculators, bonanza kings, and selfish, cold-blooded syndicates. I would not contract the currency beyond the wants of the people, neither would I cheat the people with a debased money. The divine command is still with us, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou earn bread"—or its equivalent.

Philosophers, theorists, knaves, fanatics, and political cure-alls have, adown the centuries, preached, ay, and practiced, short-cuts to wealth out of this old, honest, beaten, sweat-stained way; patent devices for obtaining something for nothing; every man his own money-maker, and money made for everybody. When money streams from the paper-mills, copper-mills, gold-mills, silver-mills, and finally from the iron-mills, who then will walk the path God appointed and toil and strive over its rough defiles, and, in the hot and noon of summer and the congealing cold of the winter morning, in self-abnegation and pain, follow its lengthened way when money will rain upon us all like manna from heaven? "In the sweat of thy face" is the veto message of Omnipotence against all financial dishonesty, whether of speculator or legislator. National greatness must be based on honest finance.

Look at the wrecks of the cure-alls, rich-alls, and money-alls: Wood, wampum, shells, brass, copper, scrip, State banks, and confederate bills—there they lie, a mass of wrecked notions and dishonest ventures. The Keeley motors and air-ships of financial speculation, all wrecked at the first touch of the Divine injunction. "A false balance is an abomination to the Lord, but a just weight is His delight." Declamations, statistics, statutes, decisions, resolutions, speeches, printing-presses will give no man money honestly unless he first win it by his labor. When he thus earns it, give him an honest requital in honest money, that will stand all tests, thus preserving national as well as individual morality in obeying the command, "Provide things honest in the sight of all men."

In the name of industry, labor, morals, and sound finance let us refuse to open the flood-gates at this time for the white stream to wash the golden sands into other channels, and permanently divorce the twin king metals of the world, gold and silver. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUTTIT addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SYMES addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to have inserted in the RECORD a diagram of prices, prepared by a gentleman from Cleveland, which is quite valuable in this connection. It will probably require a wood cut, and on that account can not appear in to-morrow's RECORD; but as soon as possible I should like to have it inserted, with a short accompanying explanatory statement. [See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the leave will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

And then, on motion of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio (at 10 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. G. E. ADAMS: Petition of R. H. Cronin and others, for free coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Petition of Dr. H. Sanche, of Mississippi, concerning yellow-fever treatment—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BRAGG: Petition of real-estate owners and citizens of the District of Columbia, in behalf of the passage of House bill No. 4649, incorporating the Washington Traction Railway—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of J. R. Haskell, in relation to the multicharge gun, and the appropriation made at the last session for manufacturing one—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRAIN: Memorial of citizens of Texas, opposing Senate bill in relation to transportation of live stock—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, protest of citizens of Nueces County, Texas, against the inclusion of said county in the Laredo division of the Federal court for the western district of Texas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Petition of F. A. Burrell, M. D., and others, citizens of New York city, asking for better legal protection of young girls—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, memorial of Local Assembly No. 3215, Knights of Labor, of Auburn; and of Local Assembly No. 3283, of Rockport, Me., for the construction of the Hennepin Canal—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. DORSEY: Petition from 200 citizens of Nebraska, asking that oleomargarine and butterine be taxed and manufacture of the same be placed under the control of the Internal-Revenue Department—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORAN: Petition of Local Assembly No. 451, Knights of Labor, and of Local Assembly No. 3971, Knights of Labor, of Cleveland, Ohio, against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Also, petition of Local Assembly No. 450, Knights of Labor, of Cleveland, Ohio, in favor of the passage of the homestead bill—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolution of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Cleveland, Ohio, in favor of Mr. FORAN'S bill to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Trades Assembly of Cleveland, Ohio, in favor of Mr. FORAN'S bill to regulate lake and marine shipping—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FREDERICK: Petition of citizens of Marshall County, Iowa, for protection to the industry of vinegar manufacturing—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GILFILLAN: Petition of citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., for the establishment of postal savings-banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HALSELL: Petition of Knights of Labor against passage of the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Petition of Knights of Labor of Elgin, Ill., against the passage of what is known as the free-ship bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. JACKSON: Petition of soldiers and citizens of West Salem, Ill., asking for the passage of a law to pension ex-prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: Memorial of Printers' Assembly, No. 3990, Knights of Labor, of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the Blair educational bill—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of George G. Tarbell, for reimbursement for expenses incurred by him as pension examining surgeon—to the Committee an Appropriations.

By Mr. LOVERING: Petition of Samuel A. Waterman, late first sergeant Company D, Forty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, for extra pay while in command of his company from the date of their capture at the battle of Galveston, Tex., January 1, 1863, to the date of their muster-out, August 20, 1863, for expiration of service, all the commissioned officers being held as prisoners of war—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAYBURY: Petition of Mrs. E. B. Coolidge and others, officers of the Woman's Indian Association, in support of Senate bill introduced by Senator DAWES—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MORRISON: Paper in support of bill for relief of David Ryan, of Alton, Ill.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MURPHY: Petition of Jerry H. Murphy, asking that the Committee on Railways and Canals set a day for hearing House bill 5869—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of Daniel J. Updike and of Lydia Hoff and Hannah Updike, of Rappahannock County, Virginia, praying that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Resolution of Grocers and Importers' Exchange, of Philadelphia, favoring the bankruptcy bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial asking Congress to investigate whether the National Government may not be liable for the obligations of delinquent States, and its co-operation to secure the payment of the same—to the same committee.

By Mr. PARKER: Petition of Abel Godard and others, for a temperance law—to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition in favor of a uniform bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PERKINS: Petition of Local Assembly No. 2489, Knights of Labor, of Parsons, Kans., protesting against the passage of the act providing for free ships—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. PRICE: Memorial of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Augusta, Wis., and of Hudson, Wis., for the passage of the bill providing that the effects of alcohol and narcotics be taught in the public schools—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. ROMEIS: Petition of Knights of Labor of the tenth Ohio district, against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

By Mr. SENEY: Memorial of Jacob D. Spitlar, asking Congress to investigate whether the National Government may not be liable for the obligations of delinquent States, and its co-operation to secure the payment of the same—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Petition of Local Assembly No. 310, Knights of Labor, and of Local Assembly No. 3419, of Macon County, Illinois, against the free-ship bill—to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests.

Also, petition of clerks of the Quartermaster's Department of the Army at Saint Louis, Mo., relative to the classification of clerks in said department—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Petition of Martha E. James, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of George L. Hawley, for increase of pension and reconsideration of his case—to the same committee.

Also, papers in support of claim of Michael Manning for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Petition of James S. Flake, for allowance of claim of Samuel Howard, a lunatic—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TRIGG: Petition of the Board of Trade and Exchange of Portsmouth, Va., relative to establishment of an iron-ship yard at Gosport, Va., for the construction of Government vessels—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. VOORHEES: Petition of 438 citizens of Klickitat County, Washington Territory, praying for the forfeiture of the land grant made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company between Wallula Junction and Portland—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. A. J. WEAVER: Petition of A. E. Lane and 444 others, citizens of Nebraska, asking that all imitations of butter be taxed and placed under the control of the Internal Revenue Department—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Anderson Fielder, for reference of his claim so the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. C. WHITE: Affidavit in support of bill granting a pension to Lena Kebler—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of Knights of Labor of Louisville, Ky., for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of citizens of Jefferson County, Kentucky, for the passage of the Blair bill—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. WILSON: Papers relating to the claim of Joseph Anderson—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions, praying Congress for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in the Military and Naval Academies, the Indian and colored schools supported wholly or in part by money from the national Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. DINGLEY: Of citizens of Lincoln, Androscoggin, and Knox Counties, Maine.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: Of Rev. W. W. Case and others, citizens of Hillsdale and Washtenaw Counties, Michigan.

By Mr. FISHER: Of citizens of Otsego and Tuscola Counties, Michigan.

By Mr. FULLER: Of W. L. Eaton and others, citizens of Mitchell and Floyd Counties, Iowa.

By Mr. GILFILLAN: Of Rev. Chancey Hobart and others, citizens of Ramsey, Wright, and Hennepin Counties, Minnesota.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Of 251 citizens of Black Hawk, Butler, and Bremer Counties, Iowa.

By Mr. JOSEPH: Of citizens of Albuquerque, N. Mex.

By Mr. MARTIN: Of Rev. C. A. Hillman and others, citizens of Jefferson and Tuscaloosa Counties, Alabama.

By Mr. PARKER: Of the Methodist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Baptist churches of Ogdensburg, N. Y.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 8, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 12, 1886, a report of Lieut. Col. Henry M. Robert, Engineer Corps, in reference to the construction of the Government pier on the Delaware Bay, near Lewes, Del.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting certain information concerning the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor called for by a resolution of April 6, 1886; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT. I wish that it may in some way be brought to the attention of the Committee on Printing, so that if possible some arrangement may be made to supply the Senate with copies of the report when printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Printing, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors and transportation committee of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Mo., favoring legislation to encourage steam mail communication between New Orleans and the Central and South American states; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of employés of the supply department of the United States Army at Saint Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the provisions of the Army appropriation bill in relation to the compensation of such employés; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of 67 members of Local Assembly No. 2247, Knights of Labor, of Bloomington, Ill., and a memorial of 150 members of Local Assembly No. 2021, Knights of Labor, of Elgin, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of members of the Centre monthly meeting of Friends, State of Ohio, and a petition of members of the Springfield monthly meeting of Friends, State of Ohio, praying for the passage of Senate bill 355, to promote peace among nations, for the creation of a tribunal for international arbitration, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PLATT presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Huntington and Derby, in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of L. A. Powers and other citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1783) granting an increase of pension to George Bliss; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of citizens of New York city, praying for the passage of the bill providing for a system of post-office savings-banks; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MILLER. I present a memorial of the New York Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, adopted by the conference at its late session, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the memorial presented by him be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The New York Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of 280 ministers and representing 44,266 church members, beg leave to present to your honorable body their respectful petition showing:

1. That the treaty of 1881 between the United States and China, in which China gave her consent to the restriction of immigration of Chinese laborers to this country, provided that "Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and the subjects of the most favored nation." Said treaty also contained the following solemn pledge on the part of our Government: "If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either temporarily or permanently residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty."

2. That most flagrant and grievous outrages have been perpetrated upon the Chinese in Wyoming and Washington Territories and in the States of Oregon and California, and in many places in that portion of our country the purpose is still openly expressed of driving out the Chinese inhabitants.

3. That in the course of these outrages not only has much property belonging to Chinese residents been destroyed, but many persons have been put to death.

4. That the failure to keep our treaty obligations and the inhuman and brutal massacres which have been perpetrated upon these strangers in our midst have disgraced our country in the eyes of the civilized world and subject us to the just judgments of a righteous God.

5. That the safety of our citizens in China is imperiled by these frequent and unredressed wrongs to Chinese subjects in the United States, and that we have no right to expect that the people of a heathen country will be more careful of the rights of American merchants and missionaries than the people of this Christian country are of the rights of the Chinese in our land.

6. That it is imperatively necessary that immediate measures of the most stringent character be taken for the protection of the lives and property of the Chinese in this country, and the spirit of persecution and lawlessness so rife in some regions be sternly rebuked and prompt and efficient punishment be visited upon lawbreakers.

We therefore petition your honorable body to enact, without delay, such measures as will enable the officers of the law to suppress all efforts to persecute and drive out the Chinese and secure to them, wherever they may be in our wide domain, the same protection afforded to all other persons in "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

And for this your petitioners will ever pray.

JOHN F. HURST,
Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church.
ALEXANDER McLEAN,
Secretary of New York Conference.

NEW YORK, April 7, 1886.

Mr. MILLER. Let the memorial be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If it is immaterial to the Senator from New York, I prefer to have the memorial lie on the table until to-morrow morning before it is referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York object to the memorial lying on the table for the present?

Mr. MILLER. No; not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose the memorial will be printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed in the RECORD, as it has been read.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Rockport, Mass., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of shippers, producers, and commission handlers of live cattle, citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 1715 to regulate the transportation of live-stock; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SABIN. I present additional papers in relation to the claim of William Webster for building and keeping in repair a wharf at Newport News, Va., under a contract with the Quartermaster-General. I ask that the other papers relating to this case be taken from the files, and, together with the papers I now present, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the bill (S. 1435) to provide for the control of the reservation of public lands and the distribution of hot water at Hot Springs, Ark., and the bill (S. 1804) to provide for the management and control of the hot springs at Hot Springs, Ark., moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to; and he reported a bill (S. 2079) to provide for the control of the reservation of public lands and the distribution of hot water at Hot Springs, Ark.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 84) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2004) authorizing the transmission of weather reports, storm and flood warnings, and the announcement of the approach of cold waves through the mails free of postage, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of the Department of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic, requesting the passage of a bill for the relief of John Calihan, to report it adversely, for the reason that a pension has been granted him by the Pension Office. I therefore move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SABIN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2080) to authorize the issue of an American register to the schooner Miranda; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2081) granting a pension to Corydon Millard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2082) for the relief of James D. Cook; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

HARBOR OF REFUGE NEAR CAPE ANN.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate what progress has been made in the construction of the harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, near Cape Ann, Massachusetts; also such facts and considerations as he may deem important as affecting the question of the expediency of completing the same.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire whether any more effective measures than now exist can be adopted for the protection and preservation of Government records and property from loss or damage by fire, and to report by bill or otherwise.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is closed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I regret very much that the motion which I design to make interferes with the motion of which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] gave notice; but I am impressed with the fact that the consideration of the Library bill need not and will not engage much of the time of the Senate. I move, therefore, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1297) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make a remark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to make some observations on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, which is not debatable under the rules. Is there objection?

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas, and trust he may have consent to make the remarks he wishes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. BERRY. On two occasions before the bill referred to by the Senator from Indiana came from the House I had given notice that I should ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 1484) to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. I had hoped that the Senator from Indiana, in view of that fact, would allow this bill to come before the Senate this morning. He has declined to do so, and I do not care to antagonize him in the matter. I therefore shall not make the motion at this time. However, I give notice now—I do not know that it will do any good—that when the bill called up by the Senator from Indiana is concluded I shall again, if I can get the opportunity, ask the Senate to consider Senate bill 1484.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I merely wish to ask a statement from the Chair as to a question of practice or rule here. Yesterday I submitted some resolutions, which on my motion were laid upon the table and ordered to be printed. I desire to call those resolutions to the attention of the Senate at the proper time—in the morning hour, of course. I wish to know whether, if we pass over that subject this morning, the resolutions will go to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the uniform custom in the Senate is that when a motion of that kind is made to lay a resolution upon the table it goes to the table and is subject to be called up on motion. The Senator can make such a motion at any time when any other motion can be entertained.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

Mr. VOORHEES. I simply desire to say in response to the Senator from Arkansas that if this matter were my own I should yield to him in a moment, but I occupy such a position in reference to the Library bill that I do not feel at liberty to yield to any one. If I did I should yield first certainly to the Senator from Arkansas, if anybody, perhaps, here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to proceed to the consideration of the Library building bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1297) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS AND ARKANSAS VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. BERRY. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill 1484.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1484) to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT. We can not hear anything on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be again read by its title.

The Chief Clerk again read the title of Senate bill No. 1484.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BLAIR. I address the Chair, and I should like to inquire what has been done with the Library bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been passed.

Mr. BLAIR. It was impossible to know what was going on at this distance from the Senator who had charge of the Library bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was very careful to give the Senate plenty of time.

Mr. BLAIR. I am in favor of that bill, but I wish to say that I gave notice last night, as the Senate will recollect, that upon the passage of the Library bill I should move to take up the pension business of the Senate, and I now desire to move to take up Senate bill 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not now in order. A motion is pending to take up another bill. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to proceed to the consideration of the bill which has been indicated.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I give notice that I shall move to take up pension business, beginning with Senate bill 1886, as soon as the measure in charge of the Senator from Arkansas is disposed of.

Mr. BERRY. I will state that the pending bill has been before the Senate heretofore and has been read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read at length. It is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PLATT. It is impossible for any one to be heard when he addresses the Chair or when he speaks. I desire to have order in the Chamber if we are to continue the transaction of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business of the Senate will be suspended until Senators resume their seats and conversation ceases.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will wait until order is restored. The title of the bill will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1484) to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment which is pending will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to section 4 the following proviso:

Provided, That mortgages and stock issued by said company shall not exceed the actual cost in money of building and equipping said road.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment [putting the question]. The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for a division.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. FRYE. Who offered that amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] offered the amendment, and I understood that he was going to withdraw it.

Mr. FRYE. I am decidedly in favor of the principle which the amendment enunciates, but it seems to me if adopted in the words in which it now stands it would practically preclude the possibility of building the railroad. How can it be determined that the stock and mortgages, which must be issued early, shall represent exactly the cost of the road? If it is intended to prevent the watering of stock, that is all right; but it seems to me the language of the amendment is all wrong.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the amendment be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has a substitute for that amendment which he will offer as soon as he can obtain the floor.

Mr. PLATT. I will offer as an amendment to the amendment the amendment of which I gave notice on the 30th of March, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut offers an amendment to the pending amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add:

SEC. —. That none of the shares of the capital stock of the corporation herein named shall be transferable until at least 50 per cent. of the par value thereof shall have been paid in in cash. No bonds shall be issued or mortgages executed for the security thereof by said corporation in an amount exceeding one-half of the sum which its president, treasurer, and chief engineer shall certify, under oath, to the treasurer of the State of Arkansas, has been actually expended, at the time of the issue of such bonds, upon the railroad so to be constructed; and any false swearing in the matter shall be perjury. The whole amount of bonds outstanding at any one time shall not exceed one-half of the actual cost of the construction of such railroad. The provisions of this section relating to the transfer of stock and the issue of bonds shall be applicable to any corporation to which the corporation named in this act shall convey, or attempt to convey, its franchises, or rights, or property, prior to the final completion of said road.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut offer this as an addition to or as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PLATT. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As a substitute for it?

Mr. PLATT. After the word "provided" my proposition is to strike out the amendment pending and insert what has been read in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I will say a very few words if I can get the attention of the Senate upon this subject.

I confess that I regret that this particular enterprise has been brought before the Senate at a time which compels me to offer the amendment which it seems to me tests a principle. I regret it, because I believe that it is necessary to the people of Arkansas and of Kansas and that section of the Indian Territory that this road should be built. I believe, from all the investigation I have been able to give it, that common convenience and necessity require that it should be constructed. I regret it further because I have many friends in Connecticut who tell me that they own bonds of roads with which it is to connect which will be enhanced in value by the building of this road.

Nevertheless I believe there is a principle here which ought to be recognized. I think that we ought not to do anything which looks like the chartering of a railroad company or the granting of authority to build a railroad without throwing around it sufficient limitations and restraints to prevent overcapitalization. I do not desire to discuss this matter at length. I wish to explain the amendment and to have a vote taken upon it, and I want to make my record upon that vote.

This is practically chartering a new railroad. It authorizes a corporation, which is created under the general law of the State of Arkansas, to build a railroad through the Indian Territory. No portion of it is to be built within the State of Arkansas under whose general law this corporation is said to have been created or perfected. In other words it is a paper corporation, and this bill proposes in effect to charter a railroad company to build a railroad through the Indian Territory, giving that railroad company a charter which is coincident with the laws of the State of Arkansas. That is precisely the proposition of this bill.

Under these circumstances I think that we should put upon the authority which is given the company to build this line such restrictions as will compel it to be built for cash or its equivalent. I think we have made a great mistake heretofore in the chartering of railroads in not putting some restraints and some limitations upon them. I think the legislation of Congress has been altogether too loose in that respect. I think the example which has been set by Congress has been productive of great evils in the country, and I think the fact that we have been doing wrong is no excuse why we should continue to do wrong.

I do not by this amendment ask anything which is not already incorporated substantially in the constitution of the State of Arkansas, but it may be said, therefore, the amendment is unnecessary. The constitution of the State of Arkansas provides that—

No private corporation shall issue stocks or bonds except for money or property actually received or labor done.

If I understand that provision in the constitution of the State of Arkansas, it ought to receive such a construction that bonds can not be issued except as the work progresses, and that stocks or bonds can not be issued beyond the amount of actual cost.

The provision relating to bonds that they shall not be issued except as the work progresses, and then only to one-half of the extent which the president and chief engineer of the road certify has been actually expended, is taken literally from the general railroad law of the State of Connecticut. We have no difficulty in building railroads in that way, and unless the intention here is to make an estimated cost of the road in advance and then issue bonds before anything is done it can not interfere with the building of this road. I think at any rate that it involves a principle and upon that principle I wish to make my record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth lines of his amendment. It reads:

> The whole amount of bonds outstanding at any one time shall not exceed one-half of the actual cost of the construction of such railroad.

Mr. PLATT. At such time.

Mr. TELLER, I suggest that the Senator put in the word "equipment" also. I suppose he means half the expense incurred.

Mr. PLATT. I will modify my amendment so as to read "construction and equipment of such railroad." After the word "construction," in line 13, I insert "and equipment."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut modifies his amendment by inserting after the word "construction," in line 13, the words "and equipment;" so as to read:

> The whole amount of bonds outstanding at any one time shall not exceed one-half of the actual cost of the construction and equipment of such railroad."

Mr. PLUMB. This amendment is in the ordinary sense a very salutary one. Under it I have no doubt a railroad can be built in Connecticut and perhaps in most of the old States where money is cheap and is seeking investment at a low rate of interest; but the situation in the West is very different. The constituents of the Senator from Connecticut when they go West with their money are desirous of getting more than the 5 or 6 per cent. they are willing to take at home. Money will not seek investment in railroads in the Indian Territory or any other part of the West if there is no prospect of a better return than it will bring in the East.

This is a national question. The Indian Territory is a barrier to the commerce of three great States, and in fact to the commerce of the whole country. In order that that barrier may be removed, it is proposed to permit other railroads to be built through that Territory. Any amendment to this bill, however good in the abstract it might be, which should prevent, as I am satisfied this amendment would, the building of this railroad would be postponing for perhaps half a generation the bringing into close relations these great States of which I have spoken, and which lie on the borders of the Indian Territory, and would in that way do more harm than it could possibly do good.

Besides, this amendment only applies to capitalization. It does not deal with the important question of rates of freight and passenger fare. But it is provided in the bill that the people of the Indian Territory shall have the same protection in regard to rates of fare and freight that the people of the adjoining States have. We certainly can not very well do more than that for them.

To apply this amendment to only one line of road of probably 150 miles out of the many thousands we have authorized to be built under national charter would certainly not produce any very great effect; and while the principle of it, which is dear to the heart of the Senator from Connecticut, is of course all right, I beg him to understand that this is not the place at which it can be most usefully applied. If he will bring in a provision which will take control of the great transcontinental lines of road which are operating under national charters and co-operate with the representatives of the section of country traversed by them in reducing the rates of freight that they charge now to many millions of people, while he may not be able to cut off the bonds and stock they have already issued, he can help us to save the communities through which those roads are operated from future issues of that class of securities, and thus will have done something which will be of very great moment, much greater indeed than this amendment will be or any similar amendment attached to railroad bills for the Indian Territory.

In addition to that, we have already chartered three or four railroads to be built in that Territory. Two railroads are already built and operated there, to the building of which there was attached no such condition as this; and however intended, this amendment, I fear, would result in giving to those railroads the monopoly which they now have of the commerce of the Indian Territory and of the connecting commerce of the adjoining States, and, as I said in the beginning, that would work a great deal more hardship than any issue of bonds or of stock, however extensive it might be.

The Senator refers to the provision of the constitution of Arkansas. He says he is desirous only of giving effect to that; but that would warrant the railroad company in making a contract with a construction company to build the railroad in consideration of the issue of any amount practically of stock and bonds. Of course there must be a nominal consideration, but it need not be any more than nominal.

I think that if this railroad is placed under the restrictions of law applicable to the condition of things found in the adjacent States, such as have commended themselves to the wise judgment of the people of those States, who realize more keenly than the Senator from Connecticut possibly can the great necessity that exists for adding to the means of transportation there, he might be willing to leave it in that shape, and not press his amendment.

Mr. PLATT. My difficulty, Mr. President, is just this: If we do not do this thing now, there seems to be no place where we can commence it; and the fact that it has been long neglected, as it seems to me, adds to our duty at the present time. Whenever a railroad is seeking to be chartered or seeking any rights or franchises at the hands of Congress, that particular case will be insisted upon as a case where no unusual limitations or none except the limitations which we have been in the habit of placing upon railroads shall be adopted. As I said in the beginning, I regret that the question comes upon this enterprise, but it seems to me that there is a principle of such vital importance here that we ought not to let a single charter go by, or anything in the nature of a charter, without exercising our Congressional duty of seeing that such limitations are inserted in the bill as that overcapitalization shall be impossible.

A committee of which I am a humble member has brought in a bill with reference to the great transcontinental railroads which the Senator from Kansas speaks of, a bill which seeks to regulate and to limit freight rates and passenger rates within a reasonable limit. But what is the objection that we are met with? Just this, that those roads have been chartered under a law of Congress; that under that law the bonds have been issued, the stock has been issued, that Congress is responsible for the overcapitalization of those great roads. I think the Union Pacific road is capitalized now at $100,000 a mile. I am not very far from right in that respect—a great deal more than it ever cost; but when we seek to reduce rates for freight and passengers to a reasonable sum then we are met with the argument, which I have spoken of, that it was done under the authority of Congress, and that those bonds and that stock have passed into the hands of innocent holders, and that we have really no right, after having authorized it, to say that enough shall not be charged on the road, so that those innocent bondholders and stockholders can realize fair returns for their investment. There is force in that argument. I do not say it is an argument which should prevail; but there is force in it, and the force of the argument leads us just to this, that when Congress charters another road, or gives it rights or privileges, it should see to it that it can not be overcapitalized.

I am on principle opposed to the method of construction of railroads which lets the contract for their building to a construction company composed oftentimes of the projectors of the road, who estimate the cost of it at what they please and take pay in stock and bonds, which are issued before any of the work is done.

I simply desire to have this matter passed on by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT protempore. On this amendment the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I only wish to suggest in connection with this amendment that in the first place this railroad company is merely asking the Congress of the United States to grant it a right of way across the Indian Territory. The road is already chartered under the laws of Arkansas. I believe that the only effect of adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be to prevent the building of the road at all. I think that this provision is a salutary one in a thickly settled, densely populated country such as the State of Connecticut or any part of the East; but every practical, thinking business man must know that the conditions attaching to the building of railroads through a sparsely settled country are very different from those affecting the building of roads through a densely populated country.

This 240 miles of the proposed road across the Indian country will be practically a railroad bridge, for there is no local traffic of any consequence, no population, and the practical effect of the road is simply to connect the great railroad systems of the Northwest with those of the Southwest and shorten the haul from all the Northwestern country to the mouth of the Mississippi River by perhaps 700 miles. As it is now, in our State we are practically under the control of one system of railroads, having no outlet or connection by way of competition with any other system of railroads. We believe that the construction of this road will be a great benefit to the whole State, and not only to our State but to all of the Northwest.

This bill has been matured and considered in the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was originally introduced by my colleague [Mr. BERRY], and when it went to that committee the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] guarded carefully every interest of the Indians, every interest which can be conceived of as involved in this matter, and reported the present bill back as a substitute for the one offered by my colleague. It seems to me it is carefully guarded in every point, and I sincerely hope that the amendment will not be adopted, because I believe the effect of it will be to prevent absolutely the building of the road. I hope the Senate will pass the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, if Senators who are inferested in this matter will examine the map which I hold in my hand they will see indicated by red lines the proposed route of this road diagonally across the northeast corner of the Indian Territory. This hiatus between the southern line of Kansas and the western line of Arkansas, about 240 miles, is all that intervenes between a direct, all-rail, continuous connection from Leadville in the Rocky Mountains down the valley of the Arkansas, thence down the valley of the Mississippi to New Orleans. If this line is completed 240 miles across the Indian Territory, the railway connection between Leadville and New Orleans down these two great valleys is complete.

It is unnecessary for me to dilate upon the very great consequences and importance to the people living in those valleys, who desire to interchange their products, of the completion of this railway line. It is in the hands of responsible and conservative corporations, and there is no doubt that, if the franchise is granted, within a very few months the line will be complete.

I assume that no Senator believes that, this corporation being created by the laws of the State of Arkansas, Congress has any right whatever or any power whatever under the Constitution to impose any condition whatever upon the method in which those powers shall be exercised. This proposition, therefore, by the Senator from Connecticut is not in the nature of an admitted constitutional power by Congress. It is simply a threat, it is a menace, it is an attempt to compel this corporation to comply with certain conditions that Congress has no right and no power to enforce under the Constitution. It says to this corporation, "Unless you consent to agree that you will not bond your road beyond a certain limit you shall not have the right to go across a certain territory." That is all there is of it. The Senator from Connecticut is too well versed in law to suppose that Congress has any right to do this thing, that Congress has any power to say that this corporation shall or shall not bond its line.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire for information of the Senator whether this is a State corporation?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly; a State corporation.

Mr. BUTLER. Of Arkansas?

Mr. INGALLS. A corporation under the laws of the State of Arkansas, created by the laws of that State, the creature of that State, over which Congress has no more power than it has over a corporation created by the laws of Great Britain or of Russia. And the Senator from Connecticut, standing here as the advocate of what we all admit to be a salutary principle, says to all the people living in that great region of country unless this corporation will consent to have conditions applied to it that exist in the case of no other corporation in this country, that never have been attempted to be applied to any other corporation—"unless you agree to this you can not go across the Indian Territory." That is all there is of it. Every Senator who is familiar with the circumstances of railway construction in that country knows that if this condition is applied to this bill this road will not be built. The road can not compete, under these circumstances, with other lines to which this condition does not apply.

Now I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether, in the advocacy of a principle admitted to be just, that ought to be applied by a general statute that should be applicable to all corporations, he is willing to say in regard to this little connecting link necessary to the commerce and the welfare and the happiness of many great communities—willing to say in the nature of a menace, "Unless you agree to exercise the corporate powers conferred by the State of Arkansas in this way, you can not go across the Indian Territory?" I hope, Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut is not willing when this case is fairly submitted to present this obstacle to the completion of what is confessedly a great national enterprise; but that, if he desires that this evil which we all admit and all deplore shall be corrected, he will see that some measure is reported that shall apply to all corporations alike, and not attempt to enforce this principle by means of a refusal to grant a franchise, a privilege that has been repeatedly granted to other corporations and that has hitherto been refused to none.

Mr. SABIN. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Kansas to state that this charter is in the hands of a strong and conservative corporation. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what corporation owns this charter and proposes to build this connecting link.

Mr. INGALLS. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company.

Mr. SABIN. The Senator's statement confirms the information that has been given me heretofore on this subject, that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway is to build this 240 miles of railroad. Now I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he thinks that this strong and conservative corporation, one of the strongest in this country as I understand, will be deterred from building this connecting link, as he states it, "this most important connecting link," by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. INGALLS. I am not authorized to say anything about what they will do, for I do not know; but I assume that they would not accept a charter that was burdened with conditions which were imposed upon no other corporation. I am not authorized to speak for them, for I know nothing about their purposes.

Mr. SABIN. It strikes me, Mr. President, that if the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company will be prevented from building this 240 miles of railway by the adoption of an amendment which simply imposes upon them the condition of building an honest railway, one that shall be bonded and stocked so that the interests on the bonds and stock of the corporation shall be paid from the earnings of the railway, which earnings are secured to that road by the freight and traffic that are given it by the overtaxed and languishing agricultural interests of this country to-day, it certainly is not a link worth building under such circumstances.

Mr. President, far be it from me to lay in the way of any railway construction in the West a single straw that will prevent that construction at as early day as practicable. I am myself a Western man and have seen the necessities of railway construction. We have suffered from the lack of that railway construction, and we have been greatly benefited and builded up by the construction of railways; but we are to-day suffering and our agricultural interests are suffering. Our farmers are compelled to sell their wheat at 50 or 60 cents a bushel. Our industries are languishing with overtaxed burdens, one of the most potent reasons for which is the large amount paid for transportation of their products to market by corporations requiring excessive and arbitrary charges to secure the large revenue necessary to pay dividends and interest on properties, the bonded and watered stocks of which aggregating from two to four times the actual cost of the property. In the construction of this railway undoubtedly bonds will be placed to the full amount of the cost. Therefore it is no hardship to have this new departure on the part of the representatives of the interests of this country incorporated in this bill.

I think that the great trouble which is agitating this whole land to-day and causing honest and thoughtful men to pause and consider the question of our labor and our labor strikes would have assumed much less threatening proportions, if indeed not been averted entirely, if the railroads on which those strikes have occurred were simply bonded and stocked for any reasonable amount of their cost. Corporations paying reasonable dividends on a fair and honest construction account, instead of attempting to pay them on a large amount of fictitious and watered capitalization, would then be in condition to pay reasonable and living wages to that large and deserving class of our fellow-citizens who are furnishing the bone and sinew of the land and earning their daily bread by the sweat of their brow. I do not wish by my vote to place any obstacle in the way of the construction, and the early construction, of this link of railway, or any other railway, or for a minute unnecessarily delay any section of this land from the great privileges and benefits acquired by railroad communication; but for myself I think it high time when any great corporation comes to this body and asks special franchises that such conditions shall be imposed as shall protect the commercial, industrial, and agricultural interests of the people who have sent us here as the guardians of their interests, and for this reason I shall vote for the adoption of this amendment and every other of like purport that is presented.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I regret very much that the Senator from Connecticut has offered this amendment to this bill. I regret it, because I do not want to record my vote against it, embracing as it does provisions which are in the existing law of my own State, and which I heartily approve as proper safeguards in the construction of the railroads that my State has any authority to construct or to encourage the building of. I regret it more because, approving of the principle, the partial application and imperfect application of it to this particular railroad is in the way of what I happen to know is a general railroad law, applicable to this and all other cases, which is now in preparation, and which meets also my hearty approval.

I desire to see systematized and generalized and secured better than now the methods and plans upon which capital shall be induced to embark in railroads, more, sir, for the benefit of that class of persons alluded to by the Senator from Minnesota, just this moment, than from any desire to give advantage or undue profit to the capital which is invested. It was much an inducement to me in agreeing to this bill that it did secure to the people, whom the Senator from Minnesota is anxious to aid by voting against the bill itself in voting for this amendment, a competing outlet for all the products of the laborer and the farmer in that vast region, without which, as to-day, the heavy hand of monopoly in the shape of corporations already existing will be laid upon the very industries the Senator from Minnesota is so anxious to promote.

Without this road across this corner of the Indian Territory, existing roads already chartered and built, in the hands of other corporators and other capital, are capable of dictating to the farmers around about where my friend from Minnesota lives and in all that vast region of country just upon what terms they shall deliver the products of their soil in the markets of the South and Southwest. To-day under existing laws and existing corporations his constituents and all that worthy and enterprising and growing and developing region are at the mercy of other railroads; and here when it is proposed to put in a competing line that shall offer to them by the side of the terms now dictated to them terms more favorable to them, I regret exceedingly that there should be an attempt to put upon this railroad a condition that will discriminate against it by the side of two other railroads already chartered through the whole length of this Territory and under the control of the capital and the corporations that are now dominating the industry and the enterprise of the great Northwest. It is for competition's sake that I desire that this railroad may be built on terms exactly as easy to the capital invested, exactly such as to enable it to compete with other railroads; but if a burden is imposed upon them that does not rest upon the others, then it is impossible for this railroad to so compete.

Mr. SABIN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question while he is on that subject?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SABIN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts explain to me where the hardship in competition comes in when this company has to pay the interest on a road that costs ten, twelve, or fifteen thousand dollars a mile as against a competing road that is paying interest on anywhere from thirty to forty or fifty thousand dollars per mile? Where is the hardship in such a competition as that as against the new road? On 5 per cent. bonds one railroad has to pay to its bondholders $750 per mile, while the other road that is bonded for thirty or forty thousand dollars per mile pays from $1,500 to $2,000 per mile to its fictitious bondholders—not so much to fictitious bondholders but to the construction company that gets the bonds at any price it chooses to place them at. I certainly can not see the logic of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. It is not a question whether this company shall issue more bonds than the actual cost of the road; it is whether it shall in advance lay down the capital for the construction of the road, or whether its road shall be built upon the terms that all the roads through new and vast regions in the West have been built, distributing their cost over the years of the future, and requiring those who develop the country and the developed country itself to contribute some part and portion of the cost of the construction of the railway, which is the mainspring of their own prosperity. That is the secret of the beneficial effects upon the great Northwest of the construction of these large systems of railways, which never would have been accomplished had they been required in advance to lay down the money which it would cost to construct them. But by extending that cost into the future and having those in the future who grow strong and prosperous and wealthy by means of railroads contribute their share to their construction, the marvel of the growth of the West under the system of railroads has been brought about.

But to come to this particular road: this company asks nothing of Congress, as has been said by the Senator from Kansas, but the right of way across the Indian Territory. By the general law, if this were public land and not the Indian Territory, they could have gone on and constructed their road without coming to Congress at all. It is only because the land of the Cherokee Nation is Indian land that they have come here.

The two corporations whose lines come up to the border of this Territory are comparatively old railways, completed, constructed, and established. They come to the border of this Territory. They can not extend into this Territory. It was necessary through the form of a new corporation to provide for constructing this link in the railway—as it has been termed, a bridge, such as the bridge built across the Missouri at Omaha. No contribution of freight or of passenger traffic or of profit to any considerable extent can be obtained along the line until years hence. The beneficial effects of this road upon the community through which it is built are to come hereafter; and that is a community over which we have no control, whose interests and whose enterprises and whose ideas of profit and loss are all their own, governed by their own laws; and it seems to me that under these circumstances the Committee on Indian Affairs would have done their full duty if in giving the consent to build this road across the Indian Territory they had taken care that the interests of these Indians, who have no voice here, were looked after. With sedulous care the Committee on Indian Affairs have provided in this bill that every right of the Indians shall be taken care of in strict conformity to the laws, such laws as the States around them have enacted for the protection of their own citizens.

The right of way is to be determined in the United States courts according to the forms and principles of the laws established in Kansas and Arkansas, and the tolls for passengers and freight are by express provision of this statute under the control and jurisdiction of Congress at all times. Every interest is guarded; and while I do not want to vote against the principle contained in this amendment, it does compel this road to advance what other roads are not required to do, and two other companies, while this one is put under these additional burdens, are building two other lines under no control right across this Territory, and can command all the freight going down into the South and Southwest. It is not in the interest of free competition in railroad transportation; it is not, in my opinion, in the interest of sound and wise legislation touching interstate commerce, that we now single out one of these railroads and impose upon it conditions and burdens that we do not see fit to impose upon another side by side with it. That is why I regret very much the attempt to impose this additional burden upon this road.

I am ready to co-operate with the Senator from Connecticut. I have had something to do already with the preparation of a general bill which involves substantially all the elements of this amendment, the application of which shall be universal, and not special and particular to this corporation.

While it was said by the Senator from Kansas that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Company were the owners of this stock, I suppose the Senator meant that those individuals who built the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé road on the north and those who built the connecting link on the south are interested because their roads must be interested, and they desire to enter into a fair competition with these other roads that have had the sanction of Congress for the vast freighting business that is now waiting for competition and for low freightage to the market. Those are the persons interested, not the corporation themselves, as I understand, but sound men, I have no doubt; and on the question whether all this capital or half the cost of the road can be advanced, I do not doubt that it can be advanced, or forty times that can be obtained in the money markets of the world, but when you require it to be obtained in advance, before the freightage can contribute at all in competition with freightage on other roads, that is the burden which will prevent any beneficial effect to the commerce outside of that in the Indian country itself from this road.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not wish to anticipate the discussion which is to come up inevitably very soon in this body on the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill which has been reported by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], but I desire to say just this much: The cheaper this road is built the more and the more easily it can compete; and it seems to me that that is a perfect answer to the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts, that this road is needed as a competing road. If it is built for cash, as he avers that the parties who project it are able to build it, then it can compete upon favorable terms with any road which has been built in the ordinary way of building railroads. The ordinary way of building railroads, as the Senator knows, is to let the building of the road to a construction company, which fixes its own price for doing the work and takes pay in bonds and stock, and ordinarily takes bonds and stock which aggregate at least three times as much as it would cost to build the road in cash. That is the ordinary method of railroad construction as it has been practiced up to this time.

Now, my only object here is to have the Senate of the United States put its seal of condemnation upon that kind of railroad construction in this country. And while, as I said, I regret that it falls on this particular enterprise, it might perhaps as well fall here as anywhere, because it is said that the parties who contemplate building this road are amply able to build it. What I want is, that so far as the United States Government can control the question, it shall not be possible from this day on for men to project a railroad and build it without putting a dollar of their own money in it, and be rich when the building is completed. That is all; and I do not think any argument of locality, any argument of competition answers that.

I want to say a word about railroads and corporations. I am not an enemy of railroads or corporations. I recognize the great benefit which not only railroad corporations but other corporations have bestowed upon this country; but their mismanagement, their improper management, is a great evil, and sooner or later it outweighs the benefit. Take these great transcontinental railroads. They were a great benefit, great agencies of civilization. They have opened up that vast country to civilization; they have created wealth; they have builded cities; they have opened up the agricultural development of this country; but, notwithstanding all that, the country is mortgaged and the people of this country are mortgaged for all time to pay freights and fares upon those railroads two or three or four times as much as they ought to be burdened with paying. Allow this railroad to be constructed in the usual method of constructing railways, and the time will come in the future when the blessing will be overborne by the curse.

And that leads me to say just one thing more. I believe that a corporation the capital of which represents the actual money invested, and which is honestly managed, is the greatest blessing to American civilization; but I believe that that corporation which is overcapitalized or dishonestly managed or is mismanaged is a curse to American civilization; and the more the overcapitalization, the more the dishonest management or the mismanagement, the more direful the curse. We have seen so much of the evils of overcapitalization, of the evils of mismanagement, that I think the Senate of the United States owes a duty not only to itself but to the people of this country to say that it shall not go on any further.

The Senator from Massachusetts says let us pass a general law. He wants to exempt this enterprise, and then let the general law come in. But there comes a time in the history of all governments when it becomes necessary to declare a principle. It seems to me that that time has come now. It seems to me that if it be said that these men of ample ability to build this road can not build it unless they are permitted to capitalize it for more than it fairly costs, then it is time to say that road should not be built; and when the next enterprise comes up it is time to apply the same restrictions and limitations to that, and I will co-operate with the Senator from Massachusetts in endeavoring to frame—and it is a good deal of an undertaking—a general railroad law. I wish we had one that we could pass to-day. But I think now, this question having come before Congress, we have a simple duty to perform which no exigency can relieve us from.

A single word in reply to the Senator from Kansas. He says that this is an Arkansas corporation, and that we can not say what an Arkansas corporation can do; that we have no constitutional power and no right to impose any conditions or limitations or restrictions upon a corporation created under a general law of one of the States. This is no interference with State rights. We are exercising no unconstitutional power. This State corporation comes to Congress and asks for a right which the Government only can give, and I am too well versed in law, to use the language of the Senator, to suppose that Government can not impose any condition it pleases in the granting of this right. We do it every day. The Mississippi and Missouri Rivers are bridged by State corporations by the authority of Congress; and has not every one of those charters conditions and limitations which Congress imposes because it has the power to impose them, and because it thinks it right to impose them?

Mr. DAWES. I wish to ask the Senator, suppose that the legislature of the Cherokee Nation, which meets to-day, gives its consent for this railroad to pass across its territory, what authority would the United States have except that under the general interstate-commerce power?

Mr. PLATT. If it is unnecessary to come to Congress, why are they here? I do not understand—I am not so well versed, of course, as the Senator from Massachusetts in relation to the powers of the Indian Territory and its legislatures; but I do understand that in crossing that Territory, which, though it be an Indian Territory and an Indian reservation, is the territory of the United States; I do understand that it is necessary for Congress to act, and if it is not, there is no necessity for the passage of this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I do not understand that if the legislature of the Cherokee Nation should give the authority to go across this Territory there will be the slightest occasion to come to Congress. It is only in the absence of that authority that this corporation is here, and it was in the absence of that that two years ago we gave to other corporations the right to cross this Territory without imposing any condition compared with this.

Now, I make this suggestion to the Senator: I care more to bring that Territory within the influence and control and government of the United States than I do for this railroad or half a dozen railroads. I happen to know that the chief of that nation was here and went home and called the legislature together for the very purpose of giving its consent to this railroad crossing the Territory, so that they might be interested in the prosperity and growth which is attendant on the building of a railroad through a new country, so that they can be more and more every day like the United States and disposed to come under its government and control. I care more for that than I do for this road.

Mr. PLATT. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. Does he not know that there is opposition to this bill in the Indian Territory and among the Indians themselves?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly I do; and the element that I allude to is the element toward which the United States can look and look only for making that Territory something different from what it is, part and parcel of this Union under a common law and a common prosperity.

Mr. PLATT. It may be that this power exists in the legislatures of the Indian Territory. If it does, I can not conceive the haste to have this bill passed by Congress if the proper legislature of the Indian Territory has been called together for the purpose of acting upon it. But upon that subject I can not contend with the Senator from Massachusetts, because he is so much more familiar with the powers of the legislatures of the Indian Territory than I am.

I do not wish to discuss this amendment or this bill any further, and, as I said in the first place, I regret that I have felt that my duty compelled me to insist upon this amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if this railroad company were applying to the Congress of the United States for a charter to build a railroad across the District of Columbia, or across either one of the Territories of the United States, there would, I apprehend, be no question about the power of Congress to impose any restriction it pleased in the charter, to make any limitation it might think proper, to make any regulation in the charter about the terms upon which the road should be built, whether bonds might be issued, or whether the stock must be paid in in cash. All those powers would be within the reach of Congress, and Congress might do just as it pleased about them. In this case, however, no such application is made. A charter has already been granted by the State of Arkansas; and this company, desiring to build the road over a small portion of the territory of Arkansas, as I understand it, and across the Indian Territory for 200 miles or more, makes application here not for a charter, but for the right of way, or the right to pass, over the Indian Territory.

It is said by the honorable Senator from Connecticut that we may grant that privilege upon any terms we dictate. That is doubtless true, for Congress has the power to refuse entirely to permit the company to pass over any part of the Indian Territory. Then the question comes up, however, what is best for us to do? The Senators from Arkansas, who have this bill in charge, tell us that the public interest imperatively requires that the road should be built. The Senators from Kansas at the other end, or near the other terminal point, tell us the same thing. This connection between the State of Arkansas and the State of Kansas is a very important one, as I understand, to the people of both States and the sections connected with both States. The Senators at each terminal point agree on that. The two hundred and odd miles to be built across the Indian Territory are in a waste territory, you may say, uninhabited, except by a few Indians. No prudent capitalist will put his money in and build the road upon terms less favorable than those usually granted, as I apprehend.

Now, while I grant that we have the power, when we are asked, to give the right of way across the Territory or to permit the company to purchase from the proper owners—the Indians—the right of way across, we have power to impose terms. But is it for the interest of the people of the United States that we impose unusual terms in this case? Should we not permit those two adjoining thriving States and communities to be connected together by rail, making a very important connection that does not now exist, or should we impose terms that will forbid the connection, for we are told that the company that has this matter in charge will not build on any but the usual terms? It is replied to that that a great company would not be likely to refuse to build because they have to put up cash to build upon. It may be much more to the interest of the people of Arkansas and the people of Kansas that this road should be built than it is to the interest of the corporation that controls the road that is now built and that would build this road. They may see reasons why they should make this extension and this connection if they are put upon favorable terms, but they might be entirely unwilling to do it when put upon unfavorable terms.

I think, therefore, it is the wrong time for us to apply the new rule that the Senator from Connecticut desires and that many other Senators desire; and that we should permit this charter to pass as others have passed, until there is a general law enacted upon that subject to regulate the granting of charters generally or the granting of the right of way across the Territory.

As I have already said, the interest of these great communities on both sides being vitally interested, the Territory being inhabited only by a few Indians, there being no local freight to be expected for a long time to come, we can hardly suppose that the company would undertake to build upon any other than the usual terms. Therefore I see no reason why we should not grant the permission in this case, as we have granted it in a number of other cases at former sessions of the Senate. I shall vote, therefore, against the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut, though I do not say how I might vote on a general law on that subject. I think we ought to grant the permission, and grant it without the proposed hesitation. I have no doubt the road will be honestly and fairly built if it is done in the usual way. If this restriction is put upon it, from all I have heard, I have no idea it will be built for many years to come.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when Mr. HARRIS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is detained from the Senate by sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. PLATT. Was any pair announced for the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was announced that he was paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. PLATT. He asked me to say that he had a pair on this bill, being in favor of the amendment. I presume the pair is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I see he is not in his seat.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Blair,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Conger,	Kenna,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Harrison,	Logan,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.
Hawley,	McMillan,	Sabin,

NAYS—27.

Berry,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Maxey,	Spooner,
Brown,	Fair,	Morgan,	Teller,
Butler,	Frye,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Call,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Coke,	Jackson,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Harris,	Pike,
Allison,	Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom.
Beck,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	George,	Mahone,	Stanford,
Camden,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Vance,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Miller,	Vest.
Chace,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg..
Cockrell,	Hale,	Mitchell of Pa.,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Palmer,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays in view of the short time since we have had a vote by yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It will take but a few minutes to vote by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. There is not any use in taking the vote by yeas and nays. We have just had a yea-and-nay vote on a similar proposition.

Mr. PLATT. We can take the vote by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw the call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays. We have just had a vote which shows what the result will be, and I intend to ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. As this amendment is near the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut it will undoubtedly receive about the same vote, and at the suggestion of Senators I withdraw the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays will be regarded withdrawn, if no objection be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have three formal amendments to present, to which I suppose there will be no objection. In section 1, after the word "Territory," in line 13, I move to strike out the words:

At or near Arkansas City, in the State of Kansas, as will make the most suitable connection with lines of railway diverging from, at, or near said Arkansas City.

And to insert:

Between the Arkansas River, in Cowley County, and the Caney River, in Chautauqua County, Kansas, as said corporation may select.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In section 3, line 17, after the word "award," I move to insert:

To and file with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof.

So as to read:

Which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. At the end of the bill I move to add as an additional section:

That the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SABIN. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In what part of the bill does the Senator propose to insert the amendment?

Mr. SABIN. It is immaterial where, so that it is in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be inserted at the end of the bill. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following proviso at the end of the last section:

Provided, That the bonded indebtedness shall not exceed the actual cost of said road, nor the stock capitalization be more than 50 per cent of said cost.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEWELL. I move to add as an additional section to the bill:

That the stock and bonds issued for the construction of this road shall have stamped on their face the actual amount of money paid into the company on such securities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Connecticut stated to the Senate that the usual mode of constructing railroads, organizing companies, was on a basis of issuing two or three times the amount of securities that it cost to construct the road. That, unfortunately, has been the case of late years, but it has been confined largely to the territory west of the Mississippi River. In the older settled States the corporators have almost invariably subscribed their capital stock and built their roads for cash. In most of the States to-day the general railroad laws prescribe that there shall not be more securities, more bonded indebtedness, than the actual cash capital paid in.

That is an honest provision; and in a Senate where so many speeches were made last year upon the interstate-commerce bill, in which the railroads were arraigned as they were by gentlemen who I have no doubt voted against the provision offered by the Senator from Connecticut, where railroads were decried for the watering of stock, where they were shown to have had so many more thousand dollars of stock than the actual amount subscribed or paid in under the law, where it was shown that a large part of the burdens of the people were caused by reason of this overissue of stock, it seems strange to me that to-day an amendment such as that offered by the Senator from Connecticut should be voted down in this body. The issue of a certificate with a hundred dollars on the face of it by a railroad corporation, under authority of law even, which has not had a dollar paid on it, is a fraud on the community, and ought not to be permitted.

There is no doubt that the people have a right to complain of us. It is all very well for Senators to say we will fix this in a general law some time. Now is the time to meet the question and make an example. Will it cost any more to build a road under a bill with this provision in it than if it did not have it? Is it any better for a road to be allowed to issue watered securities by the bushelbasketful? Does it give them any credit? It does nothing but allow a fraud to be committed upon the people of this country, and generally it is felt by innocent people who can not judge the difference between the actual value of one security and another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to go through with the pending bill, laying aside the unfinished business informally. It will take but a very few minutes more to conclude the bill. It will only require a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to lay aside the unfinished business informally, with a view to continue the consideration of the railroad bill.

Mr. PLATT. May I have unanimous consent to say a word?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLATT. The bill for the admission of Washington Territory has been laid aside a good while. I think we ought to go on with it. If we could get through with this matter within a few minutes I would not object to allowing that few minutes, but I can not consent if any extensive debate is to occur.

Mr. BERRY. I have no doubt that the debate is closed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. There need be only a vote taken. I think there will be no further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut object to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. PLATT. I do not object. However, I reserve the right to object if debate should extend beyond a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. SEWELL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

That the stock and bonds issued for the construction of this road shall have stamped on their face the actual amount of money paid into the company on such securities.

Mr. DAWES. I do not understand the necromancy of building railroads like the Senator from New Jersey, but I should like to know how when a railroad company issue a thousand-dollar bond to raise money upon it to put into the construction of their road they can stamp on that bond before they sell it that there have been a thousand dollars paid into the treasury for that bond. I would vote for the Senator's amendment if it were practicable. There may be some way by which it can be done.

Mr. SEWELL. The stamp of the treasurer on the face of the bond that a thousand dollars has been subscribed for that bond can be put on the bond before it is issued.

Mr. TELLER. I am in favor of the principle declared in the amendment, but it seems to me to be impractical to carry it into execution in this kind of a bill. This is an Arkansas corporation, and not a national corporation. They are asking nothing except the right of way. I understand very well that you can put upon the bill conditions of this kind, but they will ultimately raise difficult questions to solve as to whether money had or had not been expended. I do not believe it can do any possible good or effect anything to adopt the proposition suggested by the Senator from New Jersey. There will be a number of ways of avoiding and evading this provision, and at the same time it will perhaps be used to prevent the railroad company from building across that Territory, which is desirable not only for the people of the Indian Territory but for the people on both sides of the Territory.

While I am entirely in favor of the principle of confining railroads in their securities to the amount of money expended, I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when Mr. COKE'S name was called). The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I should vote for this amendment were I not paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I desire to reannounce the pairs of my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] and myself.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Blair,	Hoar,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Jackson,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Kenna,	Pugh,
Frye,	McMillan,	Sabin,
George,	McPherson,	Sewell,

NAYS—27.

Beck,	Dawes,	Maxey,	Spooner,
Berry,	Eustis,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Stanford,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Teller,
Bowen,	Fair,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Butler,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hawley,	Morrill,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,
Camden,	Gibson,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Cameron,	Gray,	Logan,	Riddleberger,
Chace,	Hale,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Vance,
Coke,	Harris,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vest.
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Miller,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to add as an additional section:

That if said corporation or any successor to its rights under this bill shall issue any stock except for cash actually paid in, and to an amount equal to the stock so issued, all the rights and privileges granted under this act shall cease.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PLATT. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. JACKSON (when Mr. HARRIS'S name was called). I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER], who is temporarily absent, is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] on this question.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has announced a pair with me, and, as he is absent from the Chamber at this moment, I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Beck,	Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sabin,
Berry,	Dolph,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Maxey,	Spooner,
Brown,	Fair,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Stanford,
Butler,	Frye,	Morgan,	Teller,
Call,	George,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Jackson,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—8.

Conger,	Hawley,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	McMillan,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,
Allison,	Gorman,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Logan,	Riddleberger,
Camden,	Hale,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Chace,	Harris,	Miller,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vest,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Morrill,

So the bill was passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will receive the report.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5543) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report it with amendments and to submit a written report. On the next legislative day after to-morrow I propose to ask the Senate to consider the bill immediately after the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business, being the bill for the admission of Washington Territory, is now before the Senate. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] who is not present.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana may be read. It has not had the consideration of the Committee on Territories, and I think it should be read.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. A modest man stands a very poor chance in the United States Senate. I had a measure assigned for February 22, and I have yielded and yielded, and bill after bill has come in, and speech after speech has been made, on notice given, and still my measure is assigned as a special order for February 22. The assignment was made February 16. In the country there is a good deal of excitement over the question it touches. My judgment is that the adoption of the resolution by the Senate would have a tendency to allay that excitement. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he will not yield me the remainder of the day to dispose of that resolution.

Mr. PLATT. A Senator touches my weakest point when he asks me to yield to him, and I have been yielding the Washington bill which has been the unfinished business for about a week. I do not know that I ought to have done it; I do not know but that I ought to have insisted upon it. A week ago to-day the bill was before the Senate and was considered, the amendments of the committee adopted, and I supposed the measure was within an hour of its passage, when I yielded, just as the Senator from Maine asks me to yield now, and a week has intervened.

I am not going to discuss the question which of the two Senators is the most modest, but it seems to me I have been very modest. I believe that we can get the Washington Territory bill out of the way in two hours if we can go on with it this afternoon. That is my belief about it, and I think it will be an economy of time to do it. It seems to me that I ought to insist upon it, and that the Senator from Maine ought not to ask me to yield.

Mr. FRYE. Then will the Senator yield to me for a moment to try a request?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I represent, touching the fishing rights of the United States, shall be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the resolution which he has indicated be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose that means before 2 o'clock, and that it will not interfere with business coming up at that hour if we dispose of the Washington bill to-day.

Mr. FRYE. I shall try to have the resolution go along until it is finished. I do not think it will take over two hours to dispose of it.

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Connecticut have both referred to measures which they have had made special orders, I wish to say that the bill in relation to interstate commerce has been made a special order for some time, and I have been waiting very patiently for the bill of the Senator from Connecticut and the bill which was disposed of yesterday to be gotten out of the way, so that I might press the bill in relation to interstate commerce. I give notice now that so soon as the two measures represented by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Maine are disposed of I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill in relation to interstate commerce, and continue its consideration until it is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Maine?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall not object if it can be understood, and distinctly understood, that on Monday the resolution providing for the abolition of executive sessions in certain cases shall be considered in the morning hour. Unless that can be understood, I shall object. I find the practice here is very frequent that Senators get up and say, "I give notice" so and so, and that notice continues from day to day. Here is a resolution which has been offered and is on the Calendar, and which it has been understood would be voted on before all the executive business has been passed upon.

Now, if the Senator and the Senate will agree that that resolution shall be taken up on Monday morning, I shall not object to anything; but unless that is agreed to I shall object and continue the contest until that resolution gets before the Senate in its regular order. I entered into the contest for the passage of the resolution in earnest. I shall not object, however, if the Senate will agree to take it up on Monday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia submit a request to the Senate?

Mr. DAWES. I wish to say to the Senate that if there is no session on Saturday the Indian appropriation bill must be taken up on Monday. There is great necessity to have that bill passed as early as possible.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. In the morning hour?

Mr. DAWES. As soon as the morning business shall have been concluded.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I give notice that I shall ask for the consideration of that resolution and put it in competition with the Indian appropriation bill. I wish we had no Indians and no Indian Territory. I shall not yield any further than I have stated, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DAWES. As between the question whether the Indian appropriation bill shall become a law or whether we shall have open or closed executive sessions, I do not think there will be any trouble on the part of the Senate. I think the Senate will dispose of that question properly. At any rate, I am willing to submit it to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I am obliged to confess my utter poverty. I do not own a single bill that is being considered by the Senate. I have no private property in any of the measures. So far as I am concerned I have only pressed measures upon the attention of the Senate which belonged to the country and which the Senate chose to consider because of their supposed comparative paramount importance at the time they were taken up.

I have been giving notice for some time that I should ask the Senate to consider the pension bills. The Calendar is overloaded with both general and special pension bills which ought to be disposed of. There is one general pension bill of very great importance, of more importance than any other one bill which has been in either House of Congress during the present session. It has been favorably reported upon by the Committee on Pensions and has long been waiting action by the Senate. It was taken up by the Senate in the morning hour, about two weeks since, and incontinently sent out of existence on that occasion and displaced by the talk we have been indulging in for the last two or three weeks.

There is one other bill, early action upon which I think very much concerns the peace and prosperity of the country. It is the labor-arbitration bill, acted upon in the other House after considerable debate and much consideration; acted upon there almost unanimously and sent to the Senate and forthwith reported by the committee to which it was referred to the Senate, and upon which I think the condition of the country requires very early action.

I do not mean to dwell upon the facts which lead me to make this statement. Both the pension bill and the arbitration bill I think require very early action by the Senate, not because they belong to any special Senator or because they have been committed prominently to the charge of any particular Senator. This is a new doctrine about ownership of a bill, that it must be considered because this, that, or the other Senator is more or less modest in his deportment. Bills should have precedence according to their importance. I feel as though I ought to ask the Senate to decide on the question of consideration between those measures which I have named and any others which other Senators may seek to be disposed of.

I can simply give notice that I shall ask the Senate to decide at every opportunity between the pension bill and the arbitration bill on the one hand and other measures which may be pressed before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from New Hampshire object to my request that the resolution touching the fishing rights of the United States may be considered after the morning business to-morrow?

Mr. BLAIR. I shall ask for the consideration of the pension bill, and let the Senate decide.

Mr. FRYE. To-morrow morning?

Mr. BLAIR. I will withdraw the objection for to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BLAIR. I have stated all I desire to say. The Senate must consider the urgency of these two measures, and I hope they will be early taken up and disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I only give notice, too, that I shall object to the consideration of the bill suggested by the Senator to-morrow morning and put the resolution to which I have referred in competition with that. I refer to the resolution providing for opening the doors during the consideration of confirmations. I am obliged to object some time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia object to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FRYE. I give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the close of the morning business, I shall endeavor to get the fisheries resolution before the Senate. It is of no use to undertake to contest or combat with any such performance as this.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not know what the Senator means by a "performance." I did not object to the consideration of his resolution.

Mr. FRYE. Distinctly the Senator objected.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I did not. I gave notice that I should object to-morrow morning to the consideration of——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again ask whether there is objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Maine?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask leave to explain to the Senator from Maine that I made no such objection, and to ask him to explain what he means by a "performance."

Mr. FRYE. Then I withdraw what I said. I understood the Senator distinctly to object.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I gave notice distinctly that I should object to-morrow morning to the consideration of the pension bill and ask the Senate to pass upon the question of the resolution to which I referred. If the Senator from Maine did not understand me, it is his fault; and if he misunderstood me, I hope he will not again characterize what I may say on this floor as a "performance."

FISHING RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Maine that, at the expiration of the morning business to-morrow, the resolution indicated by him, relative to the appointment of a commission charged with the consideration and settlement of the fishing rights of the United States and Great Britain, shall be taken up for consideration? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

ADMISSION OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. PLATT. Now I ask that the Washington bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 67) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add as new sections:

SEC. 28. That the inhabitants of the Territory of Montana are hereby authorized to form for themselves a State government, with the name of the State of Montana.

SEC. 29. That said State shall consist of all the territory embraced within the boundaries of said Territory as now defined by law.

SEC. 30. That in order to the formation of such State government the qualified electors resident within said boundaries are hereby authorized, after due proclamation by the governor of Montana Territory, and in conformity to the laws of said Territory relative to the election of members of the Legislative Assembly thereof, as nearly as practicable, and in so far as they may be applicable, and under such rules and regulations, and at such time and places, as said governor may prescribe, to elect as many delegates, possessing the qualications of such electors within the present limits of said Territory, as there are members of said Legislative Assembly, and also fifteen such delegates at large.

SEC. 31. That said delegates shall meet in convention at the city of Helena, in said Territory, at such time as said governor may designate in his said proclamation, and, when organized, shall declare, on behalf of the people of the territory embraced within said boundaries, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; and thereupon said convention is hereby authorized to form a constitution and State government for said territory so bounded and described as aforesaid: Provided, nevertheless, That such constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil and political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence: Provided further, That said convention shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State, that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said State ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship; that the inhabitants of the territory embraced within said boundaries do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands, and the lands the Indian title to which has not been extinguished by the United States, lying therein, and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States; that all grants and patents heretofore made by the United States to settlers and purchasers of school lands therein are confirmed by said State and the people thereof, and that other lands, to be selected as hereinafter provided, are accepted by said State in lieu thereof; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without said State shall never be taxed higher than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no tax shall be imposed by said State on lands or property therein belonging to the United States, any Indian tribe, or Indian sustaining tribal relations, or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States; and that all navigable waters within said State shall be and remain public highways, free to all citizens of the United States: And provided further, That all residents of that portion of said territory embraced within the boundaries of said State at the time of admission who are confined in an insane asylum, and who are maintained at such asylum at the expense of said Territory, shall be received into the insane asylum of said State, and shall be maintained by said State upon the same terms, in the same manner, and under the same laws and regulations as the other insane of said State.

SEC. 32. That said convention, having formed such constitution as provided in this act, shall provide by ordinance for submitting the same to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held at such time and places and under such regulations as said convention may prescribe.

SEC. 33. That at the election last aforesaid the legal voters of said new State shall vote directly for or against such proposed constitution, and the returns thereof shall be made to the governor of Montana Territory, who, with the secretary and chief-justice thereof and the president of said convention, or any three of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes so cast in said proposed State shall be for said constitution, said governor shall certify the same to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said constitution and ordinances.

SEC. 34. That on receipt of such certification of the votes so cast at said election showing the adoption of said constitution by the people of said State as aforesaid, and of a copy of such constitution and ordinances, the President of the United States, if said constitution and ordinances shall conform to the requirements of this act, shall issue his proclamation declaring the State admitted into the Union, and thereupon the said State shall be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, without any further action on the part of Congress.

SEC. 35. That until the next general census said State shall be entitled to one Representative in Congress.

SEC. 36. That such Representative, and the governor and other officers that may be provided for in the constitution of said State, shall be elected on a day to be fixed by said constitutional convention, and which may be the same as the one fixed for the submission of the proposed constitution to the people for ratification or rejection as aforesaid; and that until said State officers are elected and qualified the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices.

SEC. 37. That from and after the admission of said State into the Union in pursuance of this act, the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the said State as elsewhere within the United States; and said State shall constitute one judicial district, and be called the district of Montana; that for said district a district judge, a marshal, and a district attorney of the United States shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the same rights, powers, and duties as provided by law for similar officers in the other districts, except as herein otherwise provided; that said district of Montana shall be attached to and constitute a part of the ninth judicial circuit; and a term of the circuit court and district court for said district shall be held at the seat of government in said State on the first Tuesdays of January and June in each year; and one grand jury and one petit jury only shall be summoned and serve in both of said courts.

SEC. 38. That the circuit and district courts for the district of Montana, and the judges thereof, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction and perform the same duties possessed and required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations.

SEC. 39. That the district judge appointed for the district of Montana shall receive as his compensation the sum of $3,500 per annum, payable in four equal installments, on the first days of January, April, July, and October of each year.

SEC. 40. That the marshal, district attorney, and clerk of the circuit and district courts of said district of Montana, and all other officers and persons performing duties in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the powers and perform the duties lawfully possessed and required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States, and shall for the services they may perform receive the fees and compensation allowed by law in the State of Oregon to other similar officers and persons performing similar duties.

SEC. 41. That all cases of writ of error or appeal heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon any record from the supreme court of the Territory of Montana, or that hereafter may be lawfully prosecuted from either of said courts, may be heard and determined by said Supreme Court of the United States; and where the same arose within the limits of said State, the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit or district court herein provided for, or to the supreme court of said State, as the nature of the case may require; and each of said last-mentioned courts shall be the successor of the supreme courts of said Territory as to all such cases, with full power to proceed with the same and to award mesne or final process therein; and that from all judgments and decrees of the supreme court of said Territory, rendered prior to the admission of said State, the parties to such judgments and decrees shall have the same right to prosecute writs of error and appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States as they shall have had prior to such admission; and as to all such cases arising within the limits of said State, the like subsequent proceedings shall be had therein as aforesaid.

SEC. 42. That in respect of all cases, proceedings, and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of the Territory of Montana, at the time of the admission of said State into the Union, arising within the limits of said State, whereof the circuit or district court by this act established might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases, the said circuit and district courts respectively shall be the successors of said supreme and district courts of said Territory; and all the files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating thereto shall be transferred to said circuit and district courts respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law: Provided, however, That in all civil actions, causes, and proceedings in which the United States is not a party such transfer shall not be made except upon the written request of one of the parties to such action or proceeding filed in the proper court.

SEC. 43. That the Legislature provided for in said constitution shall have the power to provide, by an act to that effect, for the transfer of all actions, cases, proceedings, and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of the Territory of Montana, at the time of the admission of said State into the Union, arising within the limits of said State, and not included within the provisions of the foregoing section, to such courts as shall be established under the constitution to be thus formed; and no indictment, action, or proceeding shall abate by reason of any change in the courts, but the same shall be transferred to and proceeded with in the State courts according to the laws thereof.

SEC. 44. That sections 16 and 36 in every township within said State, or in case any of said lands have been disposed of under the provisions of any act of Congress to settlers or purchasers from the United States, or in case any of said sections 16 and 36 are fractional in quantity, or wanting by reason of the township being fractional, or shall be found, when surveyed, to be mineral lands, other lands equivalent in quantity thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than 40 acres, to be selected within said State as the constitution and Legislature thereof may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby granted to said State, when admitted, for school purposes.

SEC. 45. That the grant of 500,000 acres of unappropriated lands of the United States made to said State, on its admission, by the provisions of section 2378 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, may be used for school purposes; and said land shall be selected within said State as provided in the preceding section of this act.

SEC. 46. That seventy-two other sections of the unappropriated non-mineral public lands of the United States within said State, to be so selected as aforesaid, are hereby likewise granted to said State for the use and support of an agricultural college and for the promotion of industrial science therein.

SEC. 47. That fifty other sections of such lands, to be selected as aforesaid, are hereby likewise granted to said State for the erection and maintenance of suitable public buildings at the seat of government thereof, when permanently located, for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes.

SEC. 48. That ten other sections of such lands, to be selected as aforesaid, are hereby likewise granted to said State for the erection of a State penitentiary therein.

SEC. 49. That ten other sections of such lands, to be selected as aforesaid, are hereby likewise granted to said State for the erection of an asylum for the insane therein.

SEC. 50. That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said State shall be paid to said State for school purposes.

SEC. 51. That the lands granted by this act shall not be sold for less than $5 per acre, and the proceeds of those granted for school purposes, as well as all moneys paid to said State under the provisions of the preceding section, shall constitute a permanent fund, the interest only of which shall be expended for the support of the public schools therein.

SEC. 52. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall ascertain and audit the expenses incident to the formation of said constitution and the submission of the same to the people of said proposed State, including such compensation to the officers and members of said convention as is allowed to the officers and members of the Territorial Legislature; and the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment thereof: Provided, That any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I desire to submit a brief statement in support of the amendment which has just been read.

The Territory of Montana was organized in 1864. It has for twenty-two years contained a law-abiding, conservative, and upright community. Its record in that respect will compare favorably not only with any of the Territories, but with any of the States. At this time it is practically out of debt and advancing rapidly in all its resources. It has fourteen organized counties, an area of 143,776 square miles, and a total of 92,016,600 acres. Of this acreage there are 30,574,640 acres contained in Indian and military reservations. It is claimed by those informed upon the subject that about 20,000,000 acres in Montana may properly be termed farming lands, adapted to grain-raising and other purely agricultural pursuits. Fifty million acres are termed grazing lands, adapted by nature to the culture of live stock. The other portions of the Territory are composed of timber, mineral, and mountainous lands; nearly all of the country, however, thus designated producing fine grasses for stock-raising purposes.

During the year 1885 the official report of the Territorial auditor shows that there were 613,882 head of cattle, valued at $14,011,008; 114,925 horses, valued at $4,080,608; 798,682 sheep, valued at $1,831,079; 2,444 mules, valued at $134,101, and other live stock in proportion in the Territory. Experienced stockmen state that the grazing-grounds of Montana constitute the best place for maturing cattle on the American continent. Live stock require no other food in that Territory than that which nature spontaneously gives from one end of the year to the other.

In the year just closed—1885—there were assessed and returned 919,072 acres of lands with their improvements, valued at $7,710,346, and 83,531 town lots with improvements, valued at $8,441,975. The aggregate value of all the property in the Territory assessed for the purposes of taxation was shown to be $52,847,536. It must be borne in mind, however, that by acts of Congress there have been granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company 20,500,000 acres of lands in Montana Territory which are not assessed or returned as taxable property. They enter, however, properly into an estimate of the resources of the Territory. If estimated at $1.25 per acre, which is a very moderate valuation, it will be found that the lands thus granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company amount in value to $25,625,000. There are also 820 miles of railroad of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company which, by act of Congress, is exempt from taxation in the Territory, but which will become taxable when Montana becomes a State.

The mining interests in Montana are of great importance, and claim our consideration. Small quantities of gold were first discovered in 1861. Within the next year or two mining was commenced, and people flocked to that Territory from every State in the Union. The mining for ten years thereafter was what is termed "placer diggings," and yielded from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 per annum. "This class of mines, being of easy access and requiring no capital, were rapidly exhausted. As they gave out gold and silver quartz mining was commenced, which required capital as well as muscle, and was at first slow in development. Ten years ago the yield from quartz mining was not over $1,000,000 per annum; now it is, as stated, about $21,000,000." It will be readily understood that such interests as I have mentioned, and especially the mining interest, would call together rapidly a hardy and industrious population. The governor of the Territory, in his report of October 4, 1885, to the Secretary of the Interior, says:

Our mines employ thousands of men—the best paid labor in the world—and make a home market for our farmers, thereby insuring profitable cultivation and settlement of the country. It is fair to say that grazing cattle, sheep, and horse raising do not depend upon the successful working of our mines; but the grazing capacity of the territory is limited, and the tendency is for the cattle to accumulate in the hands of a few persons, principally because large herds can be handled at less cost per head than small ones. Hence, if this was the only occupation, our population would be small. Though the development of our quartz mines has hardly commenced, they produced, as already shown, in the past twelve months $20,250,000.

It is stated upon the authority of Mr. Harrison, late United States assayer, that the exports from the Territory for the year 1885 were substantially as follows:

Silver, gross value	$10,000,000
Copper, gross value	7,000,000
Gold, gross value	2,500,000
Lead, gross value	750,000
Beef-cattle (75,000 head), gross value	4,500,000
Wool (6,000,000 pounds), gross value	1,400,000
Peltries and furs, gross value	250,000
Total gross value of exports	26,400,000

In addition to the 820 miles of the Northern Pacific Railroad traversing the Territory from the east to the west, it has two additional branches, one the park branch, connecting it with the Yellowstone National Park, and the other the Wickes branch, connecting Helena, Mont., with the town of Wickes and surrounding mining country. The people of Montana also have a connection with the Union Pacific Railroad at Ogden, by virtue of the Utah and Northern Railroad, that line being some 400 miles in extent. There are also two new roads in process of construction in the Territory, adding about 120 miles of railroad transportation. It will be seen, therefore, that the taxable and non-taxable property in the Territory must be in excess of $100,000,000.

In regard to population, there is no entirely reliable basis on which to make an estimate. The census of a large and sparsely populated country is necessarily always very imperfect. An election involving important domestic interests and strong feeling is a far surer test of the number of inhabitants, and yet a very marked per cent. must always be allowed for the stay-at-home vote; in fact, it is the stay-at-home vote which determines all elections where parties are anything like evenly balanced. This is much more certain to be the case in a Territory where people live at long distances from polling-places than in populous States or cities. Bearing these facts and circumstances in mind, we find that nearly a year and a half ago, at the fall election in 1884, there were cast in Montana Territory, in choosing a Delegate in Congress, 26,969 votes—say, in round numbers 27,000 votes. Allowing five persons to a voter, we find a population at that time in Montana of 135,000. There is no doubt that the actual population considerably exceeded that number at that time.

Within the last eighteen months an unusual tide of immigration has been going into Montana, and by the time, and perhaps sooner than, she can equip herself with a constitution and perform all that is required of her under the enabling act which I propose in order to become a State, she will have a population ample and satisfactory to the most exacting. I may say that at the present time her Delegate in the House represents more voters than many of the most distinguished members now in the House of Representatives. Even the Speaker of the House himself represents a district casting not nearly so many votes as the Territory of Montana at her last election. Of the three hundred and twenty-five members of the House of Representatives there are at least two hundred seats filled by gentlemen whose districts contain a much smaller voting population than the Territory whose admission as a State I am now advocating. When I reflect that the great State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor was admitted into the Union with but thirteen organized counties, 12,112 voters, and a total population of 63,897, I am at a loss for any argument or reason with which to oppose the transformation of Montana or any other Territory so well equipped into a State.

If we look for some of the evidences of civilization in that Territory, they are very easily and abundantly found. The cause of education has not been neglected. School-houses and institutions of learning are to be found everywhere, affording educational privileges equal to the most favored communities in the States. The valleys and the mountains are also enlivened by the sound of "church-going bells" on every hand. For the diffusion of intelligence there are between thirty and forty newspapers in full and active operation, and there are twenty-eight banking houses to be found in the Territory for the accommodation of trade and business.

The Territory is bountifully watered and rendered attractive by the rivers Missouri, Yellowstone, Gallatin, Madison, Jefferson, Bitter Root, Blackfoot, and Big Horn. Its climate is such that stock feed in pasture lands the year round without shelter and without other food than that which the face of the earth prepares. I hold in my hand an address submitted to the people of the Territory by a committee of her citizens, from which I take the following:

We have within Montana all the elements of solid and enduring wealth; a climate, for health, vigor, and real enjoyment, unsurpassed on the face of the globe; an area of country nearly as large as the New England States; mines which are to-day the most prolific in the world; our facilities for raising live-stock most cheaply, but with great profit, are unequaled, and are attracting the stock-men throughout the States; our soil is rich and wonderfully productive of all the necessaries and many of the luxuries of life; our school and mail facilities are excellent; tens of thousands of live stock are now being driven from the States to Montana as a profitable enterprise; manufactures are increasing; our towns and cities are building; railroads traverse the Territory from different directions; the compensation for labor is liberal; these and other considerations are now conducing to bring settlers in great numbers and capital in large amounts within our Territorial limits.

At the opening of the present session I announced my purpose to vote for the admission, or for enabling acts looking to the admission, as States of Dakota, Washington, and Montana Territories. I believe each of them is amply prepared for all the duties and responsibilities of American States. A Territory is in no sense a self-governing community. It is in the swaddling-clothes of infancy, hampered and impeded in its growth at every step. Its principal and most important public officials are not of its choosing nor responsible to the people. A sense of dependence weighs down and embarrasses the people of a Territory in all their efforts at development and progress. There is a looking toward the seat of government, either with apprehension or with hope, that is inconsistent with any self-reliant, independent-minded community.

The true policy of this Government, as I have always understood it, is to place local self-government in the hands of the people as rapidly as possible. "Home rule" is a favorite idea with free people. Popular sovereignty over the domestic concerns of a people is not a misapplied term, and the sooner a community with sufficient numbers and resources can emerge from a state of dependence into one of such sovereignty the better for it and the better for the General Government. Why do the people not only of Montana but of each of the Territories I have mentioned press eagerly forward for admission into the Union? When they become States their expenses will be increased; they will pay their own salaried officers, their own courts, and other officials. In a hundred different ways they will assume greater burdens as States than they have as Territories; but it is the natural love of an American citizen to attend to his own home affairs in his own way which impels the people of a Territory to wish to become the citizens of a State. With local self-government comes an added sense of dignity and strength. To be numbered as one of the stars upon the flag, instead of an unplaced, non-voting Territory, makes a wide difference in the estimation of those who value our American institutions.

Sir, the admission of the three States of Dakota, Washington, and Montana will mark an important epoch in American history. They will stand together as the great Northwest bulwark of the Republic. They are entitled to come in together and to start even in their march of development, wealth, civilization, and glory. If the amendment which I have offered, granting an enabling act to Montana, shall be adopted by the Senate, I predict the addition of three stars to the flag within the next twelve months. To defeat this amendment will be felt by the friends of Montana as a discrimination against her without just cause. I hope that no such discrimination will be made by the Senate.

I content myself with this brief statement, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, in saying to the Senate that I hope it will not adopt this amendment I desire to particularly disclaim any opposition to the admission of Montana into the Union after proper investigation and proper consideration of the case of Montana.

Speaking for myself and upon present information, I am inclined to think that at a proper time and upon a proper bill and in a proper way I shall be in favor of an enabling act for Montana; but I can not to-day commit myself even that far. I state my impression and my inclinations from what I have already learned of the coudition of that Territory; but I do not think it right to attach or to attempt to attach this amendment to the bill for the admission of Washington Territory. Indeed I think it is subject to a point of order, which I do not propose to make, but which I think might be made, that it is not germane to the bill. You might as well in a discussion such as we had this morning in the morning hour, when one bill is up for chartering a railroad corporation, attempt to amend it by putting on a provision for the chartering of another railroad corporation. I do not know that it is absolutely open to the point of order, but this measure is one which should stand by itself.

There is another reason why I think it ought not to be done. I do not wish to complain, but I think it just a trifle discourteous to the committee before whom that subject is pending to attempt to forestall the action of the committee in this way. It is true that no bill for an enabling act is pending before the Committee on Territories, but it is also true that a bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], admitting the State upon a constitution adopted by the people some two years ago, is pending before the committee, and that some facts have been presented to the committee by the Delegate of the Territory, and that the committee is considering the question, and for one, speaking for myself, I think favorably considering it, though there has been no final hearing or final action upon it.

Without meaning to complain, I think it is just a trifle discourteous for the Senator from Indiana to take the matter out of the hands of the committee and ask to put upon a bill here which ought to stand by itself an enabling act for Montana, not only changing his ground himself, but asking that a bill shall be put on here by way of amendment which has not been considered by the committee which has the subject of the admission of Montana as a State before it.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it will not embarrass the Senator to yield at this time to permit me to say a single word, I might as well do it now as hereafter.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is hardly necessary for me to disclaim even that trifle of discourtesy which has been attributed to me. I am quite incapable of anything of the kind. It never occurred to me that it could be possibly so construed. Early in the session I introduced a bill providing for the admission of Montana. I did not complain of the committee that they reported one bill sooner than another; but when they came forward with an enabling act for Washington Territory, I confess as long as I have been here it never occurred to me that it would be discourteous to them for me to offer an amendment to the bill, an amendment, too, which was not pending before the committee. This amendment has not been before the committee. It is a different measure that is there.

I wish the Senator from Connecticut distinctly to understand, however it may appear, that the furthest thing from my intention was to treat the committee with any kind of disrespect, and I do not see even the trifle of discourtesy which he speaks of.

Mr. PLATT. I did not speak of it with any feeling whatever, or with any intention of imputing to the Senator from Indiana any desire to do anything which might seem in any way to reflect upon the action of the committee. I knew that he did not so intend; but I was merely speaking of it to enforce the idea that in the admission of a State we certainly ought to proceed in the ordinary and usual and orderly method. It should receive the consideration of the committee, as I assure the Senator Montana will receive a fair consideration; and I think I may say for the whole committee one thing more, that the committee will strain a point to find that Montana possesses the qualifications which entitle her to admission into the Union.

I sympathize with all the Senator says about the three States which are to constitute the bulwark of the Northwest, but I insist upon it that a matter of so great importance as the admission of a State should not be taken up in this way; and I insist upon it that Washington Territory has a right to stand alone and Montana Territory has a right to stand alone.

Having said this much, and repeating that so far as I am personally concerned I believe my inclinations are and my final conclusion is likely to be in favor of Montana, I leave the subject, simply saying that I do not think the time has come for action upon that question, and that it ought to stand alone, and that Washington Territory ought to stand by itself.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, though feeling a very deep interest in the pending bill, and having contributed as I could to the framing of it, I had not intended to take any part in the discussion of it.

I was very much pleased when the Washington Territory bill came before the Senate for discussion to find that its friends were not all to be found on this side of the Chamber, and I listened with great interest and delight to the able and instructive speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in favor of the bill. His description of the resources and power and future greatness of this new State on the North Pacific was entrancing and full of most valuable facts.

But it is proposed now to constitute two States, to bring them in as Siamese twins. To that proposition I object. I believe it is the first time in the history of legislation upon this subject that a bill for the admission of a State into the Union was proposed to be put upon its passage without the consideration of a committee. The proposition involves, as every such proposition does, a great deal of detail. The adjustment as to the methods of calling a constitutional convention, the ordinances which shall be passed by the convention as a condition to the admission of the State into the Union, the establishment of courts, their jurisdiction, and the necessary arrangements for the orderly transfer of civil and criminal causes, which may be pending in the Territorial courts, to the proper courts of the State or of the United States, the provision as to grants of public lands and the uses which may be made of them by the State, the limitations, if any, which shall be put upon the power of the State in dealing with her school lands—all of these are subjects of difficult consideration. I say this because I have had a good deal of experience in such matters considering the time I have been in public life. I know how much time I myself have spent over some of the bills in my charge in comparing them with previous enactments of Congress in relation to other States in order to ascertain what the precedents had been and in carefully considering the provisions, that there might be no lapse of justice in the transfer of causes, and no profligacy or mismanagement by the State in dealing with the great fund which the Government puts in its hands.

It seems to me that any such bill should have the consideration of a committee. I do not say this because the subject would be intrusted to my committee. I should say it equally if it was to be intrusted to any other committee of the Senate. I simply desire to make the point that legislation involving so much detail, so much that is important, so much that requires care, should not be passed by the Senate without consideration by a committee.

I say to my colleague that, as he knows, there are not probably five Senators on the floor of the Senate who know what the details of the amendment are, and they will not know; so that after all, if it is to be considered here, it has his attention, and I have no doubt he has given it great care, it has had probably to a limited extent the attention of the Senator from Connecticut, and when we have said that we have said all. Nobody else has examined it; no one can take time now to take it up in detail and compare it with the precedents and see whether it follows the ordinary course of legislation on these subjects. Therefore it seems to me that at the outset an amendment of this kind proposing to attach to the Washington bill a bill for the admission of another State, ought not to be considered by the Senate without first having been considered by the appropriate committee.

As my colleague has just said no proposition for an enabling act for Montana has ever been referred to the Committee on Territories. Another proposition introduced by him, not very early in the session, but about the 20th of January, proposing the admission of Montana Territory under a constitution which her people had formed, is now pending before the Committee on Territories; and if there was any intention to suggest that the Committee on Territories were tardy in dealing with that question, I have an observation or two to submit.

In the first place, we had no information submitted in connection with the bill or with the constitution. It had been adopted two years before any steps were taken by anybody in Montana Territory to bring it to the attention of Congress. It had apparently slept for two years. It was a very considerable time after the bill had been referred to the committee before anybody appeared from the Territory of Montana to give us any necessary information; and finally, six weeks ago, or something like that, a statement was submitted by Mr. TOOLE, the delegate in the House from the Territory of Montana, as to the resources and population of Montana.

For one, I am not prepared to say that we shall put the people of Montana Territory to the expense of organizing another constitutional convention and doing their work over again. I am not prepared, for one, to say now that we should reject the overtures which the people of that Territory have made and have put into shape in the form of the constitution presented. My colleague acted upon that. He proposed to the Senate and to the committee that we should admit Montana under a constitution already framed, and that proposition is still pending. Now, it is proposed to abandon all that and to start anew in an enabling act. Perhaps there may be circumstances connected with the organization and work of that constitutional convention which may justify us in doing that, but, for one, I am not prepared now to say that there are. I believe that it is competent for the people of a Territory in an orderly and proper way to organize a convention, frame a constitution, and submit it to Congress for its approbation. The people of Montana claim that they have done that, and their proposition is now pending. The new proposition by way of an amendment to this bill is to throw all that work aside, to reject their overtures to come in under the constitution which they have framed, and to start them anew in the work of framing a new constitution. That is something which is worthy of consideration by some committee of this Senate before we determine upon it.

In the next place, Mr. President, there are circumstances connected with the case of Montana that would justify investigation. The Committee on Territories—I think I may speak for them in saying that a majority of that Committee—have not been technical in judging of the qualifications of a Territory applying to be constituted into a State; and yet we have constantly been met with the suggestion that unless we could demonstrate to Congress that the Territory applying for admission had a population equal to the unit of representation in the House of Representatives, there was no use of us reporting a bill for the admission of that State. That has not been my view. I have repeatedly said that I would not stand upon a nice question of the exact ratio of representation. I have said and I say now that when we have a great Territory with a great people, approaching somewhat near the unit of representation, for one I would not interpose that objection as a barrier to its admission as a State; and yet the showing made by my honorable friend the Delegate from Montana of population does not reach that amount. It is by estimate upon the last vote. My colleague has so stated, and I have no doubt that in his zeal and his laudable zeal and interest for Montana he has probably claimed for her all that he justly could. I am not now impeaching the claim, but the claim is made that 115,183 is the population according to the vote in November last, and of course the winter is not a time of great increase of the population of these Northern Territories.

Mr. President, if there is one Territory in the Union above another that I have a personal interest in it is Montana. I have a wider acquaintance with her people, I have more friends there, I have spent more time pleasantly within her borders than in any other Territory of the United States. I can have no other feelings toward her claims for admission than those of the most friendly sort. For one if I shall be encouraged to believe that we are not to be met by strict judgment as to the number of her population, I shall be quite content to consider her claims for admission under the constitution she has formed or to give her an enabling act under which she may form another. And yet, Mr. President, every one who knows Montana, who knows Washington, who knows Dakota, understands perfectly that the conditions are very different in those three Territories.

In her great grazing lands, in her capacity for agriculture in her valleys by irrigation, and in her vast mineral wealth—in these three great sources of development and wealth Montana has a combination that the other Territories do not possess; and yet, of course, it must be conceded that in States where agriculture is only possible by irrigation a dense population comes somewhat slowly. I have no doubt Montana has a great future before her, but of course the progress of her development and settlement has been slow in comparison with these other Territories that offer without irrigation a return from agriculture, and yet I fancy that in the future with these three great sources of wealth developed and some additional development of intercommunication between different parts of her territory, Montana as a State will rank among the proudest in the Union. But I do not believe that we ought to undertake to pair these States in this bill. I believe that it is due to the Senate—I make no claim for the Committee on Territories—it is due to the Senate and to the importance of this question that the details of this proposed legislation shall have the careful consideration of some committee of the Senate in order that it may be compared with other bills that have been reported and passed and with the legislation in previous Congresses upon the same subject.

Mr. President, there can be no occasion, as I think, for uniting two States in one bill. These propositions are distinct. I do not know a single consideration that is not absolutely distinct as applied to the two States. The question of population must be considered for each alone. The question of the capacity to sustain an increasing population must be considered for each alone. The question of area is a separate consideration. There is not a common consideration between these two things—not one. They are two entirely distinct and separate propositions resting upon different facts, and are only common in the general proposition that they look to the admission of States into the Union.

I now say for the committee that if my colleague chooses to change the form of his suggestion for the admission of Montana into an enabling act and will have such a proposition referred to the committee, it will receive its prompt and careful consideration, and so far as I am individually concerned no technical considerations as to the exact qualifications as to population of this Territory shall stand in the way of appropriate legislation in her behalf.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] commit himself to the proposition that if an enabling act for Montana should be referred to the Committee on Territories it would have his prompt and candid consideration. I regret somewhat that he had not felt able to make an announcement of that kind a month ago. The bill of the honorable Senator from Indiana who sits nearest me [Mr. VOORHEES] has been before the committee since some time in January, and yet if any action has been taken on it, as a member of the committee I am unadvised of it.

Mr. HARRISON. It is in the hands of a subcommittee.

Mr. BUTLER. But the subcommittee has not reported, and no action has been taken on it. This amendment was offered on the 30th of March to be a part of this bill, and if the Senator is not in possession of its details it seems to me that he never will be. I submit now to the fairness and candor of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] if it is exactly the right thing at this juncture, after this Territory has been before the Committee on Territories for more than two months, to interpose such an objection as I have heard fall from both those Senators.

The Senator from Connecticut, as I understand, says that it might be subject to a point of order, that it was not perhaps treating the Committee on Territories with that consideration and respect to which they were entitled, that it amounted almost to discourtesy, and the Senator from Indiana says that there is no occasion for bringing in these two Territories as Siamese twins; that they are two separate and distinct propositions, one for the admission of Washington Territory and one for Montana Territory.

Mr. President, this amendment is perfectly simple, perfectly plain, easily understood, requiring no investigation, for if the statement made by the Senator from Indiana himself is true, and I have no doubt it is, it requires no examination at the hands of the Committee on Territories. In this amendment introduced by the Senator from Indiana near me [Mr. VORHEES] are ample provisions for every single detail that is required for a Territory in receiving an enabling act. Here are the arrangements for the courts, the arrangements for the elections by qualified voters, for the school lands, and every detail is arranged in this amendment which could possibly be provided for if the measure was before that committee for two months.

My rule in reference to this matter is this: Whenever I become satisfied that a Territory has the necessary conditions for Statehood, I am and have always been willing to give that Territory an enabling act and let her people determine for themselves whether they desire to come in. That is the case here. The lines of boundary of this Territory are distinctly marked in the amendment. Everybody knows what the boundary lines of the Territory of Montana are. She has a population, according to the statement of the Senator from Indiana, of 115,000, estimated perhaps twelve months or two years ago.

Mr. HARRISON. Last November.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator's colleague stated 135,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. I estimated it on the basis of the election in November, 1884.

Mr. BUTLER. That estimate was made in November, 1884.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is mistaken. I referred to the paper submitted by Mr. TOOLE. If the increase in 1885 should be in the same ratio as that of 1884, the population in November, 1885, would be 115,183. That is Mr. TOOLE'S statement.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator to say, not only in this debate but in the debate on Dakota, that he would not interpose technical objections as to population if he became satisfied that the people were in a condition to exercise the functions of a State; that he himself would interpose no technical or frivolous objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I said so, and I understood the Senator to say he would not consent to the admission of a State without clear proof that she had 152,000 population.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir, the Senator is entirely mistaken about that. I said I would not consent to the admission of a State without an enabling act such as is proposed here. Of course I did not intend to commit myself to the proposition that I would vote for the admission of a State with 50,000 inhabitants, or 25,000 inhabitants, or 75,000; but when the vote at the last election was between twenty and thirty thousand, I scarcely think the Senator from Indiana can object if that is the fact. He laid very considerable stress in a former discussion on the vote in another Territory, Dakota; and if Montana had between twenty and thirty thousand votes at the last election, as I understand to be the fact, it is more than many districts of the United States have that have sent members to the other House of Congress.

So, sir, as I am satisfied that Montana does possess all the conditions necessary for Statehood, I shall vote for this amendment. She has the population, the territory, the wealth, the resources, the laws regularly enforced, a law-abiding population. In relation to this amendment, providing for a State republican in form, I can see no force in the objections urged by the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Indiana. The objections are purely technical; they are without merit, and it seems to me are intended simply for the purpose of obstructing the admission of Montana into the Union.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator from South Carolina; and it seems to me that if there is to be any suggestion that anything is obstructive it is that this amendment is in the nature of an obstruction, and I think that my opposition and the opposition of the Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, is something more than technical. If I did not, I would not stand upon it. I think it is a principle. I think that when we object to the tacking on of this amendment to the bill for the admission of Washington Territory we insist upon a principle in two particulars: In the first place, the admission of a State is a matter important enough to receive consideration in the ordinary, usual way; and, second, when a Territory asks admission into the Union no condition should be attached to it, provided that Territory shows her right to admission. In other words, when Washington comes here and asks to be admitted as a State nothing should be added to that bill which says, "We will let you, Washington, become a State, provided Montana can become a State at the same time."

Mr. BUTLER. Nobody has made any such statement as that. The Senator knows perfectly well that I am in favor of the admission of Washington Territory. I voted for it in committee, and am going to vote for it on the floor of the Senate. Nobody has made any such proposition as that.

The Senator says this is a violation of principle, because in his estimation (and in mine, for I agree with him as to that) a bill of so important a character as this should have investigation and deliberate consideration by a committee. Now I ask the Senator whether or not in his judgment two months' time is not sufficient to enable any committee of this body to give proper consideration to a measure of this kind.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from South Carolina has put two or three things to me which I must answer; I will try to take them seriatim.

I did not mean to say that the Senator from South Carolina or the Senator from Indiana made that proposition in so many bald words, "Washington must not come in unless Montana comes in, too, and in the same bill;" but that is the practical effect; that is the principle, as it seems to me, which is at issue between us. We say that Montana should receive consideration as Washington has, should be reported from the committee just as Washington has been. If it shows qualifications which fairly entitle it to admission to the Union, or which by straining a point entitle it to admission to the Union, then it should receive the report of the committee and be acted on independently; or if Montana had been taken up first and reported, it should pass by itself and not have an amendment here which in effect says, "The bill for the admission of Montana can not be passed unless Washington Territory is coupled with it." I think there is a principle, and it is the principle that each State that asks for admission into the Union has a right to stand on its own set of facts and circumstances and have the question determined on those.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. I am answering the Senator's questions.

Mr. BUTLER. I will remind the Senator of one question—how long does he think the committee ought to consider the proposition?

Mr. PLATT. I was coming to that. Now take the case of Washington Territory. It has been before the Committee on Territories, I venture to say, for three years. These things can not be done in a moment. The bill was reported at the last session of Congress after it had received thorough consideration in the committee. I do not think it was reported after the organization of Congress this winter within two months, though I may be mistaken. It took considerable time to reconsider and re-examine——

Mr. HARRISON. I think more than two months.

Mr. PLATT. Of course I can not speak except from recollection, but I know that it took considerable time to re-examine the question of the propriety of the admission of Washington Territory. I do not think there has been any laches here in that regard. The committee has not reported—not upon this bill, but upon the bill providing for the admission of Montana under a constitution that she formed. If the Senator from South Carolina insists that by reason of this the committee has been guilty of laches, there is an issue which I should like to have determined by the Senate. If the Senator from South Carolina insists that the neglect of the committee is a justification for taking this matter out of the hands of the committee and insisting that these two bills shall be coupled together, then it amounts to an absolute reflection on the committee. But, as it seems to me, there has been no laches; the committee has not been indifferent to this subject; it has been obtaining information in relation to it; and, as I remarked before, to say that that is the reason why this amendment is proposed is to charge direct laches on the committee, and upon that issue the committee would like to submit whether it is to be vindicated or whether it is to be condemned. I do not think the Senator from South Carolina will want to put the question in that way.

So it seems to me that it comes back after all to this question, as to whether a State can get into this Union without making a bargain at the same time with another State to come in. That was the old practice, but it was because of a particular question that convulsed, so to speak, the whole country, and that time has passed away. I think it was felt then that it was an exceedingly bad practice, and only resorted to to preserve the harmony of the relations existing between different sections of the country. I do not think it is right; I do not think it was ever right, and I think that in this case there is nothing whatever to justify it.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire that my friend from Connecticut shall understand that I am making no charges whatever against the committee. I am simply making a statement of facts and the facts must take care of themselves. If the mere statement of those facts develops the condition of things to which the Senator has just called attention I am not responsible.

I find that the bill for the admission of Washington Territory was introduced December 8. Leaving out the holidays of about two weeks, I find that it was reported with amendments on the 25th of January. I find that the bill for the admission of Montana was introduced on the 18th of January last, and we are now within a very few days of the 18th of April, nearly three months, and we have had no report yet. I do not know whether it is laches or neglect or indifference or what, but these are the facts and the Senate must judge of them.

My object in asking the Senator the question was to ascertain from him how long he thought a committee ought to consider a question of this kind, and whether the omission of the committee to consider—I will not say neglect or laches—but whether the omission to consider a proposition before it is to prejudice the rights of the people of Montana in this way.

If the Committee on Territories have not felt inclined to report favorably on the bill introduced by my friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] it would have been a very simple thing to have reported a substitute or reported it with amendments. Neither of these things has been done, and Montana is here knocking at the door just as Washington was. If Montana has not the necessary conditions to entitle her to become a State, either one of the Senators can demonstrate that fact I have no doubt very clearly to the Senate and the country; but no such pretense as that has been put up. Neither Senator denies that Montana has all the necessary conditions and qualifications for a State.

Mr. FRYE. How many inhabitants has she?

Mr. BUTLER. From 115,000 to 150,000; I do not exactly know how many. There has been no census taken.

Mr. VOORHEES. Last November a year ago they cast, in round numbers, 27,000 votes.

Mr. BUTLER. That was a larger number than I had heard—27,000 votes last November a year ago. So I repeat that there does not seem to me to be anything in the objection urged by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] or the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. The Senate is just as well informed to-day about the resources of Montana, and both those Senators are just as well informed to-day about the resources of Montana as they would be two months hence, and therefore there is nothing in that objection.

If the bill of my friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is to be buried indefinitely in the Committee on Territories, the sooner we are informed of it the better. We simply want to know exactly where we stand in regard to this matter. I am in favor of the admission of Washington Territory. Whether this amendment is adopted or not, I shall vote for its admission; but that is no reason, I submit with all respect and candor and frankness and fairness, why the Senate should not now consider the amendment in connection with Washington Territory and pass upon it and pass it and send it to the other House.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from South Carolina is a member of the Committee on Territories and an honored and influential member of it, the head of the minority of the committee. He seems to impute laches to the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. HARRISON. And yet it appears from his own statement that being a member of that committee he did not know that the bill of my colleague was pending there or that any action had been taken on it in committee at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I said no such thing. I did not state that I was not aware of the fact that the bill was pending. I knew there was such a bill pending.

Mr. HARRISON. I mean the Senator did not know of anything that had been done upon it in committee. The Senator from South Carolina being a member of the committee has never called it up in committee, I judge, and never made an inquiry about it in committee, I infer, because he tells us that he did not even know it was in the hands of a subcommittee or what action had been taken in relation to it. However subject the Committee on Territories may be to criticism from any one not a member of it, I submit that as a member of the committee the committee-room would be the place in which the Senator from South Carolina could call our attention most favorably to our duty with reference to the bills that are pending before the committee.

Now, Mr. President, just a word in reference to that. The bill before the committee is a bill to admit Montana Territory under the constitution already formed. Is the Senator from South Carolina in favor of that?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator knows perfectly well that I am not in favor of that.

Mr. HARRISON. Very good.

Mr. BUTLER. He knows perfectly well that I am not in favor of that. I am not only not in favor of Montana under the circumstances, but I am in favor of no other Territory coming in in that way, and the Senator knows it perfectly well.

Mr. HARRISON. Very good. Then the Senator is finding fault with us for not taking action in committee and reporting a bill which he opposes and would have opposed both in committee and on the floor of the Senate if it had been reported favorably. No such proposition as this now pending has been sent to the committee. The Senator himself, who shows such great eagerness now for the admission of Montana, did not introduce a bill in the nature of an enabling act, or propose in committee an amendment in the nature of an enabling act; and the bill pending before the committee, which he reproaches the committee for not taking earlier action upon, is a bill to which he is opposed and which he would have voted against in committee and here on the floor if reported.

Now, Mr. President, one word as to how the matter has gone in committee, and I think that disposes of it. Some gentlemen believe that a Territory has no right to organize a convention and form a constitution and submit it to us and ask to be admitted under it; and I am glad to know that my colleague is not one of those, for by the admission of the bill he has distinctly declared that he believed a Territory had a right to do that, and that Montana was entitled to the benefit of what she had done. He might make some complaint possibly, if the facts justified it, against the action of the committee, but those who take the ground that no Territory has a right to do that, and who would have opposed the legislation if it had been reported, certainly ought not to complain that they have not been sooner put in a position to vote against the bill in the Senate.

Mr. President, the fact is as I have stated as to Montana; the bill was referred to the committee, and I do not know how long it was, but a very considerable time afterward, before we heard from any one in reference to it. Finally, and after the lapse of some weeks' time—I will not undertake to say how many—the honorable governor of that Territory and the Delegate and others, the Delegate having been active in getting together some people to represent the Territory, came to the committee, or at least came to me, and stated certain facts with reference to it, and at my suggestion Mr. TOOLE prepared and had printed this statement as to the resources and population of Montana, and that took some considerable time. So I do not think we need spend any time here, nor do I think we need indulge in any imputation that there is any disposition to smother anything. If the bill was smothered, it was something that the Senator from South Carolina was opposed to and would have left to smother if we had put it on the Calendar to be voted on.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator now is putting up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking him down. I said nothing about smothering, and made no imputation on the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I retract that, then.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator himself is making the only imputations that have been made against the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. If I misunderstood the Senator, that is all of it.

Mr. BUTLER. He is the only one making such imputations (I will not say, because perhaps it would not be respectful, otherwise I might say by the absurd statements he is making about me) absolutely without foundation at all. I was simply stating the facts as they appear upon the record. If that is an imputation on the committee, the Senator must take the responsibility for it. That is all. The Senator knows perfectly well that I occupy the position of one of a very feeble minority in that committee.

Mr. HARRISON. A very strong minority.

Mr. BUTLER. Very feeble in numbers, and perhaps in intellect, as compared with the Senator and his colleagues.

Mr. HARRISON. A very strong minority.

Mr. BUTLER. If any imputation of laches and smothering has been made, the Senator perhaps has made it; and perhaps if he did not feel some guilt he would not be so sensitive.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator throws insinuations that I must feel some guilt. I assure him that his own conscience, his own sense of right or guilt, will give him full occupation, without taking care of mine; and I say this in entire friendliness, because I do not want to say anything unpleasant. I understood, and the Senator from Connecticut understood, that there was some reflection upon the committee for not taking earlier action on this bill. Now the Senator from South Carolina tells me he did not intend anything of that kind. That is the end of it, of course.

Now as to the other proposition, I do not want to debate it again. The Senator from Connecticut has stated it with great force. The question as to Montana is double. Shall she come in under an enabling act or under the constitution she has formed? I am perfectly willing to consider her claim under her constitution, because I believe that it was competent for her to have framed it and submitted it, and, as I have said already, this question has received and will receive early attention.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator why he objects to this form of admitting her under an enabling act? He does not object to the form he has just suggested. Why does he object to her coming in now under an enabling act?

Mr. HARRISON. I will answer the Senator's question, simply because I believe the people of Montana have taken perfectly lawful steps to come in in a more speedy way, if they are otherwise entitled to come in, and I do not believe we have a right to say to those people that the steps they have taken have been disorderly or in any such sense repugnant to the law or Constitution that we should disregard them.

Mr. BUTLER. Then if I understand the Senator correctly, if the other members of this body and if another body that I am not permitted to refer to here should not agree with the Senator, he says that he would not assent to her coming in at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Not at all. I have not said that at all. I am only speaking now of my own action here and my action upon the committee as to what it would probably be. I do not desire to say that I would, if it seemed to be the best and the speediest way for the admission of Montana, having the other conditions right, resist an enabling act, or that I would insist upon this constitution because it is subject in the particular case to the objection that two whole years elapsed after it was adopted before it was submitted to Congress at all, and of course in that time there has been a great change of population.

I only insist upon this, that we have here a distinct proposition for the admission of Washington Territory; that it has been considered with great care in committee and with extreme care by the Senator from Connecticut; that it is here for our action. I insist that those who believe that that bill is framed judiciously and that Washington Territory is entitled to admission ought not to be compelled in the same proposition to vote on the question of Montana's admission. They ought to stand independent, each for itself and upon its own merits.

The Senator says this is all perfectly plain; here is this amendment; it has in it all about the courts; it has in it all about the lands, and so on. That is very easy to be said; those provisions are all there; they may be accurate; they may be according to precedent; I do not know. I do not know whether the Senator does, whether he has compared them to see.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has had ten days, and he could have ascertained.

Mr. HARRISON. I have had ten days to ascertain. This amendment has been pending here that length of time, to be sure, but it has never been referred to the committee and never any obligation laid on me to give it any special attention, and my occupation has been such during that time that I have never had an opportunity to look at it until to-day.

But, Mr. President, though I have no doubt my colleague took great care about this, I may say to the Senate that nearly the entire vacation of the Senate during the holidays was spent by me in carefully examining the precedents as to land grants and courts in the case of Dakota, and the bill as originally introduced was crowded on every page of it with amendments that were made as the result of my observation and study. It is a subject that requires care. It is in a sense fundamental law, constitutional law, though it takes the form of a statute; and too great care can not be given to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, in regard to the question of delay on the part of the people of Montana in presenting their constitution and making application for admission it is but just to them that I should say a word. Two or three times in the course of this discussion my colleague has alluded to that fact as if an injurious one to them.

In November, 1884, the vote was taken upon the adoption of that constitution, and which vote was not canvassed until some time in December, perhaps the middle of the month. That session of Congress was a short session, and expired on the 4th of March, 1885, leaving to the people of Montana to transmit and present their constitution, memorial, &c., about two months and a half before the expiration of that Congress. I do not think it is fair to say that they were sleeping on their rights and were indifferent to their admission when this bill, which was presented on the 18th of January, has been as long in this committee without any report as the people delayed in its presentation to Congress. The constitution with a memorial was brought here by the present Delegate from the Territory at the opening of the present Congress. Soon after the holidays I presented it. I presented it with no other feeling than that of friendship for all these communities.

The Senator from Connecticut indulged in one remark which I do not think he ought to have used. The term "bargain" as applied to the admission of these States is an unjust one so far as my conduct is concerned, and a moment's reflection on his part would have shown him how unjust it was to make use of that word. I have been for the admission of all these Territories as States, and he well knew that fact. I went further than my friends on this side of the Chamber from the beginning of this question. I expect to vote for the admission of Washington Territory whether this amendment is voted up or voted down. I intend at the earliest opportunity to vote again for the admission of Montana. The course I have pursued has been one of liberality and friendship to these Territories.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator permit me a word?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I do not remember in what connection or with what meaning I used the word "bargain," if I used it at all.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understood the Senator to say that the time for admitting States by bargaining had gone by. I never knew that there was a time in the history of the American Republic when that was the order of the day.

Mr. PLATT. I referred to the time when, in the old slavery days, we had to pair new States and admit them in pairs, so to speak. That was all I referred to. I did not mean to say that there was any idea of bargaining about this matter.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am quite sure the Senator from Connecticut would attribute no unworthy motive to me if he had considered carefully what he said; but the use of that term in that connection grated harshly on my ear, because I have but one motive, I have but one policy to guide me. As I have already stated on the floor, I believe in the early admission of Territories as States; that is, as early as is consistent with their ability to conduct the affairs of States.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who so ably conducted the discussion on Dakota and here to-day, again states, as his view in regard to the circumstances under which a State should be admitted, that it should come here preceded by an enabling act, and I am not certain but that he is correct, although I gave a vote for Dakota different from that. I also introduced a bill to admit Montana, as has been said, without being preceded by an enabling act. I would vote for that now. But circumstances sometimes make a different line of action the wisest one, and I have thought that it would be wisest and best for Dakota and for Washington Territory and for Montana that they should be admitted as nearly together as possible, not by bargaining, but as the confirmation of a great and wise policy on the part of the General Government to devolve upon those communities the duties of States. Let them stand there together and start together.

I am not stopping to consider these matters in their relation to political parties. At the same time we are not so high above those considerations which control men as to be blind to facts of that kind. I should be very glad if the course of the Senate and of the opposite side of the Chamber should be such as to destroy the idea that there was any political discrimination on this subject in favor of some one Territory and against some other Territory. I should be glad to have the question solved without that, and it is the wise and fair way of doing it.

I have no aspersions to cast on the committee. The business of the committee is ably taken care of by the Senator from South Carolina, and in moving this amendment I had no thought of a discourtesy to the committee or of discharging it from the consideration of the question or destroying its fair and proper opportunity for a due and deliberate consideration of every question connected with it. But as that has been raised here, I think I am warranted in saying upon my general knowledge that there is nothing in the history or resources or condition of Montana Territory which is obscure to my colleague. I think him well informed and well versed upon her wants, her population, and her productive interests. He has himself stated here justly that he is very intelligent on these questions, that he has been among those people and that he has his friends there; and I am therefore warranted in drawing the conclusions that I do and that I did when I introduced this enabling act that there was not much necessity, perhaps none at all, on the part of the chairman of the committee to look further into the interests and claims of this great Territory, and I can certainly say it was with no view of depriving the committee of any opportunity to consider the question fully and fairly.

I sincerely hope, and I believe I am wise in expressing that hope, that this amendment will be adopted. I feel that it will be a hurtful, an injurious step in regard to the great interests out there that we all have at heart, to reject this amendment and let those people believe that they have been discriminated against when they present a Territory here casting more votes than are cast perhaps in elections to seats that are filled by two hundred members of the House of Representatives amply equipped for Statehood, and the result will be that there will be an inquiry, and not one to the advantage of the majority of this Senate, why this discrimination was taken.

I am not going to stand here to discuss the question of why the Washington Territory bill came out of the committee first. I am glad she came out, glad she came out when she did. I introduced the first bill for her admission on this floor at the present session of Congress, a bill prior to the one that is under consideration now. The committee saw fit to report the other bill, but I am glad they reported it and brought the subject out as they have. They reported a bill that had been before them of working days not over four weeks, counting holidays out of the time. From the 18th of January until now, over ten weeks have transpired since the bill on the subject of Montana was introduced. I shall not complain of that, because I believe it is a fair and legitimate way of bringing the matter before the minds of men, before the attention of the Senate; but I sincerely and earnestly believe that it will be a mistake, based upon a wrong policy, to vote down this amendment. If it is done, however, I shall not despair of soon seeing Montana treated with fairness and equality, and I shall hope before this Congress closes that she will have what is her due at this time, an enabling act at least for her admission as a State.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, in view of all that has been said in this discussion, I want it distinctly understood that I do not propose to make any discrimination against Montana. I want it distinctly understood that so far as my present impressions are concerned I am in favor of reporting some kind of a bill from the Committee for Montana; but I do insist—and I do not think that ought to be taken as a discrimination at all or as evidencing a desire to discriminate—that we ought not to couple the two together. That is all.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, as I do not intend to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] I wish to state briefly why.

I am in favor of the admission of Montana, and I am in favor of the admission of Washington, Dakota, and other Territories as fast as the population will warrant and the people of them desire it. I shall be quite easily satisfied as to the population whenever I am satisfied that the people in those Territories want to be admitted. I shall not inquire what may be their political conditions after admission. I regret now that the committee did not, at the same time that they reported this bill, report also a bill for the admission of Montana. I want to say to our friends on the other side of the Chamber that if the committee does not promptly report such a bill, I shall be one to vote an instruction to the committee that it shall so report.

I would prefer myself to vote for the constitution, if it is proper—and I do not understand there is any objection to it—submitted by the people of Montana, if that will have the practical effect of admitting them to the Union.

Mr. HARRISON. It does.

Mr. TELLER. I understand it does. I should prefer to vote for that, because it puts them in relations to the General Government in the speediest possible way. It has been my fortune to spend fifteen years in a Territory, and I need not say that an experience of that kind enables me to sympathize with a people who are denied the rights of national citizenship, a people who see their officers selected by those far off. I do not know what kind of officers are being selected for these Territories now; I know that there have been in the last twenty-five years many very unfortunate selections for the people of the Western Territories. At all events, even though the best men are sent there, we deny to those people the rights of American citizens; and whenever they are willing to take upon themselves the burden of sustaining a State government I am ready to vote for their admission without any inquiry as to what may be their politics when they come in. I will welcome Montana with its Democratic delegation if it is to have one—and it seems to be the impression that it will be of that character—as readily as I would welcome Dakota with its probable Republican delegation. I do not mean to know any politics in a question of this kind.

I do not vote for this amendment simply for the reason that I think each Territory ought to stand by itself. I want to repeat that I am prepared at any time to vote for an instruction to the committee to report either an enabling act or a bill for admission under the constitution, unless they can show good reason why that constitution should not be adopted by the people of Montana. I want to make a speedy end of the unnatural condition of these people in the West. I have no doubt that at this very session there will be a bill either to admit the people of Montana into the Union under the constitution they have adopted, or to give them an enabling act of this character. I think the committee should follow this bill promptly with a bill for the admission of Montana, not simply because they may not be of the same political faith as the people of Washington Territory, but because it is evident to everybody that the people of Montana want a State government, and it is evident to everybody who has given the slightest attention to it that they have the ability and are a class of people that can maintain at all times a high character of State government. I venture to say that the people of Montana are as capable to-day of discharging the functions of Statehood as the people of any State in the Union. They have not as many people as very many States, but they can do it as intelligently and as safely and as properly as any New England State, or any Middle State, or Western State, or any State in the Union; and there is not any reason why Montana should not be admitted at this session of Congress. There is not any reason why Washington should not be; and I am prepared to vote even for other Territories which have not yet come here if they show a disposition to demand of us Statehood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. VOORHEES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I intend to vote against this amendment, because I think the bills relating to these Territories should stand upon their respective merits. I am in favor of the bill now before the Senate and shall vote for it most cordially. I am in favor also of a bill preparing for the admission of Montana Territory. If its form shall be suitable I shall vote for it. I feel that we should have a recommendation from the Committee of the Senate on that subject before we are called upon to act. I am somewhat familiar with the interests and the resources of Montana Territory. The people are an intelligent, energetic, and active people, capable of assuming all the responsibilities of a sovereign State of the Union. They have all the requisites, it seems to me, to justify their admission into the Union of the United States.

I am in favor of the admission of all these Territories which have presented themselves at this session of Congress. The Territory of Dakota should be divided on the forty-sixth parallel of latitude, and it is a gross injustice to the southern portion of that Territory if she is not admitted as a State at this time. It will be an indignity to a large body of the citizens of the United States and depriving them of rights to which they are entitled if the Congress of the United States shall delay its action upon their admission after the termination of this session.

I shall vote for the admission of these Territories. I have been familiar with them for more than a quarter of a century. I have seen the whole area grow up, expand, and develop into its present condition, and I know what their abilities and their interests are.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if he believes Montana Territory has all the necessary qualifications for Statehood?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have already said so, and at this session I shall be prepared to vote on that question. So far as the question of politics is concerned, that does not affect me. I am willing to trust the people of all that region of country with the disposition of their own affairs. Whatever the politics of Montana may be, that is a question which the people will determine; and if a community like Southern Dakota is deferred in the exercise of her rights or is prevented from coming into the Union as a sovereign State on mere party grounds, it will be a gross injustice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HALE] is absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. MORRILL (when Mr. HARRIS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is absent, and I believe is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] has been called away from the Chamber for the rest of the day and for to-morrow. He is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is temporarily absent from the Capitol. He is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is absent from the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. My colleague would vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that my colleague [Mr. SEWELL] is absent, and I have voted on the question. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My colleague [Mr. ALLISON] is absent on account of sickness to-day. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. No; the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is now paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I vote "yea."

Mr. ALDRICH. I am paired on this question with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BECK (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and I withdraw my vote. When I voted I forgot that I was paired with an absent Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Berry,	Colquitt,	Jackson,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Fair,	Maxey,	Walthall,
Call,	Gorman,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Gray,	Pugh,

NAYS—23.

Blair,	Evarts,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,
Chace,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Conger,	Harrison,	Platt,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Logan,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	McMillan,	Sherman,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	George,	Kenna,	Plumb,
Allison,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Beck,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Harris,	Miller,	Vance,
Camden,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vest.
Cameron,	Ingalls,	Morgan,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EUSTIS. In the third section, second line, I move to insert the word "male," after "qualified;" so that the section shall read:

That in order to the formation of such State government the qualified male electors resident within said boundaries are hereby authorized, &c

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the woman-suffragist Senators in this body that I intend to offer additional amendments, the object of which shall be, first, that those who are authorized under this law to vote for delegates to the State convention shall be male citizens; secondly, that when the constitution is submitted to the people for adoption or rejection those who shall vote upon that question shall be male electors exclusively; and the third amendment which I shall offer will be that it shall be a condition of the admission of this State that the State constitution shall provide that the right of suffrage shall be limited to male citizens of that Territory.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the honorable Senator if he ought not to extend his notice. He says he confines his notice to the woman-suffragist Senators in this body, but his attack is upon the principle of self-government and the principle of State rights.

Mr. EUSTIS. The reason I said that I wanted to give those gentlemen notice is because it is to them that I intend particularly to address the few remarks which I propose to submit to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. President, this is the first time in the history of this Government that the Congress of the United States has ever been called upon to give its legislative sanction to woman suffrage; and in order that I may call the attention of the Senate to the importance of this question, I desire to read a few extracts from the speech of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], a speech which showed that he is, to say the least, a very earnest and very enthusiastic supporter of woman suffrage, and that he designs, so far as his support of this measure can aid in the execution of that design, to commit the Congress of the United States and the Government of the United States irrevocably in favor of woman suffrage in the Territories. He said:

Mr. President, there is another matter which I consider pertinent to this discussion, and of too much importance to be left entirely unnoticed on this occasion. It is something new in our political history. It is full of hope for the women of this country and of the world, and full of promise for the future of republican institutions. I refer to the fact that in Washington Territory the right of suffrage has been extended to women of proper age, and that the delegates to the constitutional convention to be held under the provisions of this bill, should it become a law, will, under existing laws of the Territory, be elected by its citizens without distinction as to sex, and the constitution to be submitted to the people will be passed upon in like manner.

Further on he said:

It is a significant fact that should Congress pass this bill and authorize the people of Washington Territory to frame a State constitution and organize a State government, the fundamental law of the State will be made by all the citizens of the State to be subject to it, and not by one-half of them. And we shall witness the spectacle of a State government founded in accordance with the principles of equality, and have a State at last with a truly republican form of government.

And then he went on:

I look upon the victories which have been achieved in the cause of woman enfranchisement in Washington Territory and elsewhere as the crowning victories of all which have been won in the long-continued, still-continuing contest between liberty and oppression, and as destined to exert a greater influence upon the human race than any achieved upon the battlefield in ancient and modern times.

The power as well as the responsibility of determining the final qualification of electors who are called upon and invited by Congress to perform the sovereign act of making a State constitution and of establishing a State government rests with and resides in Congress; and this is the first time that the Congress of the United States has ever been called upon to affirmatively declare that it indorses, encourages, promotes, and by the provisions of this bill I shall be able to show establishes, female suffrage.

What is the admission of a State, Mr. President? It is to convert a Territorial government, which is under the absolute dominion of Congressional legislation to-day, into a State government, by which the political relations of a State are to be established toward the Federal Government. And, therefore, it is a clear proposition to my mind that once Congress has committed itself to the permission or to the authorization or to the creation of a political constituency which is empowered to act as the sovereign people of a State, from that moment Congress is irrevocably and absolutely estopped and is bound by its own decision, is concluded by its own legislation with reference to a matter over which it had before exclusive and supreme jurisdiction. Having exercised that power, recognizing the responsibility of the exertion of that power, Congress is estopped from questioning or doubting or inquiring into any of the consequences or logical results of the exercise of that power. And, therefore, I would say that under this enabling act, if it passes without the amendments which I propose, admitting the constitutional qualifications of a female so far as the source of political power is concerned, the State of Washington could elect a female United States Senator, and I doubt very much whether she could be refused admission on this floor. Mr. President, one result that I see from this proceeding would be that the problem of secret sessions would be solved. [Laughter.]

And upon the question of the constitutional qualifications of a female Senator—I mean as to age, residence, and so on—I remember that Mr. Carpenter, in a very celebrated discussion in a contested-election case from Louisiana, expressed the opinion that he believed that a woman had the constitutional qualifications of being elected a United States Senator. Now, in this Territory 25 per cent. of the voters are females—one-fourth. In politics we would call that a very serious balance of power. I say that it is not an impossible event—whether it be desirable or not I shall not consider just now—Congress having created this political constituency and recognized that women have the right to vote in Washington Territory, that either one of these Houses should be confronted with the proposition whether or not they should have a female knocking at their doors for admission as a member. But it is not in apprehension of any such event that I offer my amendment. I offer it because I am opposed to woman suffrage toto cœlo. I will never vote, as I am invited to do under the provisions of this bill, in favor of woman suffrage in a Territory or anywhere else. The way that this bill is framed, accepting the qualifications of the electors such as they are declared or defined to be by the Territorial law passed in 1883——

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator excuse me for a moment?

Mr. EUSTIS. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator if he ever knew of any enabling act in any different language than this? Do not all such acts submit the question of admission to the qualified electors of the Territory?

Mr. EUSTIS. That may be; but I am not on the question of precedents. This is the first time, I say, that this question has ever been presented to the Congress of the United States. There has been no instance in the history of this Government where Congress, by accepting as the qualifications of the electors the qualifications which are created and defined by the Territorial law, included female voters of the Territory. That is done expressly by this bill, not in express terms so far as the explicit use of language is concerned, but it is done with equal force by referring to the qualifications which are declared under the Territorial law.

So far as there has ever been any action by Congress on this question it has been in opposition, in direct and emphatic opposition, to the proposition embodied in this enabling act, and I will refer to a vote of the Senate given on January 7, 1886. The Senate had under consideration the Edmunds polygamy bill.

Under the law passed in 1882 polygamous women, if that expression be correct, were disfranchised. The eighth section of the law reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

Therefore under the law of 1882 polygamous women were disfranchised. The bill which was reported at this session by the Senator from Vermont, who is the artifex maximus of all this legislation, contained this section:

SEC. 7. That it shall not be lawful for any female—

Not any polygamous female, not any Mormon female, but—

That it shall not be lawful for any female to vote at any election hereafter held in the Territory of Utah for any public purpose whatever, and no such vote shall be received or counted or given effect in any manner whatever; and any and every act of the governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah providing for or allowing the registration or voting by females is hereby annulled.

This was a law of Congress which proposed to disfranchise not Mormon women, not polygamous women, but to disfranchise any female because she was a female, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who felt this cruel blow at woman suffrage, allowed his Mormon antipathies to be dominated by his sympathy for woman suffrage, and voted against the passage of the Edmunds bill because the Senate refused to strike out this section 7 which I have just read. The Senator from Massachusetts showed his own consistency, and as the reason for his vote made this statement:

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say upon that question that I voted against the bill solely because of the refusal of the Senate to strike out the seventh section, which I think wrong in principle. If my vote would have affected the passage of the bill, which in all its other features I approve, it would have put a responsibility upon me and a majority of the Senate which I do not now feel rests upon me.

Only eleven Senators voted against striking out the section. It was retained in the bill and passed by the Senate.

The effect of that vote was perfectly well understood by those who claimed to represent the females of the United States upon the question of suffrage, for at the meeting of the Woman's Suffrage Association in Washington they passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we protest against the admission to the Union of any Territory the constitution of which shall contain a provision excluding women from the exercise of the electoral franchise.

* * * * * * *

Whereas a bill now pending before Congress, under the pretense of suppressing polygamy, proposes to disfranchise all the women of Utah, Gentile as well as Mormon: Therefore,

Resolved, That, while approving the action of Congress in making disfranchisement a penalty for the crime of polygamy, we indignantly protest against the injustice of punishing Gentile and non-polygamous Mormon women for crimes never committed, and that we call upon the national House of Representatives to strike out section 7 of the bill.

I say, then, that upon a question which had only a local application, which had no reference whatever to the creation or the establishment of a State government, which had no reference whatever to the formation of a State constitution, which had no reference whatever to the admission of a State into the Union, but simply upon a question of local domestic concern and application, the Senate of the United States by a vote of 38 yeas to 11 nays last January declared it to be the policy of Congress, the policy of the Government of the United States as a wise and proper policy, that females in the Territories of the United States should be disfranchised and should not be entitled to the right of suffrage.

Mr. FRYE. Was that as to Utah?

Mr. EUSTIS. Yes. Now, after this limited time has elapsed, upon a much graver proposition, upon the proposition of forming a State government, of forming a State constitution, and of having a Territory admitted into the Union by proclamation of the President of the United States, when the opportunity will not be afforded to Congress to revise, to review, or to ratify that constitution, a constitution formed by the aid and by the support of female suffrage in this Territory, we are asked to reverse the solemn judgment which we gave upon this identical question and to confer by our affirmative legislation the power of voting upon women, when we before declared that they ought to be disfranchised and they were disfranchised by the vote of this body.

If we have any respect for the consistency of legislation, if we desire to maintain the integrity of our convictions, if we intend that the votes which we cast in this body shall be considered as serious votes, I do not see how it is possible for a Republican Senator who voted against striking out that seventh section on the 7th of January, disfranchising women simply because they are women when they could only participate in the right of suffrage with reference to purely municipal and local affairs, to-day to occupy the attitude of favoring the bill as it is without being severely criticized, where the function of suffrage is much more significant, much more fundamental, much more potent, it being a question under this bill of the political organization of a government. I do not see how those Senators can reconcile voting to-day for this bill without this amendment with the vote which they cast with reference to the seventh section of the Edmunds bill.

So far as the amendment which I have offered is concerned, where I propose to insert the word "male" before "voters," of course there can be no question as to the power, as I think there can be no question as to the propriety of the amendment; but it is my purpose to have the Congress of the United States to the fullest extent declare its convictions that this innovation, this demoralizing proposition, as I conceive it to be, this attempt to change what have been the foundations of this Government ever since its establishment, both as to the State governments and as to the Federal Government, governments founded upon manhood suffrage and manhood suffrage alone—I say it is the purpose of the last amendment which I shall propose to declare that it shall be a condition of the State being proclaimed to be admitted into the Union that her State constitution shall limit the right of suffrage to male citizens.

Of course I understand that this is not a compact. There can be no compact between a Territory and the Government of the United States. I understand that if even that provision were embodied in the constitution of the State for the purpose of being admitted into the Union, the moment that fact occurs the sovereign power of the people of that State would enable them to confer, if they chose, female suffrage. But what I say is that to the extent of the power of Congress we have a right to regulate the political status of the people inhabiting a Territory.

Look at the Territory of Utah. Why has not that Territory been admitted into the Union of the States? It is the oldest Territory in the United States, with a population of 144,000 people, with 84,500 square miles. That Territory was acquired under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo with Mexico, and the ninth article of that treaty contains in identical terms the provision which is contained in the treaty with France ceding to the United States the Territory of Louisiana. It provides:

The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the mean time shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

There is the oldest Territory in the United States, organized in 1850. The people of that Territory have secured to them the same guarantees which are provided for in every treaty under which we have acquired territory; and yet I ask why has that Territory been held in a state of colonial dependency to this day? We all know the reason. I approve the reason. It is simply because there is an institution existing in that Territory which we do not intend to indorse, or to approve, or to encourage.

The Congress of the United States is not compelled to admit any Territory into the Union. The Constitution provides that Congress may admit new States. But I have heard repeatedly in this Chamber the argument urged with great force with reference to the admission of Territories as States, that the right of admission was guaranteed by the treaties under which the territory was acquired by the United States. I say if we have the right, as we have the right and exercise it, of refusing to admit the Territory of Utah because there exists in that Territory the institution of polygamy, because we believe that that institution is immoral, that it is of evil example, and that it should not receive legislative recognition, a fortiori if we have a right to exclude and do exclude that Territory we have the right to impose a condition upon the admission of a Territory if we find an institution, such as I believe female suffrage to be, which is offensive and demoralizing and destructive of the institution of the family, and to which I will under no circumstances, believing as I do, give my indorsement or my approval.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, that I have offered the amendments which I have submitted.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, some of our friends on the other side of the Chamber seem to have a permanent and incurable incapacity for dealing with any public question without getting themselves into a position of antagonism with the principles which lie at the foundation of republican liberty as guaranteed, protected, established in the Constitution of the United States. I take it the fundamental principle upon which our complicated and delicate mechanism is constructed is to be found affirmed in that provision of the Constitution which the Senator from Louisiana now assails, which is that—

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors of each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

In other words, the power of electing and the privilege of being elected by the people of the States that make up this Union is to be defined according to the principles and qualifications which the people of each State establish. It is the essential and fundamental principle of State rights that each State, sovereign in that important and essential quality, is to determine by its own constitution the right of election and the capacity to be elected for public office, except so far as certain requisites of age and citizenship and residence are attached to the right to be elected to a national office.

That goes through the whole Constitution; and for the first time, I believe, in the history of the United States since the Constitution was inaugurated in 1789, the Senator from Louisiana, belonging to a party and representing a people and a community which have been in the habit of invoking this doctrine of State rights for the protection of slavery, for the protection of wrong-doing, for the keeping off the national authority, the national power when invoked to advocate human freedom, the right to vote, the right to free speech, and the right to free living, now asks Congress to assert the right to prescribe as a fundamental condition of admission of a Territory to the Union that its electoral rights shall be regulated not by itself, not by its own people, but by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. EUSTIS. For the purpose of admission. I recognize the right of the State to do as it pleases after it is admitted.

Mr. HOAR. Well, for the purpose of admission the Senator insists that it shall be put into the fundamental constitution of the State that the electoral right shall be such not as the people of the State but as he or as the Congress of the United States shall prescribe. It seems to me that no doctrine more monstrous was ever proposed within these walls or within the walls of any constitutional legislative chamber in a free country than that which lies at the foundation of the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana.

I wish to read one passage from Alexander Hamilton, who assumes in the Federalist the proposition which I have stated and makes it so clear that he does not need to amplify it or extend it:

> The first view to be taken of this part of the Government relates to the qualification of the electors and the elected.
>
> Those of the former are to be the same with those of the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. The definition of the right of suffrage is very justly regarded as a fundamental article of republican government. It was incumbent on the convention, therefore, to define and establish this right in the Constitution. To have left it open for the occasional regulation of the Congress would have been improper for the reason just mentioned. To have submitted it to the legislative discretion of the States would have been improper for the same reason; and for the additional reason that it would have rendered too dependent on the State government that branch of the Federal Government which ought to be dependent upon the people alone To have reduced the different qualifications in the different States to one uniform rule would probably have been as dissatisfactory to some of the States as it would have been difficult to the convention. The provision made by the convention appears, therefore, to be the best that lay within their option. It must be satisfactory to every State, because it is conformable to the standard already established or which may be established by the State itself. It will be safe to the United States, because, being fixed by the State constitutions, it is not alterable by the State governments, and it can not be feared that the people of the State will alter this part of their constitution in such a manner as to abridge the rights secured to them by the Federal Constitution.

The Senator from Louisiana seeks to find a precedent for the proposition he has made in the action of this body at the present session in the bill relating to the government of Utah. I was opposed to the seventh section of the Utah bill for the reason which I stated, the reason which the honorable Senator from Louisiana has quoted, but the principle upon which the Senator from Vermont, who draughted and reported the bill, rested it was not that it was just or proper that the Congress of the United States should prescribe a particular condition for the people of the Territory of Utah when engaged in forming a constitution which was to be the basis of their admission into the Union as a State. I think the Senator from Vermont disclaimed absolutely in his discussion of that subject the intention to establish any such principle. We found in the Territory of Utah a crime not only existing in despite of the public sentiment of the Territory itself, as other crimes exist in various regions, but we found practically the existing authority, the legislation, the administration of justice so far as the jurors entered into it, all dominated and controlled by an institution which we regarded, as the Senator from Louisiana says he does, as an offense against the very foundations of Christian society.

The Senator from Vermont thought the women of that Territory were so in fact within the control of the Mormons, whether themselves living in polygamy or not, that practically there was no free voting on the part of those women in the Territory, and that their votes were dominated and controlled by a hierarchy and not by their own will or their own inclination or their own choice. Therefore the Senator from Vermont, in which I differed with him, thought the only practical method of remedying that evil was to deprive for the time being the women of Utah of the privilege of voting.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator whether he considers that the imputation which he suggests would rest against Gentile women in Utah.

Mr. HOAR. I do not.

Mr. EUSTIS. Why were they not excepted from the seventh section?

Mr. HOAR. They should have been.

Mr. EUSTIS. They were not.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont argued to the Senate stating a position which I did not share. I am stating an argument as perfectly as I can to which I did not assent. I thought the proposition of my honorable friend from Vermont was inconsistent with our constitutional doctrine, and that the line should be drawn between the Gentile and the Morman woman, but the Senator from Vermont found that impracticable as he thought, and the Senator from Louisiana agreed with him.

The question here is not of the logic of the honorable Senator from Vermont or of the logic which persuaded the very large majority of the Senate to vote as they did. It is not a question of its consistency either with itself or with sound constitutional principles. All I have to say is that the Senate did not proceed in passing the Utah bill, according to the reasoning of the principal advocate of that bill, on the doctrine which the Senator from Louisiana now seeks to apply. The Senate said there was no question of the admission of Utah as a State, there was no question of qualification for an honest, fair, full, free vote for a convention establishing a constitution; it was a question of regulating what is admittedly within the power of Congress, regulating the ordinary daily or yearly political life of an existing Territory in a Territorial condition. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee said it is impracticable to have justice done to the Gentile; it is impracticable to break up this vile polygamous system violating the very fundamental condition of all Christian society, of all civilized human society, and leave the electoral privilege in the possession of persons who for the time being are controlled, not by themselves, but by others, by the chief of these polygamists.

I did not understand the Senator from Vermont to commit himself, certainly he could have committed nobody else, to the proposition that if a Territory or a State where every vote was free and fair, where its institutions were pure and lawful and not criminal, chose to present itself for admission to the Union, recognizing the power of women to vote on equal terms with men, he would himself resist such an application or would refuse to leave it, however much he might differ with them, to the discretion of the people immediately concerned.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Louisiana, because I am simply inquiring for information, at what time female suffrage was established in Washington Territory?

Mr. EUSTIS. In 1883.

Mr. BUTLER. Then it must have been done with the approbation of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No. Congress gave them leave to regulate the suffrage matter, but reserved the right to disapprove.

Mr. BUTLER. It was done by a practical acquiescence on the part of Congress in the action of the Territorial Legislature.

Mr. HOAR. Congress has never interfered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a law until Congress changes it, like any other law of a Territory.

Mr. PLATT. That is precisely the situation.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope I did not interfere with the Senator from Massachusetts, for I wished the information.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to enter into an argument on the question of woman suffrage at this time in the afternoon or on this inopportune and inappropriate occasion. I say that the people of the Territory of Washington, as recognized according to our American system, a system which lies at the foundation, and according to the one important fundamental principle which settles the whole relation of the State and the nation, have a right to determine the qualification for electors for themselves. So if they choose to permit youths to vote at eighteen or to postpone the time of voting to thirty, if they choose to require a property qualification, if they choose to require a qualification of sex or to make no distinction of sex, it is their affair. This Union which is to spread some time over the entire American continent, is expected to be made up, and will be necessarily made up, of States whose local institutions will widely differ in this respect; and whatever may be my opinion or whatever may be the opinion of any Senator upon the expediency of recognizing the right of full citizenship of the mothers who educate the voters and from whom their moral and intellectual qualities chiefly come, of the teachers who more than nine to one constitute the educators in the public schools of this country of their youth, to share in this important function and franchise, that is a question not to be determined here but to be determined there.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he considers this a harsh condition on the admission of the State of Washington, that the constitution of that State should, upon this question, conform to the constitution of every State in the Union and to the theory of the Federal Government?

Mr. HOAR. I consider it a harsh condition that when you are recognizing in the Territory of Washington a fitness for the most exalted act of sovereignty, the establishment of its own institutions and taking its part in the family of American States, you should undertake to subject the will of that people to yours. I will ask the Senator in his turn does he deny the postulate that I have stated; does he claim that it is in accordance with the principles of American constitutional law that any State in this Union should have its will subjected to Congress in a matter not of crime, not of human rights, but purely of expediency? We may interpose to say that we will not associate with political communities who deny rights; but we never have said yet that we will refuse our association to any political community because it establishes a particular rule of suffrage.

Mr. EUSTIS. I do not pretend to liken cases, but I wish to use one as an illustration. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there were an enabling act pending in this body for the admission of Utah as a State, whether he would not consider it proper legislation for the Senate of the United States to impose a condition on Utah in the admission of that State that polygamy should be extirpated?

Mr. HOAR. That is a crime. I will answer the Senator with great frankness and fullness, that I should not consider the necessity of introducing any foreign authority to compel the extirpation of polygamy in that Territory; and the fact that it was not ready for its suppression of itself I should regard as an ample reason for refusing to admit it into association with this partnership. When a Territory presents itself with a crime against the family so permeating its whole social life that some external authority must be invoked to suppress it, that Territory is not in a condition for admission.

Mr. EUSTIS. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to state that Congress has no power to impose a condition on the admission of a State?

Mr. HOAR. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. EUSTIS. Then it is merely a question of policy.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the discussion of the propriety of woman suffrage is not involved in the passage of this bill. The committee in reporting this bill and that provision in it which submits the election of members of a constitutional convention to the qualified electors of the State by no means intended to express or declare its opinion or the opinion of its members upon the wisdom or propriety of woman suffrage in any Territory or State. I do not think it is involved here. I think the only thing which is involved here is a question of civil liberty; that the people of a Territory, having a right to make laws and to prescribe the qualifications of electors, may make those laws just as much as a State may make them; and that Congress, although it has the right to pass upon them, if it has not passed upon them, has no right to say when we admit the Territory as a State that any different rule or qualification shall be prescribed than that which has been already adopted by the people of the Territory who had the right under the organic act, under all the precedents, and under the Constitution itself, I imagine, to make those laws.

It is simply allowing the people of the Territory of Washington to manage their own civil affairs in their own way. That is what every State claims; and I do not see that we can act upon this question of suffrage here and insist upon it, as we have notice it is to be insisted upon, that the State can not come in unless it puts into the constitution a provision that it will never admit the qualification of women to vote. I do not see that we can do that. I do not see that this question is drawn in here. I am sorry the discussion has arisen; I am sorry that poor Washington Territory has such a hard time when it asks admission into the Union. It seems to me it is outside theory, and we can let it all rest as we let the matter rest in the States. In the State of Massachusetts I think women can vote on some questions, on school matters, and in Minnesota and in very many of the States of the Union the principle has been recognized so far.

Mr. DOLPH. In Oregon too.

Mr. PLATT. And in Oregon, that they are authorized to vote on school matters. It is a partial recognition of the doctrine of woman suffrage. Are we to say that those States are any the less sovereign States of the Union? Are we to say that they have done anything which is inconsistent with the principles of free government? Nor have these people in Washington Territory when they have gone further, as they have in Wyoming, and said that in the domestic civil affairs of the Territory of Washington women may vote, done anything inconsistent with free government, republican government. And if we stand on the idea of civil liberty it seems to me that unless a Territory does something which is inconsistent with the principles of free government and republican government, we can not for that cause exclude it. That was the view of the committee. It seems to me the question of woman suffrage is not involved here in principle.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, of course anybody can see that this amendment, though not designed for that purpose, is calculated and will have the effect probably to destroy this bill. I do not impute any such idea to my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. EUSTIS. I wish to state that that is not the purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose not; and that merely illustrates what I was saying. I do not impute it to the Senator, but the point is to destroy this bill and prevent the people of Washington Territory—which includes men, women, and children, everybody, having the requisite population, having the requisite wealth, having the requisite prosperity, having the requisite social autonomy of every kind—from coming into this Union as a State.

Now, what is the point? By the law as it now stands and has stood in every Territory that has been established in this Union, I think I am safe in saying, it has been provided that the people of the Territory themselves after their first organization were to determine who should be the people entitled to the elective franchise. That is the law of Congress as applied to every Territory, I believe. Now, then, the people of the Territory of Washington have chosen, in regulating their own affairs under the authority of an express law of Congress, to provide that females as well as males, having other similar qualifications, should be entitled to vote. These ladies, therefore, in Washington Territory comprise a part at this moment under the authority of Congress of the political autonomy of that Territory. You are about to submit to the political autonomy of that Territory a question. Should you not submit it to whatever is that political autonomy without making changes or distinctions? Nobody can deny that; and yet my distinguished friend from Louisiana says that we have passed a Utah bill, and in that we have provided that the women of Utah shall not hereafter be entitled to exercise political power, and that we are therefore committed to the idea that no woman in any Territory or in any place where Congress has jurisdiction shall be entitled to exercise that function. I deny the proposition altogether.

Nobody knows better than the Senator from Louisiana, whose intelligence and scope and statesmanship I so gladly recognize, that there can be no parallel or coincidence in the situation of affairs in Utah and in any other Territory in the United States or in any State. The Territory of Utah from its beginning has gradually grown up to be a mere political hierarchy that depends upon the will substantially of one man, an autocrat, and that devoted to the promulgation of polygamous practices. When we come to deal with Utah, not as a Territory to be admitted into the United States as one of its members, but dealing with its condition as a Territory, and in order to relieve it from this enormous crime, which, as my friend from Massachusetts has stated, is against all social and religious notions of every civilized government on the face of the globe, we provided that women should not vote in Utah for the time being. It was asked by my friend from Louisiana why did you not except the Gentile women who are not under this slavery? For the simple reason that when you undertook to make such an exception you have got to provide merely for questions of opinion, and you have got to draw a line that under the theory of this Government and under the theory of the Constitution you can not draw, and that is, that the right to vote is to be made dependent upon the opinion, political, religious, or moral, or whatever of the person who is to vote. So then if we relieve these slaves under the control of the Mormon Church there from the obligation to vote as their masters said, we must at the same time leave out their fellow-women who did not think as they did at all, because otherwise you must draw the line upon the question of opinion and belief. And I am glad to say that among all the women of the United States, a great many of whom have written me with objurgations, there has never come to me from Utah from any of the Gentile women, as they are called, any complaint of the fact that they were among the disfranchised, but on the contrary many commendations of the circumstance that we had passed the bill as we did.

The case of Utah is unique; it is separate; it can have no parallel or relation to any other question that can engage the attention of the Congress of the United States; and therefore had I been, like my friend from Massachusetts, the most intense advocate of woman suffrage everywhere, I should have felt that I was doing my best for true woman suffrage everywhere and all the time as my Gentile fellow-citizen women of Utah feel as I believe and am advised—I should have felt that I was doing the best thing for true womanhood and true woman suffrage everywhere in doing exactly what I did in voting for the bill that passed the Senate.

That is where it stands. Wherefore, then, does the Senator from Louisiana call in question this matter of Utah? It has nothing to do with the question before us. Here is the simple case of the well-regulated Territory of Washington, where a social system exists like that of Louisiana and Vermont, where everybody is free, and where, under the authority of Congress, the people of the Territory of Washington have provided that women may vote; and I am perfectly willing to say that I am glad they have it if they like it, because it is their affair, just as it is in every State, and I hope it works well, and as far as I know it does.

That is their condition under the law now. Every woman, like every man under similar conditions in Washington Territory, is by authority of existing law of Congress entitled to vote. Now, we propose to submit the question of admission to the voters, the political power of that Territory as we have created it. In comes the Senator from Louisiana and says a part of that political power shall be disfranchised for the purpose of this vote, and we shall say that only males can vote and that females shall not. We might just as well in logic and philosophy say that only females shall vote, because they are all voters there under similar conditions, and I should rather be inclined to think that it would be far better as far as these Territories go, if we were to make this distinction, if we should say that only females shall vote there. But then I can see his point about it—what would become of the Democratic party in that case? There would not be anything left of it at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the case that we have here is this: we take up the autonomy of this Territory that we have authorized and established—Christian, upright, progressive, social, everything that makes a good society—and simply say to it as it is, "You may vote on this question." I am sorry my friend has offered this amendment, although in another sense I am rather glad of it, because I shall be glad to divide the Senate on the question of whether any Senator on this floor is willing to say that in the regular and ordinary condition of things as it is in Washington Congress is to intervene and say we will only allow a part of the people of that Territory that we have hitherto authorized to exercise political power there to vote upon the question of coming into the Union.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am unalterably opposed to female suffrage——

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me, if there is no objection on the other side, to move that the Senate adjourn?

Mr. BROWN. I prefer to go on.

Several SENATORS. No adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am unalterably opposed to female suffrage. If that question should be submitted to the people of my own State I should not only vote against it, but do all I could to prevent its success. I think it is wrong. I think it will never operate well in practice, and I fear that much mischief will result from the establishment of it.

But while I entertain these views on that subject, I am unalterably in favor of local self-government in the States. I believe whenever there is a proper occasion that each State should exercise any or all its reserved powers under the Constitution, and that no other power has a right to interfere with its exercise of its constitutional functions.

I am aware that there is a difference in that regard between a State and a Territory. The circumstances being different, the rule does not apply in favor of a Territory to as full an extent as in favor of a State; but when Congress has established a Territory and authorized the voters of the Territory to elect a Legislature, and that Legislature elected by male voters only has thought proper to give its sanction to female suffrage and to establish it in the Territory, treating that as the act of the people, I will not vote to disturb it.

Therefore I can not vote under the circumstances, and with the views I entertain, for either of the three amendments proposed by my friend from Louisiana. I will not vote to limit the rights of the Territories to establish female suffrage. I prefer to leave that to the male voters; and when they establish female suffrage or refuse to establish it I shall abide by their action. I will not vote to compel them to put it in the fundamental law of the State or to strike it out. I would not compel the Territory of Washington to do either before she shall be admitted as a State. I would leave that to the voters of the Territory prior to admission and to the State after the admission.

I wanted to make these remarks to give the reasons for the vote I shall cast on these various amendments. I will not support them. Female suffrage is a question for local self-government to deal with. I am willing to leave the question to the decision of the male voters of each State and Territory. When they have decided it for themselves, I will not vote to reverse the decision however much I may disapprove the practice.

Mr. CALL. I now make the motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLATT. May I say a word? I wish the Senator from Florida——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Senator from Florida would withdraw that motion. I think we can get a vote on this amendment and I do not know but that we can pass the bill if we stay a little while longer. I am very anxious to have the discussion brought to a conclusion. I doubt whether any one wishes to speak further on this amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me as a friend of this bill to make a suggestion?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I really and candidly think we can facilitate matters by an adjournment now. The amendments of the Senator from Louisiana raise very serious questions. I confess I have had some embarrassment myself. My present inclination is to vote against all of them. I think when the vote is taken I shall vote against them and vote for the bill; but there is evidently a disinclination to vote now on the part of very many Senators. I do not know that I shall have anything further to say on the subject. As a friend of the bill I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that we should make time by an adjournment now.

Mr. PLATT. Can we not have an agreement about when a vote will be taken to-morrow if we adjourn now?

Mr. BUTLER. I am not antagonizing the bill. I am quite willing to agree to an arrangement.

Mr. FRYE. I have unanimous consent for to-morrow morning, and I propose to avail myself of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I do not know how he would vote. I should like to vote "yea" if I were at liberty.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who is absent ill. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Beck,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Gorman,	Payne,	Walthall,
Butler,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Call,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Jackson,	Sawyer,
Colquitt,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Eustis,	Mahone,	Teller,

NAYS—13.

Blair,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sabin.
Conger,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Platt,
Dolph,	Logan,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—37.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Allison,	Fair,	Kenna,	Sewell,
Berry,	George,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Hale,	Miller,	Vance,
Camden,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Van Wyck,
Cameron,	Harris,	Morrill,	Vest.
Chace,	Hawley,	Palmer,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pike,
Cullom,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 8, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the prayer of the Chaplain this morning be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is apprised that it was not reported by the Official Reporters.

DESTRUCTION OF MUTILATED UNITED STATES SECURITIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing draught and recommending the passage of a bill authorizing the destruction of United States securities mutilated in process of printing or remaining in excess of amount required; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER MOFFITT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of order and findings of fact of that court in the case of Alexander Moffitt against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ELIZABETH GRIGGS, ADMINISTRATRIX.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of order and findings of fact of that court in the case of Elizabeth Griggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy, against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SUBSTITUTE EMPLOYÉS, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, stating, in response to a resolution of the House, that no substitutes are employed in that Department; which was referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRAGG, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BUCK, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, made on yesterday evening, this entire day, after the reading of the Journal, is set apart for the consideration of the bill reported adversely from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5690) for the free coinage of silver, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to know whether it is the intention of the gentleman having charge of this bill to call the previous question at 5 o'clock this evening, and, if so, whether there will be any opportunity to offer amendments.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the previous question is to be considered as ordered at half past 5 o'clock to-day.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That, of course, would cut off amendments. I desire to ask whether the gentleman in charge of the bill will not permit us, say, at 4 o'clock, to offer amendments to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to any change in the previous order of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let it stand just as it is.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is it not within the power of the gentleman having charge of this bill to grant this right on his own motion?

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to any change in the previous order of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let the bill stand on its own bottom and take its chances.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

FREE COINAGE OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER. The bill the title of which has just been read by the Clerk is now in order for consideration and debate, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] is recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield half of the time allotted to me to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. DIBBLE addressed the House. [See Appendix.].

Mr. SCOTT. I yield the thirty minutes remaining of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I believe a plentiful supply of good sound currency is essential to the prosperity of a people, and I am a bimetallist. I believe in silver and gold—not silver alone or gold alone—but in gold and silver. This is old-fashioned Democratic doctrine, and I am a Democrat. I believe, too, we ought as Democrats to support a Democratic administration. No President ever had a higher conception of duty than Grover Cleveland. None ever followed more strictly his conscientious convictions. He is the first Democratic President for twenty-four years. In him is the hope, in the success of his administration rests the only hope, of Democratic ascendency.

Republicans recognize this, and they have assailed him again and again. Their assaults have failed, but is it so with ours?

The President can stand against the enemies of the Democracy, but can his administration maintain itself against those who should be his friends?

It is digressing from the topic I started to discuss, but I can not resist following this thought a little further. Gentlemen, it seems to me if we break down Cleveland's administration we destroy all hope of Democratic success in the immediate future. We may not be able to agree with the President in everything, but no party can survive whose individual members are unwilling to make any concessions for the sake of harmony.

Mr. Chairman, I give these as my opinions only. I may, of course, be wrong; for there are some of my friends here who seem to think the pathway to future victory for the Democracy lies in destroying the present administration. These gentlemen, of course, feel very confident they are right. But when they witness the applause with which the Republican side of this House greets every attack by a Democratic speaker on the administration, it seems to me they would do well to pause and reflect. Thomas Jefferson once wrote to Mr. Giles about a measure he as President had recommended, and which proved unexpectedly acceptable to the Whigs in the Senate, something like this. I quote from memory: "I felt sure of my ground when I sent in that message, but now that I find it meets with such hearty approbation from my enemies, I begin to doubt." And he asked Mr. Giles to look into the matter carefully.

So, when I see nearly every seat on the other side of this Chamber empty because the occupants have all come over on this side to crowd around one whom I highly esteem as a personal friend and applaud him, I feel like asking him to stop and consider whether he is not, without intending to do it, fighting the battle of the Republicans. They certainly think so.

Among other things, the President is attacked for his course on this silver question. His views are in accord, as I believe, with those of New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, without whose aid we would not have won the victory in 1884 and can not hope for success in the future. In my opinion, Southern Democrats should never forget the elections of 1885. Foraker and LOGAN made a campaign in Ohio full of bitterness toward the South. They won the election on the sectional issue. Flushed with success, they went to New York, there to repeat their speeches filled with threats against the people of the South. The voters of that great State refused to listen. LOGAN and Foraker were called out of the canvass, but it was too late. They had only helped to elect the Democratic candidate.

Southern Democrats, when you are choosing your political allies, is it good policy to denounce and turn your back on New York and go to Ohio?

And now as to Mr. Cleveland's silver views. We may differ from him, but what right have we to arraign him? What opinion has he expressed that was not his when we chose him for our candidate and elected him our President?

It is to me almost inconceivable, Mr. Chairman, how Democrats can refuse to treat with decent respect and at least examine fairly the views held by their chosen leader before he was placed at the head of their party. I can not understand it except upon the idea that nearly all men become extremists on money. No subject before this House demands more of severe logic, and yet none arouses so much temper as this silver question.

The President believes that we ought to continue in existence all the silver we have, and that we should, if possible, keep it at par with gold. To that extent we all agree with him.

He believes we ought, if possible, to obtain the co-operation of other nations in the work of rehabilitating silver. In that proposition, too, there is a general concurrence. One of the first acts of his administration was to send abroad an embassador or agent of the Government to endeavor to secure this co-operation. If I were disposed to criticise I should say that he committed a mistake in the selection of his agent. Manton Marble is a man of undoubted ability and great purity of character, but he is not known as a decided friend of silver. Allen G. Thurman would have inspired more confidence. But the President also commissioned Mr. Walker, our consul-general at Paris, to collect information for us upon the subject and attend a monetary conference, and he is an avowed silver advocate. That mission failed, and we are now face to face with the silver problem.

Can this Government solve it without the aid of other nations? Shall we repeal the Bland act that provides for the coinage of not less than two nor more than four millions of silver dollars per month? Shall we open our mints to the unlimited coinage of silver? These are the questions now before the House.

Silver and gold have been the money of the world from time immemorial. But silver has been stricken down by adverse legislation, and now the gold value of the bullion in a silver dollar is less than 80 cents. I most earnestly favor the rehabilitation of silver. But I have been reluctantly driven to the conclusion that this Government is not of itself equal to that great task; that sixty millions of people can not control the relations between two metals used in different proportions and in varying quantities by nine hundred millions of people; and that any attempt on our part to do this by passing the pending bill, to open our mints to all the silver in the world, will necessarily result in the inflow of silver, the cheaper metal, and the outflow of gold, which so many nations are struggling for, until we shall have nothing left but silver. In the earlier stages of civilization when there was but little intercourse between different peoples it was largely within the power of a nation to adjust for itself the relation between the two metals. I believe Abraham did it when he was looking after his people and his flocks in Canaan.

But with the advance of civilization this has become more and more an international question. Now, when prices are regulated by the click of the telegraph, a movement of 1 per cent. in the price of bullion and stocks in Liverpool is responded to instantly by the markets in New York. Bearing this present fact in mind, let us glance briefly at our past moneary history. It is beyond all doubt that the relations between gold and silver in the United States even in the days when all commerce was carried on by sailing ships were affected by the ratio established by law in Europe.

Under Alexander Hamilton's advice this Government began with the ratio of 15 ounces of silver to 1 of gold. The ratio in the dominant commercial nations of Europe was at the time 15½ to 1. The consequence was, gold, which was valued cheaper here than in Europe, left us and went there. In 1834, in order to invite gold back, Thomas H. Benton, that old-fashioned Democrat, who believed in both silver and gold, secured the passage of a law fixing the ratio at 16 to 1. This made silver too low, just as before it had been too high, and thereafter silver sought the European market and gold came to America.

Silver was the more plentiful in the United States before the Benton law. Gold was more plentiful afterward. These facts are indisputable, and their import can not be mistaken. The inference is that even in the days of the sailing ship the ratio between silver and gold was one to be regulated by international agreement. The nations of the earth had not at that time discussed and did not thoroughly understand the principle underlying the ratio of metals to each other. They seemed to suppose there was some real relation between the values of silver and gold, and in seeking by their legislation to arrive at this value they in effect established an international agreement; imperfect, because the ratios established were only proximately the same. In France the ratio was for a time 14.50, afterward 15.50; in Spain and Portugal 16, in England 15.21.

For centuries we find in nation after nation this ratio between the two metals ranging at from 14 to 16. France, a great commercial nation, by keeping her mints open to both metals and making them interexchangeable at 15½ to 1, assisted as she was by the imperfect agreement among other nations, according to which the ratio could nowhere go higher than 16 or lower than 14, succeeded for seventy-five years in preserving a practical equilibrium between the two at her established ratio.

But in 1873 Germany began the effort to replace her silver with gold.